The development of ship-bottom paints by Naval Constructor Williams in the Bureau of Construction and Repair has saved the Government thousands of dollars.

The art of arc welding for ship repair and construction was advanced enormously by the work of Capt. D. W. Knox, United States Navy, and Captain Jessop, United States Navy, in their development of this art in connection wtih the reconditioning of ex-German ships during the late war.

The navy yards, Norfolk and Washington, have made enormous strides in the development and use of aluminum alloys as applied to ship construction.

Naval Constructors Rossell and Barker are responsible for a device for the automatic separation of oil and water by gravity to prevent the oil pollution of coastal waters.

Two other naval officers, Captains Fullinwider and Knox, developed the type of mine which made possible the North Sea mine barrage during the late war.

The patent anchor heretofore mentioned, which was invented by Captain Dunn, is now in use on the majority of the ships in the Navy.

Commander A. S. Disart, United States Navy, has developed an electric magnetic shutter on an electric welder's eye shield, which is a safety device for the use of electric welders and will undoubtedly have a very wide application.

The underwater cutting torch was developed at the navy yard, New York, by Commander Elsberg, of the Construction Corps.

Personnel of the laboratory at the navy yard, New York, have developed an eye protector for goggles, for welder's goggles and for aviator's goggles; all of which will have a very wide use.

The Bureau of Ordnance, as have other bureaus, has developed a great many appliances in recent years which it is not desired to detail in this memorandum on account of their confidential nature.

Some of the accomplishments of the Navy in the development of radio, both in design and operation, follow:

The Navy pushed the development of radio direction finding since 1911. Records show that experiments with Bellini Tosi apparatus on battleships were conducted in 1911 and that two directional finding stations were constructed in 1914 for ships use. That the construction of direction finding loops was the result of incentive created by the Navy.

The Navy installed 16 radio-compass sets on battleships in 1916. The Navy developed the radio compass for aircraft, and overcame the receiving difficulties in aircraft in 1916.

The Navy developed the aircraft radiophone in 1916.

The variable-speed wind-driven aircraft generator was the result of the Navy's efforts about 1917.

The first regularly established radiophone broadcast station was established in Anacostia, D. C., in 1919. For two years technical bulletins were broadcast from this station to amateurs. Its distant control was also the first.

The Navy built the first substantial high-power radio traffic station at Arlington in 1908–1911. This was followed by the largest chain of high-power radio stations ever built up until 1920. These stations were as follows: Canal Zone, San Diego, Honolulu, Samoa, Guam, Cavite, and were 30–500 kilowatts. They were built in 1913–1917. The Navy was the first to install continuous-wave apparatus at high-power stations. It will be noted that the Marconi Co. installed spark sets in high-power stations even after the Navy had installed continuous-wave apparatus.

The Navy was the first to push the development of aircraft radio sets. Records show that most of the initiative for this work, particularly for long-distance radio on aircraft, was the result of the Navy's efforts in 1916.

Most of the development of receiving and transmitting tubes was the result of the Navy's pressure upon the inventors. In 1919 the Navy was forced to purchase nearly a half million dollars' worth of tube radio transmitters in order to keep up the incentive. This expenditure resulted in the construction of the apparatus which brought about radio broadcasting.

Most of the high-tension insulation development was a result of the Navy's specifications.

In 1920–21 the Navy assisted in considerable measure in bringing about an exchange of patent licenses which made the sale of broadcast receiving tubes possible.

The Navy was directly responsible in 1919–20 for creating the conditions which transferred the ownership of radio from foreign to American citizens.

The Navy developed rebroadcasting.

The Navy instituted the idea of and built the first radiobeacon stations, the first being constructed by the navy yard, New York, about 1915 and installed on the Ambrose Channel lightship, and the second was installed at Point Judith, R. I. One was telegraph, the second telephone. Both were failures, due to lack of interest by shipping.

The radio pilot experimental cables were developed and laid by the Navy in New London (during the war) and in Ambrose Channel in 1919–20. Experiments with these were conducted by ships and aircraft.

The Navy duplexed its principal shore radio stations in 1914–15 in order that these could communicate with ships and with each other simultaneously.

Kite antennae for use with aircraft from the surface of the sea were first adopted in this country by the Navy in 1921.

Most of the early tests of radio apparatus, including radio telephone, were carried out through the use of Navy facilities, the first shipboard radio telephony tests being conducted in 1907–8 during the world cruise.

A considerable portion of the experiments with loop and buried antennae was done either by or in cooperation with the Navy. This applied to both transmitting and reception tests.

All the Shipping Board ships were equipped with Navy apparatus during the war. Also the Navy has supplied nearly all the apparatus to the light vessels, Army transports, air mail stations, Coast Guard vessels since the beginning of radio.

The Navy originated and developed the chain of radio-compass stations along the coast for tracking enemy vessels. These are of great additional use to the merchant marine, as shown by the thousands of ships which take bearings from them each month.

It was upon the recommendation of the Navy that the present interdepartmental radio committee was created.

In the recent International Radio Conference the Navy played a prominent part in all the deliberations of that body, being represented by one delegate and seven technical advisors. Among these advisors a young officer, Lieut. Commander T. A. M. Craven, Unite States Navy, was one of the most outstanding figures in the conference, due to his technical and practical knowledge of radio.

The Navy has played a prominent part in previous international radio conferences.

The following is an extract from the report of the twelfth session of the International Radio Conference, dated November 16, 1927:

"Finally, I am certain of speaking for all, mentioning especially the minutes of the technical committee, Commander T. M. Craven, who has been, for all questions relating to the allocation of lengths of waves, the most expert technician, the most active liaison agent, as well as the most able lawyer that could be desired for exposing the various elements of the problems and giving value to the solutions, which tend to give as much satisfaction as possible to all the interests here represented. Let us thank him warmly."

Under aviation, the work of Commander Hunsaker, United States Navy, in the field of aerodynamics has received world-wide recognition. He was ably assisted by other members of the aeronautic organization. Some of the developments by purely naval personnel are the catapults, turntable air type, and powder fixed and turntable catapults. The development of floats and hulls has been continuous since 1912 at the model basin. The "NC" lines, developed by a naval officer, are among the most efficient yet tested. The general form of the Vee bottom streamline floats adopted early in the United States Navy are very generally adopted throughout the world. The development and fabrication of metal floats and structures is largely based on the initial experiments at the Naval Aircraft Factory.

The development of mental structures for the hull, wings, and tail controls has been carried on at the Naval Aircraft Factory by naval officers.

Aircraft radio developments, begun about 1911, have been carried out by naval officers.

The wind tunnel at the navy yard, Washington, D. C., was started in August, 1912, and was among the first, if not the first, wind tunnel constructed in the world.

The present radio air-cooled engine of to-day owes its existence to the development, cooperation, and final support given it by the Navy Department through a long period of years. Commander E. E. Wilson, United States Navy, and Lieut. Commander Bruce B. Leighton, United States Navy, were largely responsible for this.

The development of aircraft engine starters of the inertia type has been conducted under the cognizance of the Bureau of Aeronautics, and the original idea was conceived in the engine section of that bureau.

The substitute for goldbeater's skin, gas-retaining fabric is now approaching successful conclusion, and was planned and directed by naval officers.

Water recovery apparatus for airships was developed and initiated by naval officers.

Tank cars for helium transportation were conceived and developed by naval officers.

The floating mooring mast for airships was conceived and developed by naval officers.

The Byrd bubble sextant, the David bubble sextant, the Pierce camera sextant, the Weems variable rate clock, the Rodgers post-type drift sight, the Rounds catapult chronograph, Warburg's aircraft compass, and Bennett's running light screen have all been developed by naval officers.

The design of steel propellers for aircraft is largly based on the developments made by the propeller section of the Bureau of Aeronautics, and most of the patents now held by the Standard Steel Propeller Co., of Pittsburgh, Pa., are based on propeller-blade designs made in the Bureau of Aeronautics by the officers in charge of the propeller section.

Patents in aeronautical appliances have been granted as follows:

To Capt. H. C. Richardson, United States Navy, hydrovane boat, transmission, mechanism, float, target ring, landing gear for seaplanes.

To Lieut. Clem H. Congdon, United States Navy, divided float.

To Lieut. Wallace M. Dillon, United States Navy, portable gasoline strainer.

To Lieut. Samuel B. McMurran, bomb release.

To Lieut. Commander E. F. Stone, United States Navy, catapult (powder type).

To Capt. H. C. Mustin, United States Navy, landing brake.

To Admiral Bradley A. Fiske, United States Navy, torpedo plane.

Some recent patents for which application has been made, or for which patents have been issued, are as follows:

Lieut. Leo P. Delsasso, United States Navy, sonic depth finder.

Lieut. W. M. Fellers, United States Navy, improvements to catapults.

Lieut. C. C. Champion, United States Navy, supercharger and engine cycle for airplane engines.

Lieut. E. H. Kincaid, United States Navy, directional receiving apparatus for locating storm centers.

Machinist Charles N. Koch, United States Navy, internal-combustion turbine engine.

I am inclosing herewith a copy of a publication entitled "The United States Navy as an industrial asset." This pamphlet contains the story of a great many developments, classified by headings, that have been made by the Navy in the last few years.

It should be recognized that the paramount work of naval officers is in operating the material which is furnished to them, to be able to get the most out of the tools which are supplied them. They must also state the problem which is to be solved—what the desirable developments are and what it is wished to accomplish with some appliance as yet undeveloped and unsupplied. Working together with the limited number of designers in the Navy and with the large supply of these same designers in civil life, great things can and have been accomplished. The Navy calls upon the pure scientist, the designer, the draftsmen, and the expert workmen in almost every line. The naval officer's function is primarily to state intelligently what his needs are and to work with the specialist in the development of the appliance which will fill his needs. They are planners, choosers, and approvers when it comes to developing material.

The following developments which took place under the Bureau of Ordnance merely indicate what is done by all bureaus:

The first harvey plate, invented by Mr. Harvey, a civilian, was manufactured at the Naval Gun Factory under the auspices of the Bureau of Ordnance with funds allotted by the bureau for the purpose. This important invention revolutionized armor. The Krupp armor, which later replaced it, is a modification and improvement on the Harvey process.

The first submarine was actually bought by the Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department. It was produced by John P. Holland upon the advice and encouragement of the then chief of the bureau, William T. Sampson, and the funds used to produce it were procured by the Bureau of Ordnance.

The turbine torpedo: The development of this method of propelling torpedoes was invented and built by the E. W. Bliss Co. and fostered by the Bureau of Ordnance.

The shell tracer: The shell tracer was invented by John B. Semple. It was first adopted by the Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department, after years of testing at the naval proving ground, testing developments having all been done under the supervision of naval officers. It is now used by all the principal naval powers.

The Williams-Janney speed gear for training turrets and elevating guns was first adopted by the Bureau of Ordnance. All of the principal naval powers of the world have followed suit and it is now used on all of their battleships.

The Sperry gyroscopic fire-control apparatus: This was produced by Mr. Speery, to whom was expressed the needs of the Navy by the Bureau of Ordnance, and Mr. Sperry developed the apparatus.

The telescope sight: This was invented by a naval officer not connected with the Bureau of Ordnance; nevertheless the Bureau of Ordnance installed upon our ships telescopes for sighting guns long before any nation in the world had adopted them. They are now used to the exclusion of all other sights for the sighting of naval guns.

The above are a few inventions, selected at random, produced by people outside of the Government service. There are many more, and there have been many more tried and failed. Large sums of money have been spent by Government in encouraging building and testing out the products of civilian inventors.

At the present time the Bureau of Ordnance has in hand several inventions for which money allotments have been made; and it has been the consistent policy of the bureau, as exemplified above, to afford the greatest encouragement to any inventor who offers any scheme which promises the slightest prospect of success.

In closing this brief and incomplete list of the accomplishments of the Navy Department and the officers under its direction, reference should be made to the work of Lieut. Matthew Fontaine Maury, United States Navy, who was a pioneer in the development of pilot charts. His studies of ocean winds and currents were the first systematic attempt to obtain this most important data, which is of service to all men who go down to the sea in ships. A statement of the pilot chart work is contained on page 37 of the pamphlet inclosed.

In the field of naval affairs, which are separate from that of appliances for accomplishing certain specific purposes, there are the strategical conceptions of campaigns and the tactical employment of units of the fleet. Their proper employment under any and all circumstances are matters of paramount interest to the naval officer. Studies along these lines are constant and unremitting. It is believed that the developments in this field compare favorably with those of any other nation, but due to the confidential nature of most of them they can not be discussed.

Sincerely yours,

C. F. HUGHES,
Admiral, United States Navy, Chief of Naval Operations.

Hon. WILLIAM B. OLIVER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

TEMPORARY GOVERNMENT FOR WEST INDIAN ISLANDS

For expenses incident to the occupation of the Virgin Islands and to the execution of the provisions of the act providing a temporary government for the West Indian Islands acquired by the United States from Denmark, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1917, to be applied under the direction of the President, $240,000, and in addition thereto such an amount (not in excess of $35,500) as may be equivalent to (a) the total of the unobligated balance of the revenues collected and paid into the treasuries of such islands during the fiscal year 1928, plus (b) the sum by which the revenues collected and paid into the treasuries of such islands during the fiscal year 1929 exceed the sum of $240,000: Provided, That no part of the $240,000 shall be paid to anyone holding office in the Colonial Councils of the Virgin Islands or other public office under the government of said islands who owes allegiance to any country other than the United States of America.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. FRENCH: On page 4, line 22, change the word "balance" to read "balances"; on the same page, in line 23, after "1928," insert the following: "and of the appropriation 'temporary government for West Indian Islands, 1928.'"

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction and repair of vessels: For preservation and completion of vessels on the stocks and in ordinary; purchase of materials and stores of all kinds; steam steerers, steam capstans, steam windlasses, and all other auxiliaries; labor in navy yards and on foreign stations; purchase of machinery and tools for use in shops; carrying on work of experimental model tank and wind tunnel; designing naval vessels; construction and repair of yard craft, lighters, and barges; wear, tear, and repair of vessels afloat; general care and protection of the Navy in the line of construction and repair; incidental expenses for vessels and navy yards, inspectors' offices, such as photographing, books, professional magazines, plans, stationery, and instruments for drafting room, and for pay of classified field force under the bureau; for payment of part-time or intermittent employment in the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, of such scientists and technicists as may be contracted for by the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, at a rate of pay not exceeding $20 per diem for any person so employed; for hemp, wire, iron, and other materials for the manufacture of cordage, anchors, cables, galleys, and chains; specifications for purchase thereof shall be so prepared as shall give fair and free competition; canvas for the manufacture of sails, awnings, hammocks, and other work; interior appliances and tools for manufacturing purposes in navy yards and naval stations; and for the purchase of all other articles of equipage at home and abroad; and for the payment of labor in equipping vessels therewith and manufacture of such articles in the several navy yards; naval signals and apparatus, other than electric, namely, signals, lights, lanterns, running lights, and lamps and their appendages for general use on board ship for illuminating purposes; and oil and candles used in connection therewith; bunting and other materials for making and repairing flags of all kinds; for all permanent galley fittings and equipage; rugs, carpets, curtains, and hangings on board naval vessels, $17,200,000, of which sum $200,000 shall be available immediately: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for clerical, drafting, inspection, watchmen (ship keepers), and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, and offices of superintending naval constructors for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, shall not exceed $1,800,000.

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts: Page 17, line 14, strike out the figures "$17,200,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$21,200,000"; in line 15, after the word "immediately," insert: "Provided, That out of said $21,200,000 the sum of $4,000,000 shall be made immediately available for reconditioning of destroyers."

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I am very sorry that a larger attendance is not present at this time to consider this proposed amendment. My amendment, in brief, asks that $4,000,000 be appropriated, to be made immediately available, for the reconditioning of our uncommissioned destroyers. I present this amendment at this time because of the great lack of employment in our navy yards along the Atlantic coast. I have a letter, which undoubtedly other Members of the House have received, from the American Federation of Labor, a part of which I would like to quote and have inserted in my remarks.

Already, on the Atlantic seaboard, 2,500 have been separated from their positions and in the two months 1,500 more will be let out, 900 of these at the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

In my own navy yard in Boston, which I have the honor to represent, we have practically 1,500 mechanics and helpers out of work.

Instead of furloughing the navy yard employees they are discharged and are forced to seek work on an acute unemployment market.

That is the case in the district of every Congressman who represents a naval district. I am deluged in my office every day with telegrams and letters outlining the serious and sad condition of our faithful United States Navy employees who are out of work.

Now, is there work that can be provided by the Government at the present time for those men? There is. This matter, as I understand it, was brought before the subcommittee and there discussed, although they saw fit not to take favorable action. Let me quote again from the letter of the American Federation of Labor, as follows:

The Navy Department has asked for sufficient appropriations to repair one squadron of destroyers, 19 in number. It would require $4,000,000.

My amendment asks for the $4,000,000 here referred to.

If this were made available at once by Congress the contemplated reductions in forces at the navy yards on the Atlantic coast would not be necessary. An appropriation for the reconditioning of these vessels is all that will be required, as authority for the work already exists.

I lay this matter before you for your serious consideration, gentlemen. This is an opportunity to provide the necessary work for the unemployed, faithful servants of the navy yards. I think this is a fair appropriation; it comes at a reasonable time, and will be in the eventual interest of economy for the Navy Department.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, just a word, I think, is all that will be necessary, because the proposition speaks for itself. It proposes a flat increase of $4,000,000 for the purpose of certain rehabilitating work upon a squadron of destroyers. We have something like 160 destroyers to-day that are tied up, about half of them, 88 as I recall, in San Diego, and a little less than half in Philadelphia. These destroyers receive that care through the annual appropriations that is necessary to keep them in fairly good condition. Much of the work that would be undertaken would be by way of replacement of fixtures and parts upon these destroyers, for which there is no immediate need. This machinery, like any piece of machinery under the jurisdiction of the Navy, the officers would like to see in the highest state of efficiency, but with more than 100 destroyers now in active service, and that will be in active service during 1929, there can be no justification for this expenditure of money at this time.

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. May I ask the gentleman a question for information?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. Am I right in saying, and is this letter correct in saying, that the Navy Department is in favor of this appropriation?

Mr. FRENCH. I have no doubt the department would welcome it, as I said a moment ago.

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. Has the department presented it before your committee and given its reasons for it?

Mr. FRENCH. The department indicated to us the condition of those ships. We went into that very carefully, and it was a matter that we decided upon its merits, and upon its merits we felt we were not justified in asking the Government to spend $4,000,000 for the purpose suggested.

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. Of course, this $4,000,000 will not be ill spent in any event if it goes to work such as has been mentioned.

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, no. But, as I understand it, this $4,000,000 is urged for the purpose of employment.

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. And that employment will mean work done for the benefit of the department and for the benefit of the ships on which the work is done.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. These ships, of course, are not in commission, and it is not contemplated to put them in commission at this time.

Mr. FRENCH. Probably not for years.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And much of the machinery has been disassembled on the ships. For this reason it was not thought wise on the part of the subcommittee to ask the House to appropriate this amount.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

From what I have heard in debates on the Navy in this House it occurs to me there can be three main classifications of the Navy: First, there is the actual Navy in commission and in condition and on the high seas; second, there is the junk Navy, the ships out of commission; and, third, there is the paper Navy, the ships authorized but for which no appropriation has been made and on which no work has actually been done.

We hear often in defense of the subcommittee's policy and of the policies of the committees, when we are fighting for a larger Navy, the fact we have a great number of destroyers, the greatest number of destroyers in the world. This has been used time and time again on the floor of this House as an argument against any increase in cruisers and as an argument against any increase in submarines—this mighty fleet of destroyers. It has been revealed that about one-half of these destroyers at least are out of commission. It seems to me if these destroyers mean anything other than the use that is made of them in debates against those who advocate a larger Navy, we ought to keep the destroyers in some kind of condition for use in case of an emergency. To hear those who oppose suggestions for the betterment of the Navy, you would think in case of war, whatever power we were going to engage with, would give us two months' notice that they were going to fight.

The Navy is an emergency proposition, liable to be called out at any time, and if these destroyers are a part of the fleet, if they are so large a part of the fleet, as some of the gentlemen of the House think, that they add considerable to the fleet and make it not necessary that we increase the fleet in other respects, then I say spend this money and make the destroyers mean something outside of a forensic argument.

The other situation covered by this amendment is the labor situation, which is highly important, not only as an industrial problem but as a problem of national defense.

It is not going to be easy in case of an emergency to recruit for the navy yards of the country the skilled mechanics required to look after the ships, and here is what you are doing: You are decommissioning ships, you are decommissioning destroyers, with the understanding that in case we need them you can throw them into commission hurriedly; and at the same time you are decommissioning, throwing out of work, disassembling the very organizations that you require for an emergency in our Navy.

At the New York Navy Yard, I understand, about 900 men may be shortly thrown out of work. I charge this is due largely to discrimination of the Navy Department against the New York Navy Yard.

Here is a chance for the House to do two things: First, build up the destroyer fleet so that it is really a destroyer fleet and has an actual value and not alone an oratorical value; and, secondly, to keep the forces in the navy yard intact in case we need them. This is a very worthy proposition from the point of view of national defense and from the industrial point of view, and I hope the amendment is adopted.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DOUGLASS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLACK of New York) there were—ayes 2, noes 40.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for pay, subsistence, and transportation of naval personnel, $149,213,752, of which sum $500,000 shall be available immediately; and the money herein specifically appropriated for "Pay, subsistence, and transportation of naval personnel," shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing law and shall constitute one fund: Provided, That additional commissioned, warranted, appointed, enlisted, and civilian personnel of the medical department of the Navy, required for the care of patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau in naval hospitals, may be employed in addition to the numbers appropriated for in this act: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the pay of any midshipmen whose admission subsequent to March 21, 1928, would result in exceeding at any time an allowance of four midshipmen for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress; of one midshipman for Porto Rico, a native of the island, appointed on nomination of the governor, and of four midshipmen from Porto Rico, appointed on nomination of the Resident Commissioner; and of two midshipmen for the District of Columbia: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to repeal or modify in any way existing laws relative to the appointment of midshipmen at large, from the enlisted personnel of the naval service or from the Naval Reserve.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. I understand the gentleman provides in his bill that there shall be an extra midshipman appointed from each congressional district?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; and we carry something more than $200,000 extra for the academy on account of additional midshipmen who may be named by the Members of the Senate and the House.

We felt, after consultation with the department, that probably should the bill be passed even rather expeditiously, it would be unlikely that as many midshipmen would enter as there are Senators and Members, so we take it that we have provided enough money to take care of those who will enter the academy.

Mr. ABERNETHY. May I ask the gentleman a further question? Does this increase in any way the number of midshipmen coming from the enlisted personnel or does it leave that number the same as before—100?

Mr. FRENCH. That number is left at 100.

Mr. JEFFERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ABERNETHY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JEFFERS. If these additional midshipmen are authorized, I would like to ask the gentleman from Idaho whether he knows when it is likely they will enter the academy.

Mr. FRENCH. They would enter with the beginning of the next academic year, which would be about the 1st of July.

Mr. JEFFERS. The 1st of July of this year?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I do not understand, though, that at the present time or even if the bill were to be passed by the Senate promptly, you could name another one, but if there were an alternate——

Mr. FRENCH (interposing). The chances are the alternates would be the ones who for the most part would be ready to qualify and enter. This is why the members of the committee felt that $200,000 plus would care for the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in order that I may yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] for a question.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. The gentleman from Idaho in replying to a question of the gentleman from North Carolina said that enough money was appropriated for an additional membership to be appointed by the House or the Senate. These are separate appointments entirely—the Senators make one appointment and the House makes another. How can you say by the Senate or the House?

Mr. FRENCH. I did not mean to give any such idea as that; we are not disturbing the present method of appointment, we are carrying money enough to provide for one extra appointment for each Senator and each Member of the House.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

MAINTENANCE, BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS

For equipage, supplies, and services under the cognizance of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, including stationery for commanding, executive, and navigating officers of ships, boards and courts on ships, and chaplains; services of civilian employees under the cognizance of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts; freight, express, and parcel-post charges pertaining to the Navy Department and Naval Establishment, $9,647,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for chemists and for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in the supply and accounting departments of the navy yards, naval stations, and disbursing offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, shall not exceed $2,975,000: Provided further, That hereafter the cost of transporting material purchased free on board cars or on wharf or free alongside vessels at points specified in contracts to the activities to which initial delivery is to be made shall be charged to the naval supply account fund, and after June 30, 1929, the cost of such transportation shall be added to the cost of material: Provided further, That the Navy Department shall be permitted to adapt to its own requirements any standard contract form prescribed for use by competent authority when, in the judgment of the Paymaster General of the Navy, such modification would be in the interest of economy.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Page 25, line 5, after the word "material," strike out the balance of line 5 and all of lines 6 to 10, inclusive.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, the matter to which the amendment refers has to do with the type of contract that is used by the Navy Department and involves the question of a standard contract that it is sought to work out for all the departments. We are now advised that the matter has progressed in such a way that we do not need to carry this language in the bill, and so I am offering the amendment to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The clothing and small-stores fund shall be charged with the value of all issues of clothing and small stores made to enlisted men of the Naval Reserve and the uniform gratuity paid to officers of the Naval Reserve.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

"The Paymaster General of the Navy is authorized to enter into agreements with the proprietors of the piece-work shops carried on the rolls of the naval-clothing factory during the calendar year 1927 for the manufacture of clothing from materials furnished by the Government at such prices as may be approved by the Secretary of the Navy."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is made necessary in order to correct an unfortunate situation that has resulted from a ruling by the Comptroller General. For over 40 years the employment of these people by the Navy has never been questioned, and naturally they have expected that this work would continue. Their shops are devoted solely to the Navy's clothing needs; they are fitted up for that one special object and are quite unfitted for anything else.

Only eight or nine people are involved. They are all the relatives of war veterans, most of them Civil and Spanish War veterans, as they had to be in order to get the work when this system was first put into effect by the Secretary of the Navy.

As part of the Navy's clothing-procurement system they are really an auxiliary organization of the naval-clothing factory, and they have been instrumental in giving the enlisted men of the Navy a uniform they can be proud of. The Navy recognizes their value and would like to keep them on.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman explain what the ruling of the Comptroller General was?

Mr. BACON. The ruling of the Comptroller General involved the question of letting contracts by competitive bids. These people have been encouraged by the Navy Department for over 40 years to do the work. The Navy is satisfied with their work, it can be done as cheap as in any other way, and there are only eight or nine women involved, all wives or near relatives of veterans of our wars.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How is the price fixed?

Mr. BACON. By the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I will.

Mr. BOX. These concerns to which the gentleman refers are very small, are they?

Mr. BACON. They are of very small capital, and it is about all invested in machinery. Accumulation of all these years of work are represented by their shop, and these are now threatened, notwithstanding they had a right to rely on the expectation that the work would continue. This amendment would therefore meet the comptroller's legal objection and give sanction to a custom which has never been questioned all these years until recently.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy Mine Depot, Yorktown, Va.: Improvement of lightning protection, $17,750.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee if he knows who was the author and what he said about thoughts of young men in the springtime?

Mr. FRENCH. I shall leave it to the gentleman to correct me. As I remember it the line runs, "In the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This is the first day that has felt like spring. What does the gentleman say about quitting and calling it a day?

Mr. FRENCH. I suggest that we read to the end of the paragraph. We will adjourn shortly.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval ammunition depot, Fort Mifflin, Pa.: Improvement of lightning protection, $35,000; replacement of cables under Schuylkill River, $6,000; in all, $41,000.

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, after line 19, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.: Construction of boathouse, limit of cost, $250,000, $250,000."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee will not insist on his point of order against the amendment. The object of the amendment is to provide an appropriation of $250,000 for the purpose of building a boathouse at the Naval Academy, to take the place of two old sheds which for 32 years have served that purpose, but inadequately so. As was said by one of the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy, Annapolis is the last place where water sports should be neglected.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAMBRILL. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Is this authorized by any legislation at all?

Mr. GAMBRILL. The Committee on Naval Affairs yesterday unanimously approved a bill, which I introduced, authorizing an appropriation for a boathouse at Annapolis.

Mr. BEGG. Of course, that is not law. Does not the gentleman feel it rather extraordinary to attempt to inject the construction of a building, no matter what the merit be, unless it be an emergency, into an appropriation bill, without any consideration from a committee of the House or anyone else?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, this matter came up last year when the Senate added it to the bill. No estimate of cost having been submitted, the Senate finally receded. It was then understood that the committee was favorable to it and felt that it was needed. Up to a few days before this bill was reported out it was thought both by the legislative committee as well as by the subcommittee on appropriations that no further authority would be required, and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GAMBRILL], as I understand, had withheld action on his bill then pending before the legislative committee because he was under the impression that already there was authority for it.

Mr. TILSON. Why did not the gentleman's committee report this out in the bill? Does not the gentleman think it would be fairer to the other Members of the House for the committee, after considering it, to put it in the bill so that we could see it, and then, if not authorized, any Member could mark it for slaughter or make a point of order against it rather than have a gentleman on the floor of the House propose an amendment of this sort? It may be necessary, but it does not seem to me good practice after the bill is reported to have any Member rise and propose an amendment of this kind without the other Members of the House having any knowledge of it or opportunity to find out anything about the proposed amendment.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman will recognize that since this was merely replacement it was thought at one time that the committee had authority. In fact, the members of the legislative committee insisted that we did have authority,

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman thought the committee had authority, and if this be necessary, why was it not reported in the appropriation bill?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Because we were advised by the clerk of the committee, after looking into the matter, that he felt we were without authority. For that reason we left it out.

Mr. BEGG. What happened to the old boathouse?

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Ohio will not insist upon the point of order. The old boathouses have been in use for 32 years. They are in a bad state of repair, altogether unsuitable for the purpose for which they are being used. Admiral Gregory, of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, urged very strenuously before the committee that an appropriation be made for this purpose.

Mr. BEGG. What committee?

Mr. GAMBRILL. The Committee on Appropriations, the subcommittee having this bill in charge.

Mr. BEGG. When?

Mr. GAMBRILL. A few days ago; he appeared before the committee.

Mr. BEGG. And the committee turned it down?

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, may I make one observation on the subject?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAMBRILL. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. The question came up, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] said, first, a year ago, the item having been carried into the bill on the Senate side.

At that time we went into the question somewhat, but our committee had not investigated it thoroughly. We insisted that the item go out, and the Senate receded. This year again it was brought to our attention, and while it was not in the Budget, nevertheless we recognized the dilapidated condition of the present old boathouses, and we felt that the item had so much of merit that we had some rather extensive hearings and made rather careful inquiries into the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Maryland may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENCH. However, our conclusion was that we did not have jurisdiction in the matter; that the item, since it was one that referred to replacement, was one that should receive the attention of the legislative committee; and with that understanding we deferred consideration of it within our committee, preferring not to act upon a matter that we thought was in that situation.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. It so happens that a member of our committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], had been on the last Board of Visitors and had joined with the board in recommending that we build a new boathouse. He had seen the condition of the present old boathouse. There had been many other Members of the House in the last few years who had been on Boards of Visitors, and they recommended that a new boathouse should be built. They felt that it was urgent.

Mr. BEGG. If that be so, we ought to disregard all the rules and let the Committee on Appropriations do the legislating. Is that the gentleman's conclusion?

Mr. FRENCH. On the contrary, the Committee on Appropriations has respected the rules of the House.

Mr. BEGG. The chairman of the subcommittee himself insinuates that perhaps he will not press his point of order, but will let it go in. Here is legislation. Everybody admits it. Ought the amendment to go on, or should it take its regular course?

Mr. FRENCH. I have stated that the members of the committee thought very favorably of the proposition. May I go further and say that the department, through the Bureau of Yards and Docks, brought to us plans and blue prints of the proposition, indicating definitely what is proposed, and estimating the cost of construction of the new boathouse? We were very favorably inclined toward the proposition. But having no authority to consider it ourselves, we did not consider it for action. We turned it down upon ground of jurisdiction.

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman will pardon me—and I mean my statement should be considered in the kindest spirit—does not the gentleman believe that it is the business of the committee to prevent legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. FRENCH. If I thought the legislation ought not to be considered by our committee, I certainly would.

Mr. BEGG. But no Member of the House is familiar with it or knows whether it is needed or not.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. There seems to be very general consent that it would not be expedient to still further use the old boathouses. Where the legislative committee thought that probably it might not be in order, although they previously entertained a different opinion at first, a bill authorizing it was unanimously approved by the Naval Committee. It really comes here with the approval and at the request of the legislative committee that this be done. Is that correct?

Mr. GAMBRILL. That is entirely correct.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman permit me to ask the gentleman from Alabama another question?

Mr. GAMBRILL. Certainly.

Mr. BEGG. The Committee on Naval Affairs having reported this bill out unanimously, is there any reason why it should not be passed on Calendar Wednesday? And if the House approves it, is there any reason why it could not be carried on the deficiency bill?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman is more familiar than I am with the prospect or likelihood of it being called up.

Mr. GAMBRILL. If the gentleman will permit, I may say that we shall not have a Calendar Wednesday unless Congress continues its session until June.

Mr. BEGG. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. It will come within five or six weeks, or something like that. I am not indicating any antagonism against the proposed boathouse, but as Members of Congress we are jealous of the legislative powers of Congress being assumed by our Committee on Appropriations. I think they have their hands full. They are doing a good job. But with a little legislation loaded on an appropriation here, and a little loaded on there, in a year or two the practice will become just as bad as it was when we established the present Committee on Appropriations. Riders will be put on bills coming from that committee. I think we ought to keep the record straight and clean.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has again expired.

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Chairman, may I have three minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAMBRILL. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that the House can hardly be considered as having been taken by surprise in connection with this proposition. It was thoroughly considered by the subcommittee on appropriations having charge of this bill. The matter came up for consideration when the naval bill was before the House last year, and the House seemed to be almost unanimously in favor of replacing these old boathouses, which have been in use for 32 years. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will not object to the consideration of this amendment.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, under the reservation of a point of order, may I have just a word?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TILSON. I do not quite agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] in his inferential censure of the Committee on Appropriations. As it has been explained, I think the Committee on Appropriations acted exactly right, so far as not putting this matter in the bill is concerned, when they found that it had not been authorized by law. I think the subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations have acted wisely in adopting the practice of not putting in legislation. I think the best point brought out in behalf of the gentleman's amendment is the fact that the Appropriations Committee, after having heard the testimony and being favorably inclined toward the proposal, at the same time, because of its not being authorized by law, the committee has declined to put it in.

Mr. BEGG. Will the distinguished leader yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. I will say that the gentleman from Ohio did not by any thought or word intend to censure the committee. I will say that if there is any censure at all it falls on the distinguished floor leader for permitting his committee to be embarrassed by having legislation loaded on the bill. In other words, it is my responsibility, I think, just as much as it is his responsibility or the responsibility of any other man in Congress. It is permitting the Appropriations Committee to be the carry-all for little pieces of legislation that should not be incorporated in an appropriation bill.

Mr. TILSON. That is for us to say.

Mr. BEGG. That was the main argument when this scheme of appropriating was established, and I believe that argument was right and sound. I remember that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has repeatedly made the statement that it should be kept clean of legislation.

Mr. TILSON. That is for us, one by one, to say, because one can keep it out by a single point of order. Members of the Appropriations Committee have brought this proposal to us in the most favorable form by saying that while it has merit they have not included it because it has not been authorized by law. They have left it up to us so that one objection will keep it out.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. That is exactly the position the committee took. Take, for instance, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] a few minutes ago. Every member of the committee felt that a practice which had continued for 32 years ought to be continued, but we told him we could not put it in. However, the Committee of the Whole voted to put it in, and that is a matter for the committee to determine.

Mr. TILSON. I think the gentleman is correct, and the gentleman states it as it should be stated. The Committee on Appropriations does well not to include unauthorized items that they may go through without any Member of the House making a point of order against them.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, that being the case, I feel absolutely compelled to come to the rescue of the committee, and I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order. Does the gentleman from Maryland desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Chairman, I am bound to confess that the point of order is well taken. I have not been able to find any legislative authority for the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has given consideration to the question and finds that the general law for the establishment of the Naval Academy is more destitute of detailed provisions with reference to legislation and appropriations for the academy than are most laws concerning establishments of the Government. Under well-established precedents the construction of a new building, when not specifically authorized by prior legislation, has been held not to be a continuation of a public work and has been held subject to a point of order when appearing in or offered as an amendment to an appropriation bill.

On February 1, 1909, during consideration of the Army appropriation bill, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole [Mr. James B. Perkins, of New York] held the construction of storehouses in the Philippine Islands, for the use of various departments in the Army, out of order. The Chair then said:

> The Chair has nothing to do with the propriety or wisdom of this appropriation, but it has been held that the construction of barracks in a navy yard was not a continuation of a public work; that an appropriation for a naval prison was not a continuation of a public work; that an appropriation for officers' quarters and an appropriation for a hospital in a navy yard was not a continuation of a public work. (Hinds' Precedents, sec. 8439.)

On February 12, 1921, during consideration of the naval appropriation bill (Hinds' Precedents, sec. 8441), Chairman Joseph Walsh, of Massachusetts, held an appropriation for a new storehouse for ordnance at the navy yard at Puget Sound not in order as in continuation of a public work, under authority of section 3758 of Hinds' Precedents, and subsequent decisions.

The Chair is therefore constrained to sustain the point of order of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

The Clerk read down to and including line 9, page 33.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. CHINDBLOM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12286) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the Naval Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute in regard to the order of business for next week.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, the bill now under consideration, the Navy Department appropriation bill, is not expected to go on until Tuesday. Monday is the day on which District business is in order, and the Committee on the District of Columbia has a number of bills that it is desired to consider on that day. Therefore District business will probably occupy the day on Monday. The Navy Department appropriation bill will go on after the special order that has been made for Tuesday. The tentative program for the rest of the week will be posted in the lobby.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What is the special order?

Mr. TILSON. The special order is an address by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles:

H. R. 9663. An act authorizing Herman Simmonds, jr., his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Tampa Bay from Pinellas Point, Pinellas County, to Piney Point, Manatee County, Fla.;

H. J. Res. 126. Joint resolution to provide for the entry under bond of exhibits for display at the Pacific Southwest Exposition, to be held in commemoration of the landing of the Spanish padres in the Pacific Southwest and the opening of the Long Beach, Calif., world port, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 245. Joint resolution to make immediately available the appropriation for a road across the Kaibab Indian Reservation.

The message also announced that the Presiding Officer had appointed Mr. BORAH and Mr. SWANSON members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the State Department.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask indefinite leave of absence for my colleague [Mr. MCDUFFIE], on account of illness in his family, which will require him to be absent from the city.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the leave of absence will be granted.

There was no objection.

FEDERAL PRISONERS IN NEW YORK STATE

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an official communication from the Legislature of the State of New York, advising the Federal Government relative to the receipt of Federal prisoners by New York institutions after April 1.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an official communication from the State of New York. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following official communication from the Legislature of the State of New York advising the Federal Government relative to the receipt of Federal prisoners by New York institutions after April 1:

IN SENATE, STATE OF NEW YORK,
Albany, March 15, 1928.

By Mr. Brown

Whereas the Government of the United States has no institution in the State of New York for the confinement of persons charged with or convicted of crime against the Government; and

Whereas the Federal Government is dependent upon State, county, and city institutions for the temporary detention of its offenders, resulting at times in overcrowding such institutions and in violation of State laws relative to classification of prisoners; and

Whereas the State commission of correction reports that the authorities of the United States have been notified that after April 1, 1928, no more Federal prisoners will be received in the institutions under the jurisdiction of the department of correction of the city of New York, which action promises to result in congested conditions in county penitentiaries and county jails of the State; and

Whereas there is urgent need for a Federal institution in this State to care for United States prisoners: Be it

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Legislature of the State of New York memorialize Congress to provide a suitable institution in this State in which to confine those charged with or convicted of crimes against the Government of the United States; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Secretary of the Senate, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of Congress from the State of New York at Washington.

By order of the senate.

ERNEST A. FAY, Clerk.

IN ASSEMBLY, March 19, 1928.

Concurred in without amendment. By order of the assembly.

FRED W. HAMMOND, Clerk.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD a resolution passed by the Legislature of the State of Indiana.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a resolution passed by the Legislature of the State of Indiana. Is there objection?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Upon what subject?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. About the interference on the part of Federal courts with State public service and public utility commissions in regulating public utility companies within their own States. This is one of the few constructive and original ideas which have come from that party.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman why a gentleman from Indiana does not introduce the resolution?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman from Indiana on my right has already put it in the basket and the gentleman from New York City, who is suffering at this very moment under the same conditions, wants to stress and emphasize the troubles we are having.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, then I object.

ADDRESS OF HON. FREDERICK D. GARDNER, OF MISSOURI

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech recently delivered by Frederick D. Gardner, ex-Governor of Missouri.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech recently delivered by Hon. Frederick D. Gardner, former Governor of Missouri:

HON. JAMES A. REED

Missourians, the Democrats of this great State have met to-day with one purpose in their hearts—to bring about the nomination and election of a Missourian as President of the United States. There is no division among them on this subject; they have no second choice. They are for the man whom the entire country affectionately calls "JIM REED."

Born in Ohio of Scotch-Irish ancestry—reared on a farm upon the plains of Iowa, as a young man he turned his searching eyes to the boundless resources of Missouri, and for 40 years has resided within the borders of this great State. For nearly 30 years of that time he has served the people as councilor, as mayor, and as United States Senator.

As a prosecuting attorney he proved himself to be at once the protector of the innocent and defenseless and the terror of the criminal. He drove the vicious elements from Kansas City and Jackson County and established a reign of law and order.

As mayor of Kansas City, he smashed the corrupt gangs which had been preying upon the people. He forced the public-service institutions to recognize the rights of the municipality and its citizens.

He brought about conditions which during succeeding years have saved millions of dollars to street-car strap holders and to all housewives who use electricity, light, gas, and telephone.

He compelled the paving companies to cut their charges almost half and broke up the combination which had long existed; he forced public-service institutions and contractors to deal with the municipality upon a just and fair basis.

These things were accomplished without any assault upon honest capital or any attempt to destroy honest investments.

His record as a vote getter is remarkable and unequalled. In 1908 the Republicans carried Missouri by 15,879—two years later the Democrats nominated REED for the Senate, resulting in his election by a Democratic legislature—replacing a Republican.

He was renominated by his party in 1916 and again was reelected by 24,456. But the most remarkable evidence of his popularity with the people was in 1922. The Republicans carried Missouri in the great landslide of 1920 by 160,000. The cause of democracy seemed hopeless, but when two years later REED was for the third time renominated for the Senate, he carried the state by 44,258. He has never been defeated in any of his appeals to the people, and in my judgment he never will be, either in Missouri or in the Nation. He is his own platform, and he has the rare gift of being able to convince the people that he is right.

Critics he has; detractors there are; enemies in front and in the rear have assailed him with poisoned arrows, but in each of his campaigns he has come unscathed from the fray; each time the banner of democracy waved in triumph.

Almost from the day he took his seat in the United States Senate, 17 years ago, he achieved a prominence which has constantly increased with the passing years. He has never occupied a servile position. Always regarding himself as a representative of one of the greatest States in the American Republic, he has refused to take orders from any man.

He has ever regarded himself as the representative of the people and as Missouri's ambassador to Washington.

In every great conflict he has been in the forefront. The pole star of his guidance has ever been the Constitution of the United States, the most sacred portion of which is the great Bill of Rights, which emanated from the brain of Thomas Jefferson.

He has constantly stood for the independence of the individual citizen.

He has championed the doctrine that States know better how to manage their internal affairs than the representatives of other States a thousand miles away.

He has demanded the protection of honest capital and honest investment, but has ever maintained that wealth must not be employed to oppress the individual or to destroy commerce.

Constantly, persistently, he has asserted that the sole object of government is the happiness of the people, that when government goes beyond that legitimate purpose and attempts to interfere with the individual liberty, with the right of conscience, with property, with freedom of speech, with peaceable assemblage—when the government does these things it is oppressive and must be changed.

He maintains that government is by men, established for the benefit of men, and must be controlled by men; and that such control must consist merely in the protection of natural rights of the citizen.

He has denounced every attempt at class legislation and has fought, without ceasing, every grant of special privilege.

Throughout all the years REED has been in public life he has defended labor against unjust attacks and proved himself labor's friend in its every legitimate aim.

Born on a farm, living and toiling there to help his widowed mother until he attained man's estate, his every sympathy is with the interest of agriculture and his earnest desire is now, and has ever been, to do all in his power to promote the legitimate interests of the farmers of the Nation. He actively supported the Federal farm loan and joint land bank acts—through which have been loaned to American farmers over one and three-quarters billion dollars, at a saving to them of $33,000,000 a year. The farmers now own $60,000,000 of dividend-paying stock in this land bank.

As much as any other man, JAMES A. REED contributed to the reform of our currency and banking system. It was his acumen and driving force which compelled the acceptance of amendments that gave stability and power to the Federal reserve act; for his signal service in that connection he received personal expression of appreciation from Woodrow Wilson. Let it not be forgotten that it was JAMES A. REED who championed President Wilson in his policy of peace with Mexico, and contributed to Wilson's reelection in 1916.

REED was the first American statesman to denounce the doctrine that the Government's sole duty in the matter of rivers is to make them navigable. From the very first he insisted that the Government owns the rivers and has the duty of preventing devastation by floods and bringing security to the great valley States.

To REED alone may be attributed the fact that the Government has placed great fleets upon the Mississippi and Warrior Rivers which now carry an immense commerce, and have already resulted in the reduction of freight rates to nearly all points between the Allegheny and Rocky Mountains; this commerce extends its benefits to all cities, to all farmers, and to all classes of the population.

This great plan REED proposed and defended long before the recent disastrous flood aroused the attention of other public men.

With all the force at his command he has opposed every attempt to make the Federal Government an agency for the favorite group by the impoverishment of the masses.

During the past eight years he has conspicuously resisted the attempt of Republican administrations to subordinate the people's rights to the demands of sinister interests that seek to control the Government for selfish purposes.

It was REED'S courage, REED'S ability, which exposed the intolerable system of purchasing seats in the United States Senate. It was his eloquence in the Senate that bared the Newberry scandal.

His ability as an investigator demonstrated the fact that Smith of Illinois was elected by the contributions of public-service corporations over which Smith, at that very time, held the power of life and death by virtue of his official position. It was the sword of REED'S logic which barred Smith from the Senate.

The same spirit led this great Missourian into the State of Pennsylvania and there disclosed corruption which shocked the American public and astonished the world. His unflagging zeal to-day bars the door of the Senate to the corrupt boss of Pennsylvania.

Fellow citizens, the great issue of this campaign is to abolish control of the Federal Government by the corrupt influences which for eight years have possessed it and to return that control to the people of the United States.

It is now to be determined whether we can check the increasing Federal assaults upon local self-government and reestablish the vital principle of our original dual system of Government. We must decide whether our States and their responsible political subdivisions are to be engulfed in a consolidated bureaucratic despotism, ruled from Washington.

We must drive the money changers and corruptionists from the temples of the Republic.

We must return to the 48 States their legitimate powers and duties.

We must reestablish a government by law, not by man. In the execution of a multitude of administrative laws a legion of inspectors and agents has been let loose upon the country. The bureaucrats seek to standardize and stereotype Americans into dull and docile machines. What chance has local self-government to survive this constant intermeddling by the National Government? One or the other—self-government or bureaucratic despotism—will triumph. Both can not exist for long side by side. Which shall be allowed to survive?

We must return to the old fundamentals taught by Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, and Woodrow Wilson. Because among living Americans he stands preeminent for these great principles do we give grateful testimony to our eminent fellow citizen; he has ever held true to tried and tested principles of civil liberty. In these ominous years, when many have mined and sapped the Constitution in legislative halls, he has ever been an implacable opponent of those who would pervert or wreck the Government our fathers founded.

Senator REED has not only rendered the people of the United States positive, constructive services—he has also stood like a rock against usurpation of power at Washington and against absorption of the reserved rights of the States. Only he who recalls history can fully value this essential service of this great Missourian.

Who is there in the entire United States so well equipped to lead democracy in the present crisis? Who so great a crusader to lead the Democratic Party to a historic victory? The Democracy of Missouri will to-day present the name of this crusader, JAMES A. REED, as its choice for President of the United States.

As President, REED will be what he has been as a citizen and Senator—an American of Americans, his eyes fixed upon the star of American destiny, his energy devoted to American progress, prosperity, and peace.

FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech which I recently delivered over the radio on the subject of flood control.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following radio address delivered by me in Washington, D. C., March 23, 1928:

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience, I am glad to speak to you to-night in response to an invitation from my good friend and former colleague in Congress, Mr. Charles I. Stengle, editor of the National Farm News, upon a subject that should be of vital interest to the entire Nation.

Just prior to the convening of this session of Congress it was the consensus of opinion that the three major problems with which it would have to deal would be flood relief, tax reduction, and farm relief.

It is exceedingly unpleasant for a Member of the House to have to admit that while Congress has labored for nearly four months no legislation upon any one of these important subjects has been enacted.

The House early in December passed the tax reduction bill and sent it to the Senate for consideration; but because some features of it were not in accord with the ideas of the administration, it is resting tranquilly with the Finance Committee of the Senate, and no one knows when it will emerge, no hearings having as yet been held.

As to farm relief, judging the present by the past, the Republican leaders will permit Congress to vote upon some kind of farm-relief legislation just prior to adjournment.

Flood-relief legislation has been retarded by the insistence of the President that 20 per cent of the cost of flood-control works, plus the entire cost of rights of way for levees, spillways, and diversions, shall be contributed by the property owners and the States affected. Unfortunately, in these latter years the President depends not on the veto power alone, as prescribed by the Constitution, but insists that his views be respected regarding the initiation of legislation, and wields a big stick to enforce them, and not always, but far too frequently, be it said to the shame of Congress, it abdicates its powers and surrenders to his command.

Flood relief became of paramount importance by reason of the 1927 flood upon the Mississippi River, this being the largest and most destructive flood that has ever occurred in the United States. It covered an area of 30,000 square miles, 700,000 people were rendered homeless, and the direct property damage in five States amounted to $236,000,000, and the indirect losses have been estimated at an additional $200,000,000.

The heart of the Nation was touched, and the appeal of the President for aid brought an instant and generous response from every section of the United States.

The Red Cross, by voluntary subscription, collected and disbursed a relief fund of $17,350,000, being the largest fund ever raised by that great organization for a peace-time disaster. It gave emergency relief to 607,000 of these flood sufferers and has given rehabilitation aid to 565,965 persons; and on January 15, 1928, nine months after the advent of the flood, in 38 counties was still distributing food to 33,534 of these unfortunates. With a million people in the path of destruction, it is remarkable that only 246 people, so far as known, were drowned, the small loss of life being due no doubt to the prompt, heroic, and effective means of rescue work of the Red Cross in cooperation with the Army and Navy of the United States.

Before the flood had subsided there arose an insistent demand from every section of the United States that steps be taken to prevent a repetition of this tragic disaster. There was a realization on the part of the American people as never before that these recurring floods upon the Mississippi, each becoming of greater magnitude, taking a toll of human lives, a destruction of property, and causing an economic loss to the Nation, must be stopped and that the power of the Federal Government must be used to curb this monster at all costs.

Many hoped that a special session of Congress would be called to begin the consideration of a plan to carry into effect this determination of the American people, but the President decreed otherwise.

However, at the beginning of this session, the President, in his message to Congress, in speaking of the flood, used this language:

"It is necessary to look upon this emergency as a national disaster. * * * An adequate plan should be adopted to prevent a recurrence of this disaster, in order that the people may restore to productivity and comfort their fields and their towns."

Congress has been battling with the problem. Some seem to think its efforts in this regard might be termed "slow-motion" legislation, but executive insistence that the Federal Government should not bear the entire cost has been one of the chief obstacles thus far encountered.

The selection of a plan to control the floods, requiring technical knowledge, will have to be solved by the engineers or agency which Congress designates to do the work. So the chief questions that Congress will have to determine are three: (1) Selection of the board or agency to do the work; (2) Determination of the amount the Federal Government will expend; (3) Whether the Federal Government will bear the entire cost or only a part.

Within the time allotted me, I can not discuss all of these questions, and will confine my remarks to the controversial one of whether the Federal Government should bear the entire cost of whatever project is adopted, or whether the States and the property owners should contribute thereto.

My membership upon the Flood Control Committee of the House has enabled me to become somewhat familiar therewith. That committee began its hearings on November 7, or nearly one month before Congress convened, and these hearings were continued until early in February.

It is doubtful if any committee of Congress has ever had such a complete hearing upon any subject as was done by this committee. Every phase of the question concerning the floods of the Mississippi River and their prevention was exhaustively inquired into.

Over 300 witnesses were examined, some of the more important ones occupying the witness stand for several days. The published hearings comprise 6 volumes of 5,000 pages, containing 3,500,000 words. The witnesses came from nearly every State in the Union and from all walks of life. They came voluntarily; not one was summoned. There were experts and nonexperts. There were civil engineers, hydraulic engineers, Army engineers, District engineers, State engineers, Chief of the Army Engineers, members of the Mississippi River Commission, 2 Cabinet officers and ex-Cabinet officers, 40 Senators and Representatives, the governors of a number of States, many State officials, farmers, and business and professional men. The committee received more than 300 manuscripts containing flood-control plans and more than 5,000 letters and telegrams from all over the United States.

The congressional district in Texas which I represent is far removed from the ravages of the flood, and is such a distance from the Mississippi Valley that my constituents are no more directly affected than those from the State of Maine or the State of Washington. I feel that I am in position, therefore, to view the question from a national—and in any event not from a local or selfish standpoint.

Having entered upon the hearings with an open mind and no preconceived opinions upon any phase of the questions involved, after listening to the testimony for nearly three months and attempting at all times to weigh same as I would if a judge upon the bench, I have reached a very definite and fixed conclusion that the Federal Government should bear the entire cost of the control of the flood waters of the lower Mississippi, and I shall try to present the reasons actuating me in reaching that decision.

The Mississippi River presents a problem different from any other river in the United States because of its size, location, and the immense area which it drains. It is 2,466 miles long. Couple it with the Missouri River, which is essentially a part of it, it is 4,200 miles long, making it the longest river in the world. It has been rightly called the drainage ditch of the Nation. The area drained by it and its tributaries extends from the Allegheny Mountains on the east to the Rocky Mountains on the west, and from the St. Lawrence River in Canada to the Gulf of Mexico—1,240,050 square miles, or 41 per cent of the total area of the United States, exclusive of Alaska.

The number of tributaries and tributaries of tributaries which are shown in an ordinary atlas aggregates about 250, of which more than 50 are navigable streams. It is doubtful if any other river in the world is fed by so many streams as this, and certainly no other river in the United States is comparable to it.

The Mississippi bears seaward in her floods water gathered from the far-flung mountains, plains, and farms. It drains, either in whole or in part, 31 States.

The lower Mississippi constitutes a bottle neck, into which is poured the waters from this immense area. Clearing of lands, construction of roads, and improved drainage in other States has augmented year by year the volume of water, and accelerated the flow, causing its flood height to increase perceptibly.

The areas of the principal river basins which form the immense watershed of the Mississippi River are as follows:

Rivers	Area (square miles)	Per cent of whole
Missouri	527,150	43
Upper Mississippi	165,900	13
Ohio	201,700	16
Middle and lower Mississippi	69,000	6
Arkansas	186,300	15
Red	90,000	7

It will be observed, therefore, that the watershed of the middle and lower Mississippi which lies within the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, Arkansas, Tennessee, and Missouri constitutes only 6 per cent of the total watershed which the river drains. The water from the remaining 94 per cent of its watershed is therefore poured into this bottle neck and thrust upon these States.

Surely a river that drains such an immense area and assumes proportions of such magnitude in its lower reaches is one which the Federal Government, and not the States, should control.

If the President was right when he declared in his message to Congress that "this emergency is a national disaster," then it follows, as night the day, that the prevention of such a disaster is a national problem.

For more than a hundred years the property owners in the lower Mississippi, together with the States, have sought to solve this problem and have expended immense sums of money in the construction of levees to prevent the flooding of their lands. It is conservatively estimated that the local interests in the alluvial valley of the Mississippi River have expended approximately $292,000,000 in seeking to accomplish this purpose. Each year, however, the flood waters have increased and the property owners have built their levees higher and higher, and when the great floods have come they have witnessed the destruction of their levees and they have contributed not only this vast amount of money in trying to control the floods but they have paid an immense toll of damage to property of a far vaster sum, and this, together with the lives that have been lost, has been their contribution in trying to curb this great river, but thus far to no avail.

The committee made an exhaustive hearing into the amounts expended by the local interests in the past and of their ability to contribute in the future, and heard testimony, not only from those living in the Mississippi Valley but of financial experts residing in other parts of the United States, and the overwhelming testimony upon this question was to the effect that at this time they were bankrupt and unable to finance further flood works to prevent a repetition of the 1927 disaster.

It was clearly demonstrated in the hearings that the financial inability of some of the sections to contribute their just pro rata to the construction of sufficient flood works has in the past been a large factor in failing to solve the problem.

It was further shown beyond controversy that in order to successfully carry out a project it is essential that there should be one supreme power in which is vested authority to devise and execute the plan.

It will be necessary to construct flood works in at least seven States. Take the situation at Cairo, Ill. In order to protect Cairo the entire flood works would be constructed in the State of Missouri. Missouri would naturally refuse to pay the expense of constructing improvements in their State for the benefit of those living in another State, and Illinois would not have the power to condemn land in another State for such improvement, and it would not have the inclination to expend money in Missouri for this purpose. Cairo is in a very dangerous situation, but until the Federal Government assumes complete control they will not get protection.

Any plan, to be successful, must be a correlated one, with one supreme head both to plan and to execute. Until this is done no plan will ever be effectively carried out to control the floods in the lower Mississippi.

The American people have become convinced and are now demanding that the Federal Government should assume the sole responsibility for locating, constructing, and maintaining works to prevent floods upon the lower Mississippi, and that the Federal Government should pay the entire cost of same. As evidence of this fact there appeared before our committee, urging that this be done, representatives from the following national organizations: United States Chamber of Commerce, American Legion, American Federation of Labor, American Farm Bureau Federation, American Bankers' Association, Investment Bankers' Association, and Chicago Flood Control Conference.

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States conducted a referendum, participated in by the chambers of commerce throughout the Nation, which closed on December 15, 1927, and through this vote the membership of this organization is committed to the following proposition:

"That the Federal Government should hereafter pay the entire cost of constructing and maintaining works necessary to control floods of the lower Mississippi River."

Each chamber of commerce in the United States was called upon to vote upon this question, and accompanying the submission of the issue were able briefs, both in the affirmative and negative, so that the question was fairly and impartially presented for consideration. And upon the referendum vote so held 2,121 votes were cast in the affirmative and 664 in the negative.

Time does not permit me to discuss this matter further, but what I have attempted to say may be summed up in these words:

I favor the control of the flood waters in the lower Mississippi at the expense of the Federal Government, and without local contribution, for the following reasons:

First. Because it is a national problem, and hence a national obligation and a national duty which the Federal Government should discharge.

Second. Because the property owners and the States have tried for a hundred years to solve it and have failed.

Third. Because there must be one supreme and directing power, in which is vested all authority, both to devise and execute the plan for its control.

Fourth. Because the property owners and the States have already contributed to the extent of their capacity and more than their equitable proportion.

Fifth. Because it is the will of the American people, whose representatives we are, that the National Government should pay therefor.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 340. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Anchorage, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction and equipment of an additional school building, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER also announced his signature to an enrolled bill and joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 3343. An act for the relief of the Arapahoe and Cheyenne Indians, and for other purposes; and

SENATE

(Legislative day of Saturday, March 24, 1928)

The Senate reassembled at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 3007. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent to the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions for a certain tract of land on the Mescalero Reservation, N. Mex.; and

S. 3355. An act to authorize the cancellation of the balance due on a reimbursable agreement for the sale of cattle to certain Rosebud Indians.

REPORT OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, transmitting the fourteenth annual report of that board covering operations for the year 1927, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

STATISTICS RELATIVE TO UNEMPLOYMENT (S. DOC. NO. 77)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report (with accompanying statements) from the Secretary of Labor in response to Senate Resolution 147, agreed to March 5, 1928, relative to the unemployment situation, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that the reply of the Secretary of Labor just laid before the Senate may be also printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The reply of the Secretary of Labor is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, March 24, 1928.

Hon. CHARLES G. DAWES,
President of the Senate,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: On March 6, 1928, the United States Senate, first session of the Seventieth Congress, passed Senate Resolution 147, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor is hereby directed (1) to investigate and compute the extent of unemployment and part-time employment in the United States and make report thereon to the Senate, and together therewith to report the methods and devices whereby the investigation and computation shall have been made; (2) to investigate the method whereby frequent periodic report of the number of unemployed and part-time employed in the United States, and permanent statistics thereon may hereafter be had and made available, and make report thereon to the Senate."

In compliance with these requirements, I immediately directed the United States Commissioner of Labor Statistics to make such report as was possible from available records upon the subject named in the resolution. I herewith transmit the report which the Commissioner of Labor Statistics has placed in my hands.

In reply to the clauses which introduce the resolution, I would call your attention first to the fact that the volume of employment, as shown by the reports of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, published monthly, has tended downward from April, 1927, up to and including January, 1928. The February report, just published, shows however, an upward trend in employment. This fact the Department of Labor has done its utmost to make widely public, and thus has already fulfilled, so far as it had power to do so, the requirement of the Senate's resolution, namely, to call attention "to the proper timing for the inauguration of public works by the Federal Government and the encouragement of similar undertakings by the States."

Bearing on this action by the Department of Labor, I would respectfully submit that having had personal experience of former periods of unemployment, I do not recall an instance where there was "proper timing for the inauguration of public works," or other governmental, State, municipal, or county effort to take up shrinkage of employment until after it was too late. In the present instance the Department of Labor has sounded such warning in ample time.

In reply to another clause in the preamble to the Senate's resolution, "that accurate and all-inclusive statistics of employment and unemployment be had at frequent intervals," I would call your attention to the fact that the resolution carries no appropriation for this purpose. I am informed by the Commissioner of Labor Statistics that to obtain such information and keep it current would require a very large addition to the amount of money appropriated for the Department of Labor. A statement of employment and unemployment that would be "accurate and all inclusive" would involve an individual census of the United States, a work physically impossible of performance at frequent intervals and of heavy expense.

There is every reason to believe, however, that with a moderate increase in the annual appropriations for the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the bureau could materially extend its volume of employment and part-time employment information to include manufacturing establishments of smaller size, where its information now is obtained from the larger establishments alone. The bureau could also extend its work to include other industries than those now covered, and could tabulate its material not only, as now, by geographical divisions, but by States and principal cities instead. A very careful estimate submitted to me by Commissioner Stewart indicates that, for $100,000 additional, the division of the bureau now handling this material could be increased to include a fair proportion of establishments employing as few as 50 persons, and that this material could be presented in detail by industries, States, and cities of 100,000 population.

In addition to this, $20,000 should be added to the present appropriation for the employment service of the Department of Labor to enable it to extend its general nonstatistical reports of employment opportunities by cities, to cover States not now included in its reports, and to increase the facilities for placing jobless men, especially in its farm placement activities.

I herewith transmit the report on employment conditions which the Commissioner of Labor Statistics, with the facilities at hand, has submitted to me. It shows that the present slump in employment, while not so extensive or grave as the estimates which have been generally circulated, is nevertheless serious. The factors which have brought it about are many; among them the floods in the Mississippi Valley, in New England, the tornado which swept Florida and its attendant losses, the temporary closing of a part of certain major industrial plants, and a disturbance in the bituminous coal fields which has lasted for many months. All these have temporarily decreased the opportunities for employment and have adversely affected employment conditions in other lines of industry.

These, and the other influences which have operated in the same direction, I believe to be passing phases of our economic life. There are, nevertheless, certain features of the problem which must be considered if approach to constructive remedial measures is to be made with proper intelligence. For example, in 1927 the total net immigration, both inside and outside the quota countries, amounted to 252,023. A considerable percentage of these were prospective laborers. In addition to these immigrants, admitted during a year when our own people were losing employment, there was the annual average influx of 205,000 from the farms to the cities. We further have practically 2,000,000 boys and girls in our own population who reach the working age each year.

I desire to call your attention also to a distinction which Commissioner Stewart makes in his report, to the effect that "employment as it exists at present is composed of two entirely different elements, namely, those temporarily out of work at their regular occupations, and, second, those displaced by changes in industrial and commercial methods"; or, as one might put it, those who are merely suspended and those permanently released from their jobs.

Former labor depressions have been due almost wholly to the first group named, and if public work is not furnished quickly enough to relieve them, they have no recourse but to wait until their own jobs are again available.

Prompt relief for these is due from the Government's elaborate building program, from similar programs of States, municipalities, and counties, and from private building and construction.

For the second class of unemployed, of whom Commissioner Stewart says, "it is not unreasonable to believe that a considerable percentage of the employment shrinkage shown in this report is due to new machines and new mechanical devices," waiting for industrial developments is of no avail. Their jobs are gone. Inventive genius must devise new industries, commercial agencies must create new wants, in order to create new occupations for these people, in so far as age permits them to learn new occupations or adapt themselves to new industries. This need for new industries and new occupations daily becomes more pressing. The Department of Labor is in constant receipt of reports of acute situations resulting from the introduction of new machines. It is believed in many quarters, moreover, and with good reason, that this mechanical development will probably proceed as rapidly in the immediate future as it has in the immediate past.

With all these forces tending to cause unemployment, the number at present unemployed has been found to constitute a very small percentage of those at work. The census of 1920 showed that 42,000,000 of our people as wage earners or otherwise are gainfully employed. Of these, 23,348,692 have been found to be at present employed on either a wage or a salary basis. By the most careful computation methods available, Commissioner Stewart finds that the actual number now out of work is 1,874,050.

The attached report, compiled by Mr. Ethelbert Stewart, United States Commissioner of Labor Statistics, which contains these figures and the methods by which they are obtained, is the second such report which I have been called upon to submit to your body. Commissioner Stewart has been connected with the statistical work of the Bureau of Labor Statistics and of the Government for a period of 41 years, having been first appointed Commissioner of Labor Statistics by President Wilson and continued in office by Presidents Harding and Coolidge. Mr. Stewart's ability and conscientiousness in this work are thoroughly established and recognized, and his former report, which I submitted in August, 1921, showing 5,735,000 fewer persons on the pay rolls of the country, proved to be accurate. I therefore submit this, his second report, with absolute confidence in its essential accuracy.

You will find this report of the Commissioner of Labor Statistics on Senate Resolution 147 accompanied by an appendix which gives the report of Dr. J. Knox Insley, Commissioner of Labor and Statistics of Maryland, dealing with the same subject and giving the details of a house-to-house canvass in the city of Baltimore. The results of this independent investigation are included as further confirming the accuracy of Commissioner Stewart's report.

Respectfully,

JAMES J. DAVIS,
Secretary of Labor.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS,
Washington, March 24, 1928.

Hon. JAMES J. DAVIS,
Secretary of Labor, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In accordance with your instructions of March 6, 1928, I have completed and transmit herewith a report concerning the volume of unemployment in the United States at this time and the amount of part-time employment so far as can be determined from the records in the possession of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The definition of unemployment as here used is as follows: Persons usually employed but at present out of employment and hunting for work. In other words, the first section of this report refers to persons now totally idle but who have until a reasonably recent period been employed and who are now seeking employment. This section does not include those employed part time nor does it include those who are unemployable and are and have been for a long period of time subject to what might be considered outdoor relief.

The second part of the report deals with such information as we have on part-time employment.

To this I have appended the recent report of the commissioner of labor and statistics of the State of Maryland, which in addition to being a very able and interesting document contains the result of the only actual house-to-house canvass made for the purpose of determining the actual number of unemployed that has been made in any city so far as I know.

Respectfully,

ETHELBERT STEWART,
Commissioner of Labor Statistics.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS,
Washington, March 24, 1928.

REPORT ON UNEMPLOYMENT IN THE UNITED STATES

On March 6, 1928, the United States Senate passed Resolution 147, which contains the following language:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor is hereby directed (1) to investigate and compute the extent of unemployment and part-time employment in the United States and make report thereon to the Senate, and together therewith to report the methods and devices whereby the investigation and computation shall have been made; (2) to investigate the method whereby frequent periodic report of the number of unemployed and part-time employed in the United States and permanent statistics thereof may hereafter be had and made available, and make report thereon to the Senate."

Responding to the requirements of the first part of the resolution quoted, the best estimate that can be made from all sources of information available at this time is that the shrinkage in the volume of wage earners, including manufacturing, transportation, mining, agriculture, trade, clerical, and domestic groups, figuring on a basis of those employed in 1925, is revealed to be 7.43 per cent. Applying this percentage to the total number of employees as of 1925 gives a shrinkage between the average of 1925 and January, 1928, of 1,874,050 persons.

The method of calculation employed in arriving at this figure is as follows: First, the census of 1925 is taken as a base, because the census of 1920 represents a boom year; and while there was a tremendous slump between that and the census of 1923, nevertheless between these periods there had been a recovery, and the year 1923 brought an upswing which, from the present point of view, may be considered by some, at least, an incipient boom. Employment dropped again in 1924, advanced slightly in 1925, a little more in 1926, and dropped again through 1927. The year 1925 may therefore be accepted as an average recent year from which to take measurement, and it is herein made the base from which employment shrinkage has been computed. In making 1925 the base, or 100, it is understood that whatever there may have been of unemployment in that year is ignored, and it is assumed that those who were let out of industry between 1923 and 1924 had by 1925 readjusted themselves. It may be said that 1925 was a year in which there was no noticeable unemployment question. It is also used as a base, because it was a year in which the census of manufactures was taken.

The foundation of the estimate here submitted is the known figures for 1925 for (1) manufacturing wage earners, and (2) railroad employees. These, with the estimates as of January, 1928, are as follows:

	Employed in 1925	Estimated employed January, 1928	Estimated shrinkage
Manufacturing	8,383,781	7,739,907	643,874
Railroads	1,732,589	[1] 1,643,356	109,233
Total	10,136,370	9,383,263	753,107

[1] December, 1927.

Decrease of 7.43 per cent.

No figures are available for the groups—agriculture, mining, clerical workers, domestic service, and trade—and it can only be assumed that they have been affected in like degree.

The change in manufacturing employment is determined from the change in the Bureau of Labor Statistics' index of employment in manufacturing industries. The railroad figures are exact for class 1 railroads, omitting general and division officials. The number of employees in 1925 is estimated from the population census taken as of January, 1920, as recast in the July, 1923, issue of the Monthly Labor Review, and from the percentage of change in employment as known for manufacturing and railroads.

The number of employees in 1925 used in this calculation—that is, persons working for wages or salaries for others—is estimated at 25,222,742. This figure does not include any persons operating their own business or professions. The calculated number of employees as of January, 1928, upon the same basis, was 23,348,692, leaving a shrinkage between the two periods as indicated above of 1,874,050.

The table shown below, which gives the changes in employment from month to month, has been recast upon a basis of the average of 1925, to conform to the method adopted in the general estimate. However, it is important to show that most of this shrinkage took place in 1927, beginning practically in April, and continuing through January, 1928. The index for February, just issued, shows an upward trend as against January or December.

It is also interesting to note that while the Bureau of Labor Statistics' figures are based upon 10,772 establishments employing in January, 1928, 2,907,700 employees, or an average of slightly over 271 employees each, the percentage of change from January, 1927, to January, 1928, corresponds exactly with the figures for the State of New York, which include a much larger proportion and take in very many smaller establishments.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics is working cooperatively with a number of States in this matter of employment record. In the beginning the bureau formed its own contacts with the original establishments and necessarily picked the older and larger establishments so as to get a more formidable number of employees for comparative purposes. Later on a number of States began this work, but secured information from a vastly larger number of establishments within each State, and the State bureaus furnish to the United States Bureau schedules from such establishments as are agreed upon.

The figures of percentage of change in employment show a great variation in geographical districts, which the Bureau of Labor Statistics interprets to mean that unemployment is not universal nor in all places or industries is it acute, but that it is spotted by geographical sections and by industries, and that in actual numbers it is not more than one-third of the magnitude of the labor depression of 1921, which caused a shrinkage in the number on the pay roll according to the estimates of this bureau of 5,735,000, from the peak of 1920 to July, 1921.

The spottedness of the unemployment situation is brought out by a list showing the percentage of change in employment between a given month in 1928 and the same month in 1927, except in the case of Wisconsin, where December is used. These ranges in percentage are shown in the following table:

Yearly changes in employment

State	Period	Per cent of change in employment
U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics	January, 1927, to January, 1928	−5.8
Oklahoma	February, 1927, to February, 1928	−19.7
Wisconsin (factory workers)	December, 1926, to December, 1927	−3.9
Illinois	February, 1927, to February, 1928	−6.5
California	January, 1927, to January, 1928	−7.8
New York	do	−5.8
Maryland	do	−7.8
Massachusetts	February, 1927, to February, 1928	−9.7

As further indication of such spottedness, the employment report from the State of California indicates that the average of employment in all industries carried was 7.8 per cent lower in January, 1928, than in January, 1927. The details show the same spotted conditions there that have been noted elsewhere. For instance, canning and packing of fish has dropped off 67.8 per cent, while other food products showed an increase of 19.3 per cent. Men's clothing dropped 11.3 per cent while millinery advanced 11.6 per cent. Iron foundries and machine shops fell off 16.6 per cent while glass advanced 18.7 per cent. Sugar fell off 21.6 per cent while agricultural implements advanced 30.1 per cent.

PART-TIME EMPLOYMENT

In the pamphlet on employment in selected manufacturing industries for January, 1928, percentage figures were given as to the number of establishments operating full time or part time and establishments idle. Such figures were based on the reports of establishments without taking into consideration the size of the several establishments.

These percentage figures have since been recomputed and weighted by the number of employees. In other words, due weight has been given to the size of the establishment in computing the average per cent.

Reports on percentage of full-time employment were received from but 9,095 of the 10,772 establishments reporting other facts to the bureau in the pay period ending nearest January 15, 1928. Of these 78.8 per cent were working full time, 20.2 per cent were working part time, and 1.1 per cent were working overtime.

Of the total number of employees reported, 1,876,367 employees (78.7 per cent) were working in establishments operating full time, 482,354 employees (20.2 per cent) were employed in establishments working part time, and 25,598 employees (1.1 per cent) were employed in establishments working above normal full time.

In the establishments reporting part-time operation, the weighted time worked by the 482,354 employees was 80.7 per cent of full time. The weighted average per cent of time worked by the 25,598 employees in those plants operating in excess of normal full time was 111.3 per cent of full time.

The following table shows a classification of the employees by groups, according to per cent of normal full time worked:

Number and per cent of employees in establishments working each specified per cent of regular full working time

Per cent of employment	Persons in group
	Number	Per cent
Over 100 per cent (overtime)	25,598	1.1
100 per cent (regular full time)	1,876,367	78.7
99 to 93 per cent	56,291	2.4
92 per cent	88,956	3.7
91 per cent	31,697	1.3
90 to 84 per cent	31,742	1.3
83 per cent	47,509	2.0
82 per cent	54,833	2.3

60 per cent	23,371	1.0
59 to 51 per cent	10,692	.4
50 per cent	12,744	.5
49 to 25 per cent	6,731	.3
24 to 9 per cent	428	[1].0
Total	2,384,319	100.0

[1] Less than one-tenth of 1 per cent.

This tabulation shows that 79.8 per cent of all employees were in establishments that worked full time or over and that 87.2 per cent of all employees were in establishments that worked more than 90 per cent of full time, while less than 1 per cent of the employees were in establishments working half time or less.

In the great majority of establishments six days constitute a full week. In some of the iron and steel establishments seven days constitute a full week. Five and one-half days make a full week in a few establishments and five days in some others.

Employees working less than their regular full time may be roughly grouped as follows:

Idle over one-half day and under one day, 1.3 per cent.

Idle one day, 5.3 per cent.

Idle over one day and including one and one-half days, 3.4 per cent.

Idle over one and one-half days and under three days, 2.9 per cent.

Idle three days or more, 0.8 per cent.

In addition to the 9,095 establishments in operation that reported their per cent of full-time employment, 108 establishments definitely reported that they had recently become temporarily idle. These establishments were smaller than the average and several of them were in their slack season. When last operating, they employed 14,126 persons. Thus, about 0.6 of 1 per cent of manufacturing industry employees became temporarily idle because of recent shut down of plants in which employed.

In this statement of part-time employment the bureau confines its report strictly to the data in hand and does not apply the percentage obtained therefrom to manufacturing industries as a whole, for the reason that there is no information at hand upon which to base an opinion as to whether the same percentage found to exist in the establishments reporting to this bureau, which are admittedly larger than the average establishment, could fairly be applied to manufacturing industries as a whole. There is no material available upon which to base an opinion as to whether averages from the selected industries now reporting to the Bureau of Labor Statistics should be applied to clerical and domestic labor, or to any of those classes which are not covered in these reports.

It may not be out of place here to call attention to the fact that unemployment as it at present exists is composed of two entirely different elements, namely, those who are temporarily out of work at their regular occupation and in their regular industry, and, second, those who have been displaced by the changes in industrial and commercial methods, or, as one might say, the suspended and the displaced. What proportion of those at present entirely idle applies to each one of these classes it is impossible to tell. The man who has been entirely displaced by a new method of doing work or a new machine must seek new contacts, it may be, change his occupation and his industry entirely. In other words, in one class a man is waiting for his old job with reasonable assurance that the plant which is now idle will resume operation and he will be restored to his employment. In the other class the job is gone. The work formerly done by human energy is now performed by mechanical devices. The chances are that not only in the establishment from which he was dropped but in all other similar establishments he will face the same situation—that he must start anew. It is not unreasonable, as has been estimated by a writer in the Annalist, that one-half of the employment shrinkage shown in this report is due to new machines and new mechanical devices. All that is definitely known is that taking it for all in all the total displaced labor is largely of the unskilled type. The conveyor, the motor-hoist truck, changes in placement of machines so that the process is continuous and the material goes from machine to machine by the force of gravity are schemes that have displaced much labor, and this labor is mostly unskilled and common labor.

In conclusion I beg to submit as an appendix to this report a statement recently issued by the Maryland commissioner of labor and statistics, Dr. J. Knox Insley. This is interesting from several points of view. First, it is a striking comment on the value of estimates which are based upon nothing at all as to the number of unemployed. The Maryland State Federation of Labor made an estimate of 75,000 people out of work in Baltimore. The chamber of commerce of that city immediately replied with an estimate of 33,000. A house-to-house canvass made by the police department of Baltimore for the Maryland commissioner of labor and statistics developed that there were 15,473 such unemployed persons.

Another exceedingly interesting feature of this Maryland report is a classified statement as to the length of time which the unemployment had lasted. It is interesting to note that there was little or no pick-up work, and that in times of labor depression even, no more severe than the present one, the general opinion that a man can fill in with "odd jobs" is not found true in practice.

Respectfully submitted.

ETHELBERT STEWART,
Commissioner of Labor Statistics.

EXHIBIT

SURVEY OF UNEMPLOYMENT IN BALTIMORE FEBRUARY, 1928

A survey of the volume of unemployment in the city of Baltimore was made in February, 1928, by the commissioner of labor and statistics of Maryland. His report on the results of this study reads as follows:

A study and survey of the facts obtained show that in Baltimore city there are at the present time approximately 15,500 unemployed persons who usually are engaged in some gainful occupation. These figures are based on information secured by a house-to-house canvass conducted by the members of the city police force, through the courtesy of their commissioner, upon the request of the commissioner of labor and statistics.

While this total number is less than any of the various and scattered estimates of the amount of unemployment in Baltimore, several factors must be taken into consideration before arriving at a conclusion of its general effect. In making the canvass, consideration was given only to those who usually work for wages or on their own account in some business and who are now entirely without gainful employment of any kind. No effort was made to secure information for the apparently large number of persons who are employed for only part time. This is a separate and distinct study in itself and must be approached, we believe, from a different angle and by a different method. In addition, every precaution was made to eliminate those men and women who either could not or would not work if employment were available for them. To have included either or both of these groups would have clouded our problem, and would, perhaps, have greatly increased our figures.

Thus, then, if we may legitimately assume that the number of those usually engaged in gainful occupations in Baltimore City has increased at the same rate as the estimated population, we find approximately 4 per cent of these men and women, who can work and who want to work, unable to secure employment at the present time. Of the 15,473 persons found unemployed, by far the larger group, 13,468 in fact, is composed of men. Only 2,005 women, of whom 1,279 are white and 726 are colored, are included. More than 10,000 of these unemployed are white.

While more than 25 per cent of these men and women have worked in connection with the various manufacturing industries, the individual industry in which the survey shows unemployment to be the most severe is building. Here alone we find about one-sixth of the total number of persons. The textile industry, involving mostly clothing, is the most outstanding of the manufacturing industries, with food products and iron and steel competing for second place.

In considering the regular occupations of those unemployed, we find that the largest single group is composed of unskilled labor. The second largest number are found in the semiskilled operatives and factory workers, but, of the individual building and hand trades, carpenters lead in actual numbers.

The individual reports submitted by the police department indicate that, through the unemployment of these 15,473 men and women, almost 13,000 of an approximate number of 175,000 families are involved, and that at least 64,000 individuals are either directly or indirectly affected, a situation the seriousness of which is not to be minimized.

The existence of a group of almost 15,500 totally unemployed persons who are usually gainfully employed in a city of Baltimore's size is in itself a serious problem. The situation in this city, however, has become acute in that a large proportion of these individuals have been without employment for relatively long periods of time. Generally speaking, the findings show periods of unemployment, not in days or weeks as we might have reasonably expected, but rather in months. According to the results of the survey, less than 2,000 of the total number have been without employment of any kind for less than one month, and almost two-thirds have been unemployed for periods varying between one and five months.

Herein lies the worst danger; the exhaustion of savings and family resources and credit to the point of reduced buying and spending, and in a great many cases of the entire depletion of all family resources so that actual want and misery enter in. Professional and business men and women begin to feel the pinch of the lost spending power on the part of the public and in their turn pass on restricted buying power to the larger enterprises and thus the depression is spread so that all classes of our people feel its baneful effects. The facts revealed by the survey, then, and the further possibility of an appreciable amount of part-time employment are, we believe, the basis of the unrest in regard to unemployment in general and are responsible for the reported increased work done by the various social organizations of the city.

Furthermore, analysis of the material shows that only a negligible number of individuals reported even pick-up jobs secured since they found it necessary to leave their regular occupations, and we feel that we may conclude that employment has not been available for them.

The results of the survey would indicate that the three sections of the city in which unemployment is most severely felt are the central, southern, and eastern districts.

Unfortunately there is no accurate basis of comparison of the present amount of unemployment in Baltimore city with that existent in previous years. We can, with a fair degree of certainty, state, however, that it is more severe than it was one year ago. While a report of employment can not be used legitimately as an exact measure of unemployment, it may, however, be used to indicate the trend. In support, then, of our statement that unemployment is more severe in Baltimore this year than last, we quote the following from the annual report of the commissioner of labor statistics for 1927 (not yet ready for distribution):

"Combined employment in manufacturing industries in Maryland decreased 7.8 per cent during the 12-month period from January, 1927, to January, 1928, while weekly pay-roll totals for the same industries decreased 10.9 per cent for the same period. * * * While practically all of the industries involved are subject to seasonal fluctuations, the general tendency of employment and combined weekly pay rolls for manufacturing industries in Maryland, taken month by month during the year 1927, has been unquestionably downward. * * * The manufacturing industries reported increased employment in only four months, February, April, August, and September. It is interesting to note, however, that the pay-roll increases for these months are larger than the employment increases. December showed a slight decrease of nine-tenths of 1 per cent as compared with November, but for the same month the combined pay rolls increased eight-tenths of 1 per cent."

Maryland, it seems, is not at all unique in reporting decreased employment and pay rolls for a 12-month period covering the year 1927. According to an official report of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, United States Department of Labor, issued early in January, 1928, there was a decrease of 6.4 per cent in employment in manufacturing industries throughout the United States and a decrease of 6.6 per cent in the combined pay rolls in December, 1927, as compared with December, 1926.

"Each geographic division," according to this report, "shows a falling off in employment from December, 1926, to December, 1927, the greatest decreases being in the west, south Central, middle Atlantic, and New England divisions, and much the smallest decrease being in the south Atlantic States."

The following outline of the general facts revealed by the survey and the accompanying tables set forth in detail the distribution of the 15,473 unemployed persons in Baltimore, according to sex, color, regular industry, regular occupation, and number of months during which they have been without gainful employment of any kind.

The total number of families in which one or more cases of unemployment were found was 12,739; number of private families, 12,217; number of boarding houses, 289; number of lodging houses, 170; number unclassified families, 63. The total number of persons included in the 12,739 families was 64,306. The total number of persons who usually are engaged in gainful occupations is these 12,739 families was 29,099.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I inquire whether the report referred to by the Senator from Utah is made by the Department of Labor in answer to the resolution introduced by me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the report made by the Department of Labor in response to Senate Resolution 147, submitted by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. It was ordered to be printed and also ordered to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. WAGNER. I have not yet had an opportunity to read it. I shall undoubtedly want to discuss it after an opportunity has been given me to read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asked that it be printed in the RECORD, and it has been so ordered.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Copeland	Gerry	Hawes
Barkley	Curtis	Gillett	Hayden
Blaine	Cutting	Glass	Heflin
Blease	Dale	Gooding	Johnson
Borah	Dill	Gould	Jones
Broussard	Edwards	Greene	Kendrick
Bruce	Fess	Hale	Keyes
Capper	Fletcher	Harris	King
Caraway	Frazier	Harrison	McKellar
McLean	Oddie	Shipstead	Tydings
McMaster	Overman	Shortridge	Tyson
McNary	Phipps	Smith	Wagner
Mayfield	Pine	Smoot	Walsh, Mass.
Moses	Pittman	Steck	Warren
Neely	Robinson, Ark.	Steiwer	Waterman
Norbeck	Robinson, Ind.	Stephens	Watson
Norris	Sackett	Swanson	Wheeler
Nye	Sheppard	Thomas	Willis

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to anounce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] are necessarily detained, attending the funeral of the late Senator FERRIS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-two Senators having answered their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] is entitled to the floor.

DISTRICT POLICE FORCE

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield to me for a moment?

Mr. NEELY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. I desire to submit a resolution making inquiry of the District of Columbia Commissioners for certain information. It will take but a moment to consider it. I would like to have unanimous consent to have it read and acted upon. If any discussion arises, I shall be glad to withdraw it.

Mr. NEELY. I yield for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 182) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Whereas there is apparently friction in the police force; and

Whereas a number of the members of the force have been charged with offenses; and

Whereas trials have been had before the police board: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, requested to furnish to the Senate, (a) the name of each member of the force who has been charged with any offense within the last three years; (b) together with the nature of the offense; (c) what action was had by the trial board with reference to these cases; (d) in how many cases the District Commissioners have reviewed the action of the trial board; (e) what has been the final result of these cases; (f) how many; (g) and which police officers are now on the force that have been charged with the offenses; (h) the nature of their offenses; (i) what, if any, punishment has been inflicted upon them.

The preamble and resolution were agreed to.

SECRETARY HOOVER'S REPLY TO SENATOR BORAH'S QUESTIONNAIRE

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, on the 9th day of February the able Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in a most patriotic and praiseworthy effort to serve his party and his country wrote Mr. Herbert Hoover the following courteous, cordial, and important letter:

FEBRUARY 9, 1928.

Hon. HERBERT HOOVER,
Secretary of Commerce, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Your friends have placed you in line for the nomination for the Presidency. I venture in view of that fact to ask your views upon a matter in which there is a wide and deep interest throughout the country. I am sure you will be free to express yourself upon this important issue:

First. Do you favor incorporating in the next national Republican platform a plank specifically referring to the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution and pledging the candidates and the party to a vigorous, faithful, and effective enforcement of the amendment and the laws enacted to carry into effect the constitutional amendment?

Second. What is your attitude and what would be your attitude toward the amendment and its enforcement in case you are nominated and elected?

Third. Do you favor the enactment into law of the principle embodied in the New York referendum that the Congress should modify the Federal act to enforce the eighteenth amendment so that the same shall not prohibit the manufacture, sale, transportation, importation, or exportation of beverages which are not in fact intoxicating, as determined in accordance with the laws of the respective States? In other words, do you favor a program of legislation which will enable every State to determine for itself the alcoholic content of beverages to be manufactured, sold, and transported throughout the country?

Fourth. Do you favor the repeal of the eighteenth amendment or the repeal of the Volstead Act?

Very respectfully,

WM. E. BORAH.

Mr. Hoover, after two weeks of fishing, campaigning, and reflecting, sent Mr. BORAH the following curt, curious, and confusing retort:

The Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Upon my return to Washington I have taken up your letter.

I feel that the discussion of public questions by reply to questionnaires is likely to be unsatisfactory and ofttimes leads to confusion rather than clarity. Replies to the scores of such inquiries on many questions are impossible.

Out of regard for your known sincerity and your interest in the essential question I will, however, say again that I do not favor the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. I stand, of course, for the efficient, vigorous, and sincere enforcement of the laws enacted thereunder. Whoever is chosen President has under his oath the solemn duty to pursue this course.

Our country has deliberately undertaken a great social and economic experiment, noble in motive and far-reaching in purpose. It must be worked out constructively.

Yours faithfully,

HERBERT HOOVER.

Mr. President, Mr. Hoover in this letter reaches the sublimest height of epistolary humbuggery ever attained by man. [Laughter.] There is not a rum runner, a home brewer, or a bootlegger in all the land who can write a less responsive or a more unsatisfactory reply than that which Mr. Hoover has written to Senator BORAH's questionnaire.

When Mr. Hoover dictated this meaningless epistle he was evidently as irritable and belligerent as Thrasymachus was when, because of his inability to answer questions propounded by Socrates, he ill-naturedly accused the great philosopher of having "a stuffed nose" and of not having used his handkerchief as frequently as decency demanded. [Laughter.]

Mr. Hoover's letter to Senator BORAH is quite as puerile, petulant, and pitiable as the response that Thrasymachus made to Socrates.

Until Mr. Hoover acknowledged the receipt of Senator BORAH's questionnaire the drys believed him to be dry, and the wets believed him to be wet. But as a result of Mr. Hoover's exceedingly evasive letter the wets now believe him to be dry and the drys fear that he is wet. In brief, before Mr. Hoover replied to Mr. BORAH everybody presumably knew where he stood on the liquor question. Now nobody knows where he stands on this important issue.

Mr. Hoover's letter conclusively proves the truth of Talleyrand's assertion that "language was invented to conceal thought." It also proves that Mr. Hoover can be evasive in all languages, including the Scandinavian, and that he can categorically answer questions in none.

Mr. BORAH asked Mr. Hoover, "If he favors incorporating into the next national Republican platform a plank specifically applying to the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution."

Mr. Hoover has not even attempted to answer this question. He has simply ignored it.

Mr. BORAH asked Mr. Hoover, "If he favors pledging the Republican candidates and the Republican Party to a vigorous, faithful, and effective enforcement of the amendment and the laws enacted to carry it into effect."

Mr. Hoover has with sphinxlike indifference entirely ignored this question.

Mr. BORAH asked Mr. Hoover, "If he favors the enactment into law of the principle embodied in the New York referendum that the Congress should modify the Federal act to enforce the eighteenth amendment."

Mr. Hoover has completely ignored this question.

Mr. BORAH asked Mr. Hoover, "If he favors a program of legislation which will enable every State to determine for itself the alcoholic content of beverages to be manufactured, sold, and transported throughout the country."

To this question Mr. Hoover has been as unresponsive as Baal was to his 450 prophets who vainly supplicated him to send fire from heaven to burn a sacrificial bullock on Mount Carmel.

Mr. BORAH asked Mr. Hoover, "If he favors the repeal of the Volstead Act."

This important question which is notoriously uppermost in the minds of millions of American voters, and which should have been answered "yes" or "no," Mr. Hoover has ignored as contemptuously as a saturated sot refuses near-beer.

To all of the important inquiries contained in Mr. BORAH's questionnaire Mr. Hoover has been provokingly unresponsive. He is more exasperatingly evasive than the wicked wag whose sobbing young wife, when asked the cause of her grief, replied:

Every time I ask my husband if he likes my biscuits he tells me that I have beautiful eyes.

[Laughter.]

Regardless of politicians' wishes, campaigners' agonies, and candidates' tears, the question of temperance is beyond the shadow of a doubt in this campaign to stay to the bitter end. It is as ubiquitous as humanity, as deep as the fountains of hope, and as everlasting as the hills. Yet upon questions that are vitally related to temperance Mr. Hoover is as silent as the Sphinx, as voiceless as the tomb, and as unresponsive as the unreplying dead.

If Mr. BORAH has maturely considered Mr. Hoover's monumental masterpiece of transcendent evasion he must appreciate the anguish with which Josh Billings said:

I would rather lead a blind mule on the towpath for a living, or retail soft klams from a ricketty wagon, than tew be an Interviewer and worry people with questions they wuz afrade tew answer and too vain tew refuse.

[Laughter.]

But despite all difficulties, all discouragements, and all disappointments, let us urge Senator BORAH, the preeminent apostle of political courage and candor, to be as persistent in his undertaking to ascertain Mr. Hoover's attitude toward the liquor question as Delilah was in importuning Samson (another strong man like Mr. Hoover) to reveal the secret of his great strength.

Let Senator BORAH emulate a shining example set on a memorable occasion, and say to Mr. Hoover:

Herbert, "gird up now thy loins like a man; for I will demand of thee, and answer thou me."

Let the Senator from Idaho again say to Mr. Hoover:

"Do you favor incorporating into the next national Republican platform a plank specifically applying to the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution?" And let him add: "Herbert, answer this question 'yes' or 'no,' so that the wayfaring man may know where you stand."

Let Mr. BORAH again say to Mr. Hoover:

"Are you in favor of pledging the Republican candidates and the Republican Party to a vigorous, faithful, and effective enforcement of the amendment and the laws enacted to carry it into effect?" And let Mr. BORAH add: "Herbert, please do not evade this question, but answer it 'yes' or 'no.'"

Let the Senator from Idaho again say to Mr. Hoover:

"Do you favor the enactment into law of the principle that Congress should modify the Federal act to enforce the eighteenth amendment so that the same shall not prohibit the manufacture and sale of beverages which are not intoxicating, as determined in accordance with the laws of the respective States?" And let Mr. BORAH add: "Herbert, do not humiliate your friends and encourage your foes by dodging this question. In the name of millions of dry Republicans, I urge you to answer this inquiry 'yes' or 'no.'"

Let the Senator from Idaho again say to Mr. Hoover:

"Do you favor a program of legislation which will enable every State to determine for itself the alcoholic content of beverages to be manufactured, sold, and transported throughout the country?" And let Mr. BORAH add: "Herbert, so far you have ignored this question. If you do not immediately answer it 'yes' or 'no,' the righteous wrath of vast multitudes of voters will wax hot against you and, like a great conflagration, consume you and your vaulting ambition on the floor of the Kansas City convention." [Laughter.]

Let Mr. BORAH again say to Mr. Hoover:

"Do you favor the repeal of the Volstead Act?" And let Mr. BORAH add: "Herbert, if you do not courageously answer this question 'yes' or 'no,' the countless hosts of temperance and prohibition will, with unrestrained haste and unrelenting fury, do to you what Apollo did to the vanquished Marsyas, namely, flay you alive and hang your 'political' skin in a crab-apple tree by a fountain."

It should be borne in mind that Mr. Hoover's acknowledgement of Senator BORAH's questionnaire is not only exceedingly unresponsive and scandalously evasive but also positively wicked. It clearly violates the implied injunction of the following Scripture:

For if the trumpet shall give an uncertain sound who shall prepare himself to the battle? * * * except ye utter by the tongue words easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken? for ye shall speak into the air.

Mr. Hoover has spoken, or, rather, written "into the air." His trumpet has given an uncertain sound, a mere ambiguous squeak. [Laughter.] Therefore, who of the wets shall prepare himself to Mr. Hoover's battle; who of the drys shall prepare himself to Mr. Hoover's battle? Who or how shall anyone prepare himself to Mr. Hoover's battle?

Mr. President, a candidate who is afraid to state his position on any question of great national concern is not worthy to hold the high office that has been hallowed by Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, Roosevelt, and Wilson. A candidate who refuses to take the people into his confidence is not entitled to the people's votes. A candidate who evades a material issue should not be permitted to invade a public office. No political dodger deserves to be elected President of the Republic.

If anyone inquires why a member of the party of Jefferson desires to know Mr. Hoover's attitude toward the liquor question, we shall answer that Democracy also intends to nominate a Democratic candidate for President. And in the event of Mr. Hoover's nomination by the Republicans, Democrats will desire and deserve to know whether they ought to vote for the Democrat whom the Democrats have nominated or the Democrat whom the Republicans have nominated.

The fact that Mr. Hoover was a candidate for the presidential nomination on both the Republican and Democratic tickets in the 1920 Michigan primary election creates doubt in some Democratic minds as to Mr. Hoover's Democratic deserts.

What a calamity that this great statesman was not born twins, so that he could habitually be the presidential candidate of both the great political parties and invariably be on both sides of every important question!

Early in the campaign the newspapers indicated that Mr. Hoover would not enter the primary against a "favorite son" except in the State of Ohio. But more recently the ambitious Mr. Hoover has, like Lord Ronald in Gertrude the Governess, flung himself upon his political war horse and "ridden madly off in all directions." [Laughter.] He has now carried his conquest far beyond the State of Ohio. In this fact the incomparably good people of West Virginia, who very graciously permit me to share the high honor of representing them in the Senate, find much comfort, because West Virginia owns the Ohio River from bank to bank, and West Virginians do not want Senator WILLIS to wash all of Mr. Hoover's political linen in their river. [Laughter.] They do not want the "laughing water" of their western border polluted with the germs of innumerable political diseases.

Dame Rumor is now whispering about the corridors of the Capitol that Mr. Hoover desires to enter the primary election in Illinois, although the time for filing in accordance with the Illinois statute has long since passed. When Mayor Bill Thompson, who has so successfully banished King George from this hemisphere, learns of Mr. Hoover's coming to the western metropolis, he will undoubtedly repeat with cannibalistic glee those notewothy words of the famous giant so dear to the heart of every child:

Fe, fi, fo, fum,
I smell the blood of an Englishman;
Be he alive or be he dead,
I'll grind his bones to make my bread.

[Laughter.]

We may safely assume that when our great British candidate for President reaches Chicago Mayor Thompson will tender him a reception of such magnificence and fervor as no American official has ever given a British subject since Gen. Andrew Jackson received Sir Edward Pakenham at New Orleans in 1815. Pakenham is reported to have written General Jackson a note in which he said:

If you do not surrender I will destroy your breastworks and eat breakfast in New Orleans Sunday morning.

General Jackson replied:

If you do you will eat supper in hell Sunday night.

[Laughter.]

All of those who are not particularly enthusiastic about the candidacy of the late resident of the Red House in Hornton Street, London, may view with entire equanimity Mr. Hoover's desire or attempt to enter the Illinois primary. Illinois is the Vice President's State. To Mr. Hoover's effort to obtain a political delegation from the Vice President's Blue Heaven let us be as indifferent as the backwoodsman who, when urged to run to his cabin where a panther was fighting his mother-in-law, retorted, "Why should I care what happens to a panther?" [Laughter.]

If Mr. Hoover participates in the primary in the Vice President's State his fate can be appropriately indicated by the following news item which once appeared in a metropolitan paper:

Yesterday on Fifth Avenue a colored man named William Washington attempted to drive his two-horse dray through a monster parade of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. If he had lived until next Saturday he would have been 36 years old.

[Laughter.]

Let me propose to the various Republican presidential candidates who are Members of the Senate an adaptation of the following as an appropriate epitaph for Mr. Hoover at the conclusion of his race in the State of Illinois:

Here lies the body of Mary Ann Proctor,
Who caught a cold and refused to doctor;
She could not stay, she had to go—
Praise God from whom all blessings flow.

[Laughter.]

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. WARREN presented a resolution adopted by the Star Valley Commercial Club, of Afton, Wyo., favoring the making of increased appropriations for the construction of designated highways in Federal reservations, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a petition of sundry citizens of Borger, Tex., praying for the passage of legislation granting increased pensions to Civil War veterans and their widows, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COPELAND presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of New York, praying for the passage of legislation granting increased pensions to Civil War veterans and their widows, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILLIS presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Ohio, praying for the passage of legislation granting increased pensions to Civil War veterans and their widows, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ASHURST presented a petition of sundry citizens of Mesa, Maricopa County, Ariz., praying for the passage of legislation granting increased pensions to Civil War veterans and their widows, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a resolution indorsed and approved by sundry veteran organizations in the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Ninth Circuit on March 5, 1928, handed down a decision wherein it was held that the four-year statute of limitations of the State of Arizona applied to all insurance suits against the Government brought by ex-service men residing in the State; and

Whereas there are several hundred ex-service men residing in Arizona who were totally and permanently disabled at the time of their discharge and who will be unable to collect upon their insurance, which was in force at the time they became totally and permanently disabled, unless Congress shall pass a law extending the time within which suit may be brought against the Government; and

Whereas in a great many cases it was impossible to determine that the disability of the ex-service man was total and permanent until after the expiration of the time within which suit could be brought under the Arizona statute; and

Whereas a great many of the disabled ex-service men in Arizona are patients in Government hospitals and were sent here on account of their health and are thus deprived of the benefits of the statutes of limitations of their home State; and

Whereas we believe that the application of the law should be made uniform, irrespective of the State within which the ex-service man resides; and

Whereas a bill has been introduced in Congress by Congressman ROYAL C. JOHNSON, of South Dakota (H. R. 11350), granting the right to ex-service men to sue upon their insurance policies at any time within 20 years from the accrual of the cause of action; and

Whereas it is imperative that such bill should immediately be passed in order to protect the rights of those ex-service men not having cases pending before the courts: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we heartily indorse said bill and that we respectfully request the Arizona delegation in Congress to support the same, and that a copy of this resolution be mailed to Congressman ROYAL C. JOHNSON and Senators HENRY F. ASHURST, CARL HAYDEN, and Congressman LEWIS DOUGLAS, and that copies be furnished to such other individuals and organizations as from time to time it may be deemed advisable.

The foregoing resolution was duly authorized and approved by the Ernest A. Love Post of the American Legion, the Bucky O'Neil Post, No. 541, of Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, and the Fort Whipple Chapter, No. 3, Disabled American Veterans of the World War, all of Prescott and Fort Whipple, Ariz.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. STEPHENS, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 471. An act for the relief of Agnes McManus and George J. McManus (Rept. No. 621);

S. 1448. An act for the relief of Omer D. Lewis (Rept. No. 622); and

S. 1738. An act for the validation of the acquisition of Canadian properties by the War Department and for the relief of certain disbursing officers for payments made thereon (Rept. No. 623).

Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11577) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 624) thereon.

Mr. BLAINE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2673) for the relief of James E. Trussell, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 625) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 3773) granting an increase of pension to Malinda S. S. Dunbar (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 3774) to provide a temporary location for a farmers' market in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. NYE (by request):

A bill (S. 3775) to repeal the desert land laws;

A bill (3776) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for lands held under color of title; and

A bill (S. 3777) to repeal an act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 3778) authorizing improvements at the Fort Mohave Indian School, Arizona;

A bill (S. 3779) to authorize the construction of a telephone line from Flagstaff to Kayenta on the Western Navajo Indian Reservation, Ariz.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. MOSES:

A bill (S. 3780) granting an increase of pension to Martinia L. Johnson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 3781) granting a pension to Emma S. Caskey (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIS:

A bill (S. 3782) granting an increase of pension to Mary Gault (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3783) granting an increase of pension to Rose K. Cartmill (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 3784) to amend section 1, rule 2, rule 3, subdivision (e) and rule 9 of an act to regulate navigation on the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters, enacted February 8, 1895, (ch. 64, 28 Stat. L. sec. 645); to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WHEELER:

A bill (S. 3785) granting compensation to Joseph C. Eastland; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHIPSTEAD:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 119) granting an easement to the city of Duluth, Minn.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

AMENDMENTS TO MIGRATORY BIRD BILL

Mr. NORBECK submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to Senate bill 1271, the so-called migratory bird bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. KEYES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,654,000 and $653,300 for relief for the States of Vermont and New Hampshire, respectively, in the matter of roads and bridges damaged or destroyed by the flood of 1927, etc., intended to be proposed by him to House bill 11577, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 3356) to provide for the coordination of the public-health activities of the Government, and for other purposes, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance. The Public Health Service is under the Treasury Department. All nominations and promotions in the Public Health Service go to the Finance Committee for consideration. Previous legislation that we have passed has been sent to that committee for consideration.

Mr. JONES. With that statement by the chairman of the Finance Committee, I have no objection to the change of reference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

INVESTIGATION OF SINKING OF SUBMARINE "S-4"

Mr. HALE submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 131) providing for a commission to investigate and report upon the facts connected with the sinking of the submarine S-4, and upon methods and appliances for the protection of submarines, having met, after full and free conference report back to their respective Houses that they are unable to agree to the same.

FREDERICK HALE,
TASKER L. ODDIE,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

BERTRAND H. SNELL,
THEODORE E. BURTON,
EDWARD W. POU,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business, Senate bill 1271, be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House Resolution 131, relating to the investigation of the sinking of the submarine S-4.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I will say that the conferees have had repeated meetings on this matter and have sought to come to an agreement, but they have been unable to do so. For the benefit of the Senate I will briefly refresh the minds of Senators about the resolution.

Mr. President, immediately after the Christmas holidays and the reconvening of the Senate a joint resolution was introduced in the House, and a similar joint resolution in the Senate, at the request of the President of the United States, calling for the appointment of a commission of experts to investigate and report upon the question of safety appliances and salvage apparatus for submarines, and also calling for an investigation and a report upon the facts connected with the sinking of the submarine S-4.

The House unanimously enacted the joint resolution. When the matter came over to the Senate it was considered by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, and a divided report was made. The majority of the committee reported favorably on the House joint resolution with some minor amendments. The minority did not approve of the report of the majority. The question came up in the Senate, and by a vote of 51 to 32, I think, the majority report was defeated and an amendment was attached to the House joint resolution.

Section 2 of the House joint resolution provided for the appointment of a commission of experts to report upon the question of safety appliances and salvage apparatus. This section was adopted in the Senate.

Section 3 of the House joint resolution provided that the same expert commission should investigate and report upon the facts connected with the sinking of the S-4.

The Senate amended section 3 by striking out the section and providing in its place the following:

A joint committee composed of three Members of the Senate, appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives, appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the full facts of the sinking of the submarine S-4 in collision on December 17, 1927, with the United States Coast Guard destroyer Paulding off the Massachusetts coast, and the rescue and salvage operations carried on by the United States Navy subsequent thereto, to supplement the investigation now being made by a naval court of inquiry. And said joint committee shall submit a full report to each branch of the Congress, giving the result of this investigation and of such recommendations as it may seem proper to make.

A committee of conference was appointed, of which the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE], and myself were members. The conferees have met, as I have said, and have not been able to reach an agreement.

As a matter of compromise, the conferees on the part of the Senate offered to strike out section 3 altogether, thus leaving a provision for the appointment of an expert commission to act simply upon the question of safety appliances and salvage apparatus. The House conferees were not willing to accept the Senate offer. The House conferees offered to amend the joint resolution by adding to the expert commission two or more Members of the Senate and two or more Members of the House. The Senate conferees did not accept the offer made by the House conferees.

I will say now that both the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] and I, who were among the majority to sign the report made by the Committee on Naval Affairs, were and are in full sympathy with the House joint resolution, and were and are entirely ready to accept the compromise offered by the managers on the part of the House. We felt, however, in view of the vote that was taken in the Senate, that we could not conscientiously approve of the offer made by the managers on the part of the House. We felt that our position was that we should represent the indicated views of the Senate on this matter, and therefore we did not agree to the compromise.

Within a short time the President of the United States has sent to the Congress a supplemental estimate calling for an appropriation of $200,000 for experimentation in safety devices and appliances for submarines. The House Subcommittee on Appropriations has included this item in the naval appropriation bill now being acted on by the House, and without any doubt it will be adopted by the House, and, I presume, later on by the Senate. It is of vital importance that before this money is expended the commission of experts recommended by the President shall be appointed, so that this appropriation may be intelligently used.

I have a suggestion to make in regard to this matter. I shall place before the Senate a resolution which will enable conferees to determine just what the present sense of the Senate is in regard to this matter. I do not believe that the Senate wants to see this whole joint resolution defeated. The House has gone as far as it will go in the matter, as indicated by the remarks of the senior conferee on the part of the House, Mr. SNELL. I do not believe that the Senate or the country wants to see this joint resolution defeated.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me to finish my statement? Then I shall be glad to answer any questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. HALE. I am suggesting to the Senate the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the compromise proposed by the House conferees on House Joint Resolution 131, providing for the addition of two Senators and two Representatives to the commission provided for in said resolution, should be accepted by the Senate conferees in the event that a further conference be ordered.

Mr. President, if that resolution is adopted by the Senate I shall then move that the Senate insist on its amendment and that a further conference committee be appointed. If that resolution is defeated by the Senate I shall know that the Senate still has the feeling that it had when the matter came before it in January and that there is no possibility of reaching a compromise; and I shall then, in that event, move that the Senate adhere to its former action. That will mean that the House will have to take the Senate amendment or the joint resolution will fail.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understand from the Senator, then, that the House conferees desire an expression of the Senate upon this particular item?

Mr. HALE. No, Mr. President; the House conferees did not ask that at all. I told them, in talking to them, that I should propose such a resolution. It is not done at their request.

If this resolution is adopted it will be possible then to make the compromise suggested by the House conferees; the expert commission will be appointed, with two Members of the Senate and two Members of the House on the commission; an investigation will be made, as requested by the President, the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy, of safety appliances and salvage apparatus in connection with submarines; and an investigation will be made of the full facts connected with the sinking of the submarine S–4.

I hope very much that the resolution will be adopted by the Senate. It is not in the nature of an instruction. It is simply a resolution giving the sense of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. From a parliamentary standpoint the present occupant of the chair believes that the first vote will come on the question of agreeing to the conference report, rather than upon the proposal offered by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, as I have stated, if this resolution is adopted I propose to make a motion asking that the Senate insist upon its amendment and that conferees be appointed. If it is defeated I shall make another request, and that is that the Senate adhere to its amendments; and that, of course, means the end of the joint resolution.

Mr. SWANSON obtained the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, however, in the opinion of the present occupant of the chair, recurs on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Chair inform me what will happen if the conference report is agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Senator's proposal would be in order. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I want to state to the Senate what occurred in the conference. I am more insistent now than I ever have been on the necessity for a congressional investigation, or a senatorial investigation, of the occurrences in connection with the sinking of the S–4. It is utterly impossible for me to understand why the conferees of the House would rather see the measure fail than to have the Senate and the House poke their noses into the derelictions in connection with that unfortunate incident.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator consider that if there were two Members of the House——

Mr. SWANSON. I will reach that question in time. I will show the cunning of this resolution. I will discuss that.

What occurred? We have been six weeks in conference. I told the conferees at the beginning that the Senate wanted either a joint committee of the House and Senate, or a senatorial committee, as was indicated by the vote in the Senate, to ascertain the facts in connection with the sinking of the S–4, one of the most distressful catastrophes that ever occurred in the history of the Navy.

I told them that there were two propositions, first, to accept the Senate's proposal, which meant that three Members should be appointed by the President of the Senate and three by the Speaker of the House, to investigate the facts in connection with the sinking of the S–4, and the causes of that accident. If they did not want that joint investigation, then to omit section 3, that provided for investigation of S–4, and let the measure pass providing for a commission to ascertain all the facts in connection with the needs of the Navy.

They refuse to agree to that. I wanted them to report a disagreement, but for weeks they would not do that.

Mr. HALE. The Senator does not mean to say that we have not tried in every way——

Mr. SWANSON. I will say that the Senator from Maine adhered to the instructions of the Senate absolutely, and tried to get the conferees to agree.

Mr. HALE. There was no attempt by the conferees to delay the report.

Mr. SWANSON. It was hard to get conferences. They were delayed. At the second meeting I told the conferees they could report on either one of those two propositions, as far as I was concerned.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not understand the second proposition.

Mr. SWANSON. The second was to let the investigation confined to the sinking of the S–4 be eliminated. Then, if that went out, the measures could pass. These conferees had objection to that. The Senate showed by its vote that it wanted either a senatorial investigation, or an investigation by a joint committee of the House and Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the theory was that if it took that form the Senate could afterwards appoint its own committee?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes. But the idea of the joint resolution was to have a committee named by the Secretary of the Navy, or by the President through him take charge of the investigation. It was understood the Secretary of the Navy was going to name them; everybody knows that. Then, having appointed the committee to make that investigation, the Senate would be precluded from appointing its own committee to investigate the matter. That is the gravamen of the fight here to-day.

This proposition was then offered, to let the committee be appointed and to put on it, first, one Senator, or two Senators, and two Members of the House. I am unwilling for the Senate and the House to be parties to an investigating commission on which they will not have the power to control and direct.

My position is this: If the House does not want to investigate this matter, let the Senate do it. Why should they preclude the Senate from exercising its function and having a senatorial committee investigate the matter? We fought that out here for three days. The Senate reached the conclusion that it thought this accident ought to be investigated by a disinterested body, by people who are not under the influence of the Navy or anyone else. If the House did not want to investigate, they had a right to say so, and then the Senate would not be precluded from appointing its own committee to investigate.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. HALE. Would the Senator feel better about the matter if three Senators and three Representatives were on the commission?

Mr. SWANSON. I am not in favor of the Senate starting a joint investigation with people on the outside. The Senate should either discharge its obligations or not. That would still give the outsiders a majority. Are Senators to be summoned by those people to come when and where they please?

Mr. HALE. That would not make a majority.

Mr. SWANSON. I am against the policy; I am against the principle. The Senate should either investigate it, by itself, or with a committee of the House, or let it alone. That is the position I have taken.

Let us go further in this matter. They have practically refused to let a vote come in the House. They said the House was unanimous. This matter did not go to the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House. The resolution was introduced and referred to the Committee on Rules to take charge of the matter, to conduct it, to let it go through that way. The day it came up, it was reported promptly from the Committee on Rules. Everybody who has served in the House knows the aims and the purposes and the accomplishments of the Committee on Rules. I can not understand why the Committee on Naval Affairs was brushed aside and had nothing to do with this matter.

What I insist on is a vote in the House. It was reported that we could not get a vote. I want to know whether the House wants to join in a joint committee to investigate the sinking of the S–4. If they do not, let them beat my amendment. The appropriation is being made for the rest of it. The President has the power to do this without any authority from Congress. He has done it repeatedly. The recommendations for an appropriation have been made and can be passed. The President can appoint his commission to satisfy his own mind, to his own heart's content. But I am not willing to have the sinking of the S–4 passed over without a congressional investigation

If there ever was a necessity for such an investigation, there is more now than there ever was. The court of inquiry made its report on this incident, but it pleased nobody. The Secretary of the Navy would not approve it, and reconvened the court to make another examination and report. The Secretary of the Treasury is not pleased with it. He says the report of the court of inquiry reflects on the officer of the Paulding; that the Paulding was not at fault at all; that it was entirely the fault of the S–4. He is not satisfied with the report of the court of inquiry.

Those whose husbands and whose sons were sunk and killed in the S–4 are not satisfied with the report. They want a fair, just investigation by Congress. They have been here to see me, and I suppose they have seen the Senator from Maine, have they not?

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think we could reach any conclusion that would be satisfactory to everybody?

Mr. SWANSON. We ought to let those people know the investigation is by an impartial court. The Senator has an idea of letting the department appoint seven men to investigate the department itself, to determine who was at fault. I say it ought to be a joint committee of the House and Senate, and if the House does not want it, let them defeat the measure. The money can be appropriated for the scientific investigation about which the Senator talks so much. When it came to conference nothing was heard about the scientific object to be accomplished, but it was urged that the best way to investigate the sinking of the S–4 was through this commission named by the President, really on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy.

I say that the Senate ought to have an investigation itself, or there ought to be a joint investigation by the House and Senate, of all the distressing incidents that occurred in connection with the sinking of the S–4.

I am unable to understand why there should be such a bitter, persistent, and continuous fight against an investigation by a committee of the Senate, or a joint committee of the House and Senate, to determine who was responsible for that unfortunate accident. The more they fight it, the more insistent they are that it shall not be done, the more I think there is a reason why it should be done. I can not understand the persistent fight here for two or three months to prevent an investigation by a joint committee, three on the part of the Senate, named by the Vice President, and three named by the Speaker from the House, or by a committee formed of five Senators named by the Vice President. I think it is just, I think it is reasonable, I think it is fair, and I think the country wants this done, to satisfy themselves as to where the responsibility lies in connection with that unfortunate incident.

I am unwilling to surrender to the House, as we would surrender if we should adopt the resolution offered by the Senator from Maine. There has never been a vote in the House. It seems to be the opinion in the House that legislation is the result of the concurrence of the minds of conferees. Legislation means the concurrence of the minds of the House and Senate. As long as I am on a conference, when an important matter like this comes in I will never put up the white flag, as the Senator does, and agree to a resolution that would prevent a vote in the House which would show whether Members of the House wanted a joint committee or not.

I insist that we shall have an adherence, and then the House can determine whether they want a joint committee or not, as to whether they want to wash their hands of it, as to whether they have any interest in the misfortune in connection with the sinking of the S–4. If we have any interest in it, if we want to discharge the duties and obligations that we owe the country to see to the proper administration of the laws and the spending of the money appropriated, let us do it fully and completely or not at all.

I shall insist that this resolution be defeated and that we then adhere to the Senate amendment and afford an opportunity for a vote in the House.

Mr. HALE rose.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HALE. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. SWANSON. I am tired of going to conferences with the House and have the conferees of the House refuse by delay, refuse by all kinds of legerdemain, to permit the House to vote on propositions. If this matter had gone back to the House, they could have had a vote on it.

Mr. HALE. The Senator does not think that the House conferees were trying to delay this matter, does he?

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator has just stated that there was an appropriation contemplated to handle the matter. The President appointed a commission to investigate the aircraft industry without any law, and there is no necessity for any law here. The whole gist of this thing is an attempt to prevent the House of Representatives or the Senate from poking their noses, in a controlling way, into an investigation of the sinking of the S–4.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senator if he intimates that there has been any disposition on the part of the House conferees to delay this report? There has not been.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not know what they have done.

Mr. HALE. Both the Senate conferees and the House conferees tried in good faith to reach some agreement.

Mr. SWANSON. I stated my proposition to them.

Mr. HALE. No one man determines what shall be done.

Mr. SWANSON. Why was not a disagreement reported a long time ago?

Mr. HALE. Because we hoped we could reach some compromise.

Mr. SWANSON. I knew they would never compromise.

Mr. HALE. I hoped we could reach some compromise. The House has made a very liberal offer.

Mr. SWANSON. From the Senator's standpoint. The Senator is not the judge of my liberality. The Senator is not the judge of it, and he fought here to have no Senator on the commission, to have no Representative on it, nobody except the seven men named by the President, on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. HALE. Five men, not seven.

Mr. SWANSON. Five. There has never been an effort to have a commission appointed that would not have had on it a majority of outsiders. As a Senator I am not willing to serve upon a commission on which people from the outside control.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, if the amendment that was offered in the Senate were on the measure, would the outsiders have a majority on the committee?

Mr. SWANSON. Six.

Mr. HALE. Three from the House and three from the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. That would be six. Why does the Senator object——

Mr. HALE. Wait a minute.

Mr. SWANSON. Why does the Senator object to the Senate appointing a committee subject to its own control? Why has the Senator always fought that?

Mr. HALE. The Senator talks about a majority. I have already told him I would be glad to make it three on the part of the Senate and three on the part of the House.

Mr. SWANSON. I think the Senator would agree to anything in the world rather than have a complete, thorough congressional investigation of the sinking of the S–4.

Mr. HALE. The Senator can say what he wants to, but it does not seem to me that he is stating the facts. The Senator knows that if there are two or three Members of the Senate and two or three Members of the House, three scientific men, and two retired naval officers on the commission the commission will develop something that will be of some value; he knows that they will develop more of value than would a mere senatorial or a congressional committee.

Mr. SWANSON. All the great value you want to develop disappears when I ask you to limit it——

Mr. HALE. The Senator insists that his stand be approved by the Senate. I do not believe that the Senate wants to defeat the measure, as they will do unless they adopt this resolution.

Mr. SWANSON. In other words, the House will not consider the Senate amendment, but will defeat the joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. The House has gone a great deal further than the Senate has in offering to compromise. In the bill as originally prepared there was no congressional representation on the commission of any kind whatever. They very liberally offered to put on two or three Members from the House. All the Senate conferees offered to do was to drop out section 3 altogether.

Mr. SWANSON. And to let the Senate be precluded from making an investigation of any kind.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, this question involves something more and deeper, in my opinion, than a mere investigation into the unfortunate S–4 submarine disaster. It involves a question of whether or not the Senate of the United States is going to surrender to the wholesale criticism and denunciation of itself because of the fact that it has been indulging in important investigations of governmental activities. It is very apparent—and one does not need to be many years in this body to know—that the House of Representatives has no sympathy with investigations—that we can not get any joint investigation committee appointed by the House and Senate. A few years ago, after the allegations of scandalous neglect and maladministration in the Veterans' Bureau, the Senate passed a joint resolution providing for an investigation by a committee of the House and the Senate into the looting of money appropriated from the Public Treasury to take care of disabled soldiers; the House refused to join with the Senate in the investigation, and the Senate itself had to undertake it. The Senate alone has been left to do the business of investigating the excesses and abuses, the omissions and commissions of bureaus. If we are going to abandon inquiry by Congress into bureaucratic government, we might just as well abandon the principal functions of Congress and accept the theory of government now so popular here in Washington—bureaucracy.

I conceive of nothing more important for the Congress, in the absence of cooperation by the House, than for the Senate to insist upon a thorough and complete investigation and inquiry into all the alleged abuses which from time to time are inevitably going to creep into a large and much involved departmental Government such as ours, where tremendous expenditures of money are involved and inefficiency, negligence, and sometimes dishonest officials are found.

Only this morning I was discussing another subject, the investigation of which might some time have to be seriously considered, and that is the policy of one of our bureaus here in joining with real-estate promoters, financiers, and builders to construct buildings for the Government with the understanding that they will be leased by the Government as soon as they are constructed and thus do away with the necessity of the Government itself constructing its own buildings.

There are 150 such buildings which have been privately constructed and leased by the Government before they were built in the last few years under the present administration. Can we not conceive the possibility of abuses, of evils, of even graft in prearranging with certain speculators to buy land through private groups and to finance the construction of buildings for the Government with governmental leases in their hands before they begin to build?

I speak not merely in disapproval of such an unwise policy by our Government but more to indicate the great need for this branch of the Government, the Congress, to concern itself constantly with scrutinizing and inquiring into the work of the many Government bureaus. There can not be too much review or research by the Congress into its almost innumerable boards, departments, and commissions.

The extent of abuse and criticism that has been heaped upon the Senate by reason of investigations it has conducted is well known. Do not forget there is a campaign in this country to stop and prevent all such senatorial investigations in the future. If it can not be stopped then an endeavor will be made to bring about the next best method—form that kind of investigating committees which will be less harmful to the department or officials investigated. Such a one is the compromise which has been presented here now—a mixture of an executive committee and a congressional committee to investigate into the alleged negligence and misconduct of Government officials which involved and resulted in the loss of life of a large number of defenders of the Nation. But there is no need to dwell upon the shocking features of this accident or the general charge of gross incompetency in handling the work of rescue and salvage. Of far more importance now is the principle of preserving the legislative power of investigation unhampered and unrestricted by outside interference.

I am opposed to any investigation by a combination of Members of Congress and individuals appointed by the Executive authority. My experience as governor of my State and the experience I have had in the observations of such investigations elsewhere is that they usually result in accomplishing nothing. First of all, they are inconvenient. It is often not possible for private individuals to meet when convenient for Members of Congress, and it is not convenient for Members of Congress to meet when the outsiders are able to meet. It is very difficult for them to arrange a time to meet. Secondly, they come together with divided authority. Again, if there is any remedy required, if there is any legislation necessary, it must be acted upon in this body, and therefore it seems to me that the work of investigations of this character ought to be carried on by Members of the Senate, in the absence of the House cooperating. We might just as well begin to accept the view that private citizens be appointed to sit on our committees and conduct our hearings and study of legislation.

Mr. President, I consider this compromise arrangement of a commission to carry on this investigation, composed of members designated by the Executive and of Members of Congress, in every way unsatisfactory. We had better have none at all. I fully agree with all the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] has said. It is the entering wedge—that is the bad feature of it. It is the beginning of the end of open and thorough investigations by the people through their directly elected representatives. Every investigation we would have hereafter would be conducted in part by individuals named by the Executive. Suppose we had that arrangement in connection with some of the investigations which we have been conducting. What would have resulted? Suppose the Executive, President Harding, had been obliged or permitted to name citizens to investigate the allegations against his own Cabinet, corruption by members of his own Cabinet, where would we have been? I am opposed to a joint investigation committee in cases where the investigation is to be carried on by a commission composed of Members of Congress and appointees of the Executive, and I hope, therefore, the resolution will not be adopted.

This matter could have been disposed of and ended long ago, when we came back after the Christmas holidays, without any legislative act at all, without any Senate resolution or joint resolution. There is ample authority and power in every committee in this body to conduct an investigation relating to the purpose and work of the several committees. The Committee on Naval Affairs could have called before them these officers and other witnesses and made the investigation and then submitted to the Senate such recommendations as they might see fit. Months have gone by. Consideration has been postponed. I do not know what for unless it was to allow a cooling off of the public wrath and indignation which was aroused because of the S–4 disaster. I now, as before, take the position that we have an independent, vigorous investigation by a Senate committee. We ought not to have a joint investigation such as is provided for in the resolution, because it will be unproductive of results and a bad precedent to establish.

Mr. President, the Portland (Me.) Evening News recently had a very excellent analysis and summary of the inquiry that was made by the naval court of inquiry. I would like to have it read at the desk. It is very enlightening and deals with the subject admirably. There is a slight reference made to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], which I will ask to have omitted, because we are not concerned about that. I am only concerned about what it says with reference to the inquiry and the public rights in the premises.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

[From the Portland (Me.) Evening News, March 21, 1928]

WHAT OF THE "S–4"?

The S–4 has been brought to the surface and is docked at the Charlestown Navy Yard. But an examination of her interior merely deepens the mystery surrounding last December's fatal disaster.

"The wound in the hull is not sufficient in itself to have caused the sinking. Even with the battered compartment filled with water, she could have remained afloat, except for loss of control of the instruments in the control room." This is the statement of Capt. E. L. King, who had charge of the salvage operations.

What drove the men out of the control room remains unknown. The naval court could only find that they "from some undetermined cause were driven from the central operating department shortly after the collision" and "were therefore deprived of the use of practically all the ship's facilities for raising the vessel themselves or for aiding in attempts at their rescue."

It will be recalled that the findings of the naval court of inquiry, while vigorous, were inconclusive, and that dissent from them was registered by higher naval authorities. The court found that the cause of the failure of the S–4 to take proper action prior to the collision, when the Coast Guard destroyer Paulding was still 75 yards away, could "not be determined absolutely." It found the S–4's dead commander and the commander of the Paulding jointly to blame for the collision.

In regard to the rescue operations, the court found that Rear Admiral Brumby, who was in charge of them, "had not the familiarity with the essential details of construction of submarines and the knowledge of rescuing vessels and the knowledge of the actual work being carried on by his subordinates necessary to direct intelligently the important operations of which he was in charge."

It further found—and note the contradiction in these findings—that while the rescue plans were "conceived by an expert staff * * * were logical, intelligent, and were diligently executed with good judgment and the greatest possible expedition, yet Rear Admiral Brumby failed to contribute that superior and intelligent guidance, force, and sound judgment expected from an officer of his length of service, experience, and position." The court therefore recommended that Rear Admiral Brumby be detached from command of the control force.

It is not clear how rescue plans, which (in the same sentence) the court declares to have been "logical, intelligent, and diligently executed, with good judgment and the greatest possible expedition," could likewise have lacked "intelligent guidance, force, and sound judgment" on the part of the officer in charge of them.

Nevertheless, a reading of the testimony will leave no one in doubt of Admiral Brumby's lack of qualification to carry out this particular work. To question after question bearing vitally on the saving of the lives of the imprisoned men, he was obliged to answer that he did not know. To his credit it should be stated that he made no attempt to "bluff" and to cover up his want of knowledge.

The judge advocate general, Rear Admiral Edward H. Campbell, dissented from the court's findings in regard to Admiral Brumby, saying that, in view of their adverse nature the court erred in not making that officer a defendant, which it had full authority to do.

The next higher authority, the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, Rear Admiral Richard H. Leigh, dissented from holding the late Lieutenant Commander Jones directly and personally responsible for his share of the collision, and asserted his view that the facts found by the court did not support its opinions. Meanwhile Andrew Mellon, who, as Secretary of the Treasury, controls the Coast Guard Service, registered his dissent by saying "the Treasury Department * * * can not * * * permit an experienced, capable officer in its Coast Guard to be blamed for a collision for which this department has determined after careful investigation that he was not responsible."

And there you are.

Three relatively unimportant officers are picked as "goats." But in the case of Lieutenant Commander Baylis, his chief, Secretary Mellon, emphatically repudiates the finding. In the case of Rear Admiral Brumby the judge advocate general likewise demurs against the finding, and criticizes the court for making it. As for Lieut. Commander Roy K. Jones of the S–4—he is dead. He can not answer. And Rear Admiral Leigh takes exception, likewise, to the finding in his case. But even assuming the correctness of the court's verdict, of what use or importance is it? Singling out three figures in the disaster, does not help to determine the true and ultimate responsibility nor does it make a recurrence of this tragedy either impossible or even improbable. Another S–4 disaster could occur to-morrow.

For all the testimony and findings to date the public is little wiser. It knows that the submarine went down under circumstances which naval officers at first declared unavoidable, but which to-day stand revealed as wholly avoidable and needless.

The public knows that the officer in charge of the rescue operations was scathingly condemned by the naval court and that his testimony showed him to be unfitted by experience to direct the work of rescue. At the same time, the people do not know why, in this great disaster which shook the country from coast to coast, and was a challenge to all the ability, ingenuity, and the resourcefulness of the Navy Department to save men still alive, an officer so little qualified was appointed to take charge. Who was responsible for picking him? Was he the best man available? Had the Navy none better than he? Far more important than fixing the blame on a dead lieutenant commander of the Navy, a Coast Guard lieutenant commander, and on a rear admiral, is to find out as far as possible:

1. Why the accident occurred. (This is not necessarily an unfathomable mystery.)
2. Why the various devices to save the men after the accident were made inoperative.
3. Why the appliances which might have been used to get air into the submarine were not available in time.
4. What other safety appliances which were not used might have been used to good effect.
5. Why it was not possible to raise it in a very much shorter time.
6. Why the rescue operations were so ineffectively carried out.
7. And (most important of all)—what steps have been taken, are being taken, and will be taken, to make the submarines of our Navy safe for their men in the future against so needless a collision, and so bungled an attempt at rescue.

Only by obtaining a satisfactory answer to this last question and by preventing the loss of more lives can the American people in any way compensate for the 40 lives lost on the S–4.

In the wake of the profound emotion brought about by the tragedy, an investigation by other than naval officers was sought in Congress. Certain Senators demanded a congressional investigation. Others fought it and, finally compelled by nation-wide indignation to do something, urged instead an inquiry by a commission which would, in effect, have been picked by the Secretary of the Navy. Public opinion finally forced the abandonment of that plan because of the widespread conviction that for the head of the Navy Department to investigate the department's shortcomings would lead nowhere.

A congressional inquiry was therefore voted in the Senate, despite the wishes of the chairman of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, in the matter. The measure went over to the House for conference.

The Navy Department—the administration—obviously does not want an investigation. The real facts—the real responsibility of those higher up—are to be covered up, if possible. Yet with not a move made that would make another such catastrophe impossible, a searching inquiry that would bring to light whatever there may be to prevent another needless sacrifice of young lives as in the S–51 and the S–4 becomes a supreme national duty. It is a solemn obligation to those gallant dead, who from their death trap, less than 20 fathoms beneath the surface, tapped out a call for help to the American Nation—and tapped in vain.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I think that editorial in a very direct and concise way sets forth the reasons why a congressional investigation should be made and why the investigation by the naval board of inquiry from the public standpoint was unsatisfactory.

I simply wish to say, in conclusion, that I have no objection to an investigation by experts being made by and for the Executive; I would be glad to have the Navy Department have the benefit of all the expert advice and technical assistance that it may need; but I do deplore the abandonment by Congress of its plain duty, which I conceive to be that of a safety valve and check upon the bureaus of the Government. I can not imagine anything that the bureaus would welcome more than a sign hung outside the doors of Congress: "Hereafter all bureaus are to be investigated by other bureaus of the Executive department; Congress has given up the business of making any inquiry into the derelictions of public officials."

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the article inserted in the RECORD by the junior Senator from Massachusetts does not greatly disturb me. The Portland News is a newspaper that was started, I believe, some time last summer in my home city of Portland. I have the good fortune or the misfortune at the present time to be a contestant for renomination to the Senate. One of the principal functions of that newspaper seems to be to oppose everything I do and to laud everything that my opponent does. So I do not feel very greatly distressed by what this newspaper has published.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I was aware of the fact that the newspaper appeared to be in opposition to the Senator from Maine, and I had eliminated from the article a short line which, by the way, did not in any way reflect upon the Senator other than to refer to his connection with and mistaken views on this matter. I should like to ask the Senator, aside from the fact of the political opposition of that newspaper to him, is there anything in the paper's analysis of the naval board of inquiry that he finds fault with or criticizes? Is it not a correct and enlightening statement in regard to this accident and its problems?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, before replying to that inquiry, I should want to consider the article. I simply heard the statement that it was an article from this particular newspaper, but I did not carefully attend to what it stated.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am not concerned about the political position of this newspaper, but I am concerned about the fact that it gave an analysis of the report of the naval board of inquiry which seemed to me to be excellent and reiterated solid reasons why a congressional investigation should be made.

Mr. HALE. I have already given my views about what I think should be done.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I am entirely in accord with what the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] have said and the action they urge. I greatly regret that the department has seen fit to try to dictate and to have control of this investigation. As a strong supporter of the Navy, and as a believer in the fine body of men that compose it, I feel that they are entitled to have a thorough investigation of the S–4 disaster, and to have the facts clearly disclosed in a way that will make for public confidence. I do not believe that it is a sound policy or a correct one to allow the department in charge to have anything to say in the control of an investigation into a disaster that has happened under that department.

In the sinking of the S–4 we have suffered one of the most deplorable calamities that have happened to the Navy in years. The heroism of the gallant men who served on the S–4 has touched the country deeply, as have the horror and the tragic character of the disaster which overwhelmed them. What the people want to know and what they have a right to know is, Was everything done that should have been done to have prevented the disaster, and after it occurred was everything done that could have been done to raise the S–4 as quickly as possible?

The President, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, could appoint—and I wish he had appointed—experts to go into the matter. I have no objection to that whatsoever.

There has been the usual court of inquiry held, and the court of inquiry has submitted a report that is apparently not satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury or to the Secretary of the Navy, the heads of the two departments involved. Now, we are faced with the desire of the Secretary of the Navy to have experts on the commission that is to be appointed to investigate this matter further, experts whom he is to pick. That really is the crux of the whole situation. Is a department head going to dominate investigations relative to his department or are the Senate and the House going to assert themselves and to insist on conducting the investigation and bringing out the facts? If Congress shall conduct the investigation, the public, in my opinion, will be satisfied that the work will be thoroughly done. If the department or appointees of the department shall conduct it, the public will not be satisfied.

I can not see how in any way it can be other than harmful to the Navy to have the resolution agreed to, for the public will feel—and with some justification—that the investigation which is proposed will not be as properly or as thoroughly undertaken as it will be, in my opinion, if the Senate or the House shall conduct it. I therefore am going to vote to let this matter go back to the House so as to ascertain if the House conferees are right in their opinion that the House itself does not want to aid the Senate in the investigation.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Massachusetts in reference to this investigation. When men are deliberately robbing and stealing from the farmers of this country, and an investigation is requested, and the Attorney General of the United States refuses to allow the people whom he has under his control to investigate that matter properly, and then refuses to allow what reports they do make to be known to those outside of his office who are very much interested in the matter, I think it should be lesson enough to this body that there will not be a fair investigation made of anything crooked connected with the present administration, whether it be the sinking of the S–4, or whatnot.

On the 17th of October, 1927, this letter was written by the Attorney General of the United States:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., October 17, 1927.

Hon. COLE L. BLEASE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I beg to acknowledge your letter of the 13th instant inquiring what has been done in the matter of irregularities relating to the business of the Intermediate Credit Bank of Columbia, S. C., and expressing a desire for a copy of the report on the investigation of those irregularities made recently by accountants of this department. You suggest that if the reports are true some action should be taken, either by the Senate or this department, with reference to some certain officers.

The reports of investigators of this department are confidential, and it is against the rules of the department to furnish copies upon request. I beg to advise you, however, that the accountants have been making a very careful examination and that a number of indictments have been returned, which are, of course, on file at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of South Carolina. I have no doubt that Major Meyer will prosecute those indictments promptly and vigorously.

Very truly yours,

JOHN G. SARGENT, Attorney General.

There have been no such indictments returned as spoken of in that letter of the Attorney General against anybody connected with the Intermediate Credit Bank of the city of Columbia. That letter is a direct, positive dodging of the question at issue in that bank investigation and goes off to a little credit bank down in Beaufort, S. C.

On November 2 the Attorney General wrote the following letter; and these letters are signed, not by any subordinate, but by John G. Sargent, Attorney General.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., November 2, 1927.

Hon. COLE L. BLEASE,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I desire to acknowledge your letter of the 24th ultimo, referring further to the alleged irregularities involving the South Carolina Agricultural Credit Co., of Beaufort, the Beaufort bank, and the Federal Intermediate Credit Bank of Columbia, and expressing the hope that I will see to it that the man higher up is properly looked after.

I beg to assure you that that case will have, and is having, the careful attention of this department with a view to the prompt and vigorous prosecution of every person involved who is found to have committed acts prohibited by the Federal criminal statutes. If any information as to persons other than those indicted comes into your possession, may I ask that you furnish it immediately to this department or to the United States attorney?

Sincerely yours,

JOHN G. SARGENT, Attorney General.

Mr. President, enough testimony has been furnished to that department and enough testimony has been furnished to the Senate upon which any jury in the world, unless they be bought, would convict Arnold, the ex-superintendent or assistant superintendent of the Atlanta (Ga.) Penitentiary, and put him in the penitentiary, where he belongs. Nothing has been done, however, and the department to-day is not only attempting not to do anything, but they are attempting to keep a Senate committee or the officers under the department from bringing these prosecutions; and the only reason I can see for it is that they are afraid that this rascality and thievery will injure the Republican Party in the coming election, because the institution is under their domination and control.

Now, Mr. President, I propose to furnish some more proof as to what is going on.

On March 24 I received the following letter:

Senator COLE L. BLEASE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am wondering if there is anything that could be done to assist the farmers in getting service from the intermediate credit bank at Columbia. My application was filled out for a loan of $3,000 on February 10, 1928. February 20 I received a notice through Mr. Husbands that it had been approved and a check would be down shortly. Two weeks later I received notice that it had been approved but reduced to $2,500, which I accepted as it was so late. March 12 I received notice that it had been approved for the full amount, but required real-estate mortgage, which I prepared and forwarded the same day, in addition to the securities which I had offered. My securities are more this year than they were last and for the same amount.

On March 15 I went to Columbia and talked to Mr. Daniels. He first told me that I would not get any money. I asked to see Mr. Arnold, but he refused to see me. Mr. Daniels told me to get my application back up there and he would try to get my loan through. On March 20 I received notice that my loan had been approved, and on the 24th I received check, though cut to $2,500. Mr. Arnold told Mr. Husbands that the people were standing between him and the Lord; that he would step aside and let the Lord have them. So it seems to me that it is very necessary that something be done.

It seems impossible even when a loan is approved to get the money in time enough to be of much service to the farmers, and my case, of course, is one of several thousand similar ones. I had the same trouble last year. It was the last of March before I got this money, so I had to buy fertilizers and get them in the ground the best way I could, which meant a great loss to me.

I have always paid my obligations on or before maturity.

If I could get my money by February 15 I could save a big bit in my fertilizer bill. For instance, I can buy material and mix 8–3–3 at a cost of $19 per ton. If I do not have this time to do this in, I will have to buy a ready-mixed fertilizer at a cost of $25 per ton, so you can see what a loss it is to be thrown out.

Hoping that you will do something to relieve the situation, I am,

Very truly yours,

——— ———.

The people in South Carolina would like mighty well for Mr. Arnold to "step aside," whether the devil or the Lord gets him makes no difference to them.

On October 22 I received a letter from Beaufort sending in a report sent by the head of this bank to the Atlantic Commission Co., of New York and Philadelphia, instructing that the produce be sold over which this bank was supposed to have a mortgage, and, after its sale, that the money should be deposited in the Atlantic Co.'s bank—sneaking it out of the State of South Carolina into hands where they did not believe that an investigation would reach it. I ask that that letter and a letter signed by the South Carolina Agricultural Credit Co., along with a letter from Pelion, which I received this morning, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BEAUFORT, S. C., October 22, 1927.

Hon. COLE L. BLEASE,
Anderson, S. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Inclosed you will find a copy of a letter written to the Beaufort Truck Growers Cooperative Association by R. C. Horne, jr., president of the South Carolina Agricultural Credit Co., which I caused to be recorded in this office owing to my having heard that the president of the intermediate bank was anxious to get the original and later did get it and up to this time has not returned it to the parties in control of the Beaufort Cooperative Association. I understand that certain of the defense counsel have a letter written by Arnold to the Beaufort Truck Growers Cooperative Association ordering them to do identically the same thing that is set out in this letter, so you see they were not as innocent bystanders as they would like people to believe.

You might keep this letter for your files.

With kindest regards to you and Mrs. Blease, I am,

Very truly,

——— ———.

SOUTH CAROLINA AGRICULTURAL CREDIT CO.,
Columbia, S. C., April 27, 1926.

BEAUFORT TRUCK GROWERS COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION,
Beaufort, S. C.

GENTLEMEN: You are hereby requested and directed to have the Atlantic Commission Co., of New York and Philadelphia, make the checks for produce sold for the Beaufort Truck Growers Cooperative Association payable to the order of H. B. Macklin. These checks to be deposited at once in the Hanover National Bank, of New York, to the credit of the Beaufort Bank, Beaufort, S. C., said Beaufort Bank will in turn credit the Beaufort Truck Growers Cooperative Association and its individual members with all the funds turned over to said H. B. Macklin by the said Atlantic Commission Co., of New York and Philadelphia.

This money shall be credited to the accounts of said members of the Beaufort Truck Growers Cooperative Association with the South Carolina Agricultural Credit Co., said South Carolina Agricultural Credit Co. now having crop mortgages over crops of the members of the Beaufort Truck Growers Cooperative Association.

Yours very truly,

SOUTH CAROLINA AGRICULTURAL CREDIT CO.,
By R. C. HORNE, Jr., President.

PELION, S. C., March 24, 1928.

Senator BLEASE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I notice that the Committee on Banking and Currency may not take action at this time on the two resolutions pending in the Senate for an investigation of the land bank at Columbia. They are robbing the farmers under the guise of cheap money. I will mail you evidence if you think it necessary, that will prove what I have said.

Yours truly,

——— ———.

Mr. BLEASE. When one distinguished department, one standing alone, or supposed to be, to bring criminals to justice, to give the people of this country what is due them, not only refuses to act, but conceals in that department that which will prove the guilt of the criminals, and refuses to give it to the people or to those who are most interested in bringing this matter to light, why send this S–4 matter to a department already choked and fixed—hog tied, if you please—knowing that they will lose their jobs if they tell the truth, and lying, possibly, to get an increase of salary?

I have this morning an article from the Greenville News, of South Carolina, dated Columbia, S. C., March 24, as follows:

Testimony that the Intermediate Credit Bank of Columbia had lost more than a million dollars was given by officials of the bank at the recent trial of seven former officers of the Beaufort bank and the South Carolina Agricultural Credit Co.—

They always dodge off on Beaufort, a side issue—on charges of conspiracy to defraud the Federal institution. Three of the seven defendants were convicted and sentenced to prison terms.

In their defense the seven on trial sought to show that officials of the intermediate credit bank were aware of the irregularities in the paper which was discounted by the Columbia institution for the Beaufort concern.

Mendel L. Smith—

One of the gentlemen whom I have named here as a witness—

was one of the defense counsel. J. D. E. Meyer prosecuted the case as United States district attorney, while Ernest Cochran presided over the trial as United States district judge. Edgar A. Brown was also of defense staff. R. A. Cooper, of Washington, was chairman of the Federal Farm Loan Board until a few months ago.

Mr. President, there is the proof. What more does Attorney General Sargent want? What more does the Senate want? Why do these committeemen continue to carry that resolution in the committee, thereby protecting those who are charged with robbing the farmers of South Carolina by the officers of this Government under a Republican régime?

I will tell you why. People of one certain kind will protect those of another certain kind. As the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] well said, "Birds of a feather will flock together." I ask the Senate either to see that that resolution comes out of that committee either with a favorable or an unfavorable report, and that we are given the privilege of passing upon it, or that you confess to the people of this country that you are afraid that you might discover another Teapot Dome scandal by reason of that bank in the city of Columbia, and not only in the city of Columbia but possibly all over this Government, absolutely stealing—and I mean that in the meanest sense—from the pockets of the farmers of my State, and being protected by the Attorney General of the United States of America by his own letters, the originals of which I have, and any man who desires to see them can see them.

Yes; send your resolution to the committee; send it to one of the departments, you gentlemen who are interested in the S–4 matter, and you will find just what I have found here. The further you get, the deeper they will bury it; and after a while it will be so painted and pictured and fixed up that instead of thinking thieves and scoundrels have charge of the bank in Columbia you will actually believe that some of the people that this man says have separated him from the Lord have been converted into angels.

I do not want the investigation to hurt anybody unless they deserve to be hurt; but I want the investigation; and I shall keep bringing it before the Senate until some action is taken on it, to let the people of my State and this whole country have money at a reasonable rate, have money at a proper sum, have money without lawyers' charges, big fees, for the purpose of getting a loan through; have banks that the poor man can go to and get a loan from without hiring some agent to make the deal for him, without hiring some outside lawyer to go to the bank lawyer and pay him a part of his commission to help him get a loan.

Gentlemen talk about helping the farmers of this country. I hear a lot of talk about it, but I have seen very few people who really voted to help them. I do not want to be on the committee, because I do not know a thing in the world about banks and the banking business, except when I use to go and pay interest about every 90 days or six months on a note or two I happen to have in the bank.

I do not want to be on the committee. I want men on the committee who understand the situation, men who can get the truth, and if these men are not guilty as charged in these letters and affidavits and the evidence in the courthouse at Columbia, let them be found not guilty and discharged. At the same time, let the people know that you have an interest in this bank and in them, and that you want the crookedness, if any there, out of this bank. Let the people of my State regain their confidence in this Government so that they may believe the Government is trying to help them, and not trying to rob them, as is accused here.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gerry	McLean	Shipstead
Barkley	Gillett	McMaster	Shortridge
Blaine	Glass	McNary	Smith
Blease	Gooding	Mayfield	Smoot
Borah	Gould	Moses	Steck
Broussard	Greene	Neely	Steiwer
Bruce	Hale	Norbeck	Stephens
Capper	Harris	Norris	Swanson
Caraway	Harrison	Nye	Thomas
Copeland	Hawes	Oddie	Tydings
Curtis	Hayden	Overman	Tyson
Cutting	Heflin	Phipps	Wagner
Dale	Johnson	Pine	Walsh, Mass.
Dill	Jones	Pittman	Warren
Edwards	Kendrick	Robinson, Ark.	Waterman
Fess	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.	Watson
Fletcher	King	Sackett	Wheeler
Frazier	McKellar	Sheppard	Willis

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] are detained from the Senate in attendance at the funeral of the late Senator FERRIS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

THOMAS W. CUNNINGHAM, RECUSANT WITNESS

The SERGEANT AT ARMS (David S. Barry). Mr. President, I have to report that, acting under the authority of a warrant issued by the Senate, I took Thomas W. Cunningham into custody this morning through my deputy. He appeared before Judge Dickinson and applied for a writ of habeas corpus, which was granted, and he was released on $1,000 bail, returnable on April 5, 1928.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on the 22d instant the Special Committee Investigating Expenditures in Senatorial Primary and General Elections submitted a special report in connection with Thomas W. Cunningham, a recusant witness who had appeared upon two occasions before said committee and had refused upon each occasion to answer proper and pertinent questions propounded to him by the committee. The questions related to the investigation being conducted by the committee, and among other things were asked for the purpose of obtaining information proper and pertinent to said investigation, and for the purpose of aiding the Senate in the matter of legislation. The report recommended that because of the defiant and contumacious conduct of said Thomas W. Cunningham he be adjudged in contempt of the committee and of the Senate. Following said report the committee offered Resolution 179, which was adopted by the Senate. Resolution 179 is as follows:

Whereas it appears from the report of the special committee investigating expenditures in senatorial primary and general elections that a witness, Thomas W. Cunningham, twice called before the committee making inquiry as directed by the Senate under S. Res. 195 of the Sixty-ninth Congress, declined to answer certain questions relative and pertinent to the matter then under inquiry: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President of the Senate issue his warrant commanding the Sergeant at Arms or his deputy to take into custody the body of the said Thomas W. Cunningham wherever found, and to bring the said Thomas W. Cunningham before the bar of the Senate, then and there or elsewhere, as it may direct, to answer such questions pertinent to the matter under inquiry as the Senate, through its said committee, or the President of the Senate, may propound, and to keep the said Thomas W. Cunningham in custody to await further order of the Senate.

Pursuant to the report and Resolution 179 the Vice President issued his warrant in due form, commanding the Sergeant at Arms or his deputy to take into custody the body of said Thomas W. Cunningham and to bring him before the bar of the Senate. The Vice President delivered the warrant to the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, David S. Barry, who duly served the same by his deputy, John J. McGrain, upon Thomas W. Cunningham in the city of Philadelphia, Pa. The Sergeant at Arms has just reported that he took into custody through his deputy said Thomas W. Cunningham, and that the latter applied for a writ of habeas corpus, which was granted by Judge Dickinson, and said Cunningham was thereupon released upon $1,000 bail, returnable April 5, 1928.

Mr. President, I am directed by the Special Committee to Investigate Expenditures in Senatorial Primary and General Elections to submit a resolution in the form of a motion. Pursuant to such direction I move that the President of the Senate be directed to certify to the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia the report made on March 22, 1928—being Report No. 603—by the Special Committee Investigating Expenditures in Senatorial Primary and General Elections, relating to the contumacy of Thomas W. Cunningham, a witness before the committee, for appropriate action by that officer.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does this follow the precedent recently established in what is known as the Stewart case?

Mr. KING. I think it does.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 183), as follows:

Resolved, That the Special Committee Investigating Expenditures in Senatorial Primary and General Elections is authorized to employ counsel at a cost of not to exceed $2,500, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to represent the Senate in any proceedings taken by Thomas W. Cunningham in any court to obtain his release from the custody of the Sergeant at Arms.

Mr. KING. I move the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Is the resolution in the same form as that offered in a previous case?

Mr. KING. It is, as I recall that resolution.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It provides the same amount of money?

Mr. KING. The same amount.

Mr. SMOOT. I think under the law it will have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I may say that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate approved of a similar resolution in a previous case.

Mr. SMOOT. I dare say the committee will approve this resolution immediately, but under the law it has to go to that committee.

Mr. KING. I have no objection, and shall ask the reference of the resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I express the hope that the committee will act as promptly as convenient. When action is reported by the committee I shall renew my motion for the adoption of the resolution. For the moment I shall not ask for its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Will the Senator from Wisconsin suffer an interruption to consider a matter not related to the bill before the Senate? The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, desires to submit a report which will take but a moment to be acted upon.

Mr. FESS. Will the Senator yield for that purpose?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. FESS. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back Senate Resolution 183 favorably without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF SINKING OF SUBMARINE "S–4"

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the resolution (H. J. Res. 131) providing for a commission to investigate and report upon the facts connected with the sinking of the submarine S–4 and upon methods and appliances for the protection of submarines.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I would like to amend the resolution I offered by changing the language "two Senators and two Representatives" to "three Senators and three Representatives."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas will state his inquiry.

Mr. CURTIS. The first action for the Senate to take is to ask for a conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would be the ruling of the present occupant of the chair, if the point is made.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand it, the only way to handle this properly is to ask for a conference, and if a conference is agreed to, then let the Senator offer his resolution, which will be treated as an instruction.

Mr. HALE. This is not an instruction; it is merely a resolution to get the sense of the Senate. I propose to offer one motion if the resolution is agreed to, and another if it is not agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Just a second. If a vote is had upon this resolution and the resolution is defeated, is it then the intention of the Senator to ask for a conference?

Mr. HALE. I am going to ask that the Senate adhere to its amendments.

Mr. SWANSON. That was the understanding.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I understand that the Senator is presenting the resolution as by unanimous consent.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection if there is an agreement between the two sides, but I think the other course would have been the better one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the resolution as modified by the suggestion of the Senator from Maine.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the compromise proposed by the House conferees on House Joint Resolution 131, providing for the addition of three Senators and three Representatives to the commission provided for in said joint resolution, should be accepted by the Senate conferees in the event that a further conference be ordered.

Mr. HALE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Has consent been given for the consideration of the resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report was adopted some time ago.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The resolution is not in order except by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not object to the consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that consent had been given.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But I think that for the preservation of orderly procedure in the Senate it should be understood that this resolution is considered only by unanimous consent at this time.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah will state it.

Mr. KING. May I inquire by what parliamentary procedure the resolution comes before us in advance of the disposition of the conference report?

Mr. HALE. I do not think it is in the nature of instructions at all. It is simply a resolution to get the sense of the Senate so I can tell what sort of motion to make afterwards, whether to move to insist or to adhere.

Mr. SWANSON. In order to get a vote to adhere and end the discussion and in order to enable us to get a vote in the House on our amendments, which it has been impossible to do, when the pending resolution is defeated, which I hope it will be——

Mr. HALE. And I hope that it will not be.

Mr. SWANSON. And which I shall vote against——

Mr. HALE. And I am going to vote for it.

Mr. SWANSON. Then I am going to move, or the Senator from Maine will move, that we adhere to the amendments of the Senate. Then we can get a vote in the House on the amendments of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Maine, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] and vote "nay."

Mr. NORBECK (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART], who is absent. If that Senator were present, he would vote "nay." If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL]. If he were present and permitted to vote, that Senator would vote "yea," and I would vote "nay."

Mr. TYSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], who is absent. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] are necessarily absent, attending the funeral of the late Senator Ferris.

Mr. PHIPPS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. On account of his absence and not knowing how he would vote, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. COPELAND. Upon this matter I have a pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]. Transferring that pair to the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], I vote "nay."

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] being necessarily absent, I transfer my pair to him and vote "nay."

Mr. PHIPPS. I find that I can transfer my pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE], which I do, and vote "yea."

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DENEEN] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]; and

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS].

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—24

Capper	Gould	McNary	Smoot
Curtis	Greene	Moses	Steiwer
Cutting	Hale	Oddie	Warren
Dale	Jones	Phipps	Waterman
Fess	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.	Watson
Gillett	McLean	Sackett	Willis

NAYS—41

Barkley	Frazier	McMaster	Steck
Blaine	Gerry	Mayfield	Swanson
Blease	Glass	Neely	Thomas
Borah	Harris	Norris	Tydings
Broussard	Harrison	Nye	Tyson
Bruce	Hawes	Overman	Wagner
Caraway	Hayden	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Copeland	Heflin	Robinson, Ark.	Wheeler
Dill	Kendrick	Sheppard
Edwards	King	Shipstead
Fletcher	McKellar	Smith

NOT VOTING—28

Ashurst	Deneen	Johnson	Reed, Pa.
Bayard	du Pont	La Follette	Schall
Bingham	Edge	Metcalf	Shortridge
Black	George	Norbeck	Simmons
Bratton	Goff	Pine	Stephens
Brookhart	Gooding	Ransdell	Trammell
Couzens	Howell	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mont.

So Mr. HALE's motion was rejected.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, in accordance with the statement which I made before the vote was taken, I now move that the Senate adhere to its amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, I desire to say just a few words before the vote is taken. I have been literally flooded with letters from all parts of the country with reference to the S–4 disaster. There seems to be a well-founded suspicion, at least, that the disaster was caused by the zeal of the Coast Guard destroyer Paulding in chasing what it is said were rum runners. At the time of the disaster the man on the bridge was an inexperienced officer, who admitted that he would not know a periscope if he saw one.

I do not think the country will ever be satisfied with any hybrid investigating committee that will tend to whitewash those responsible. I am thoroughly opposed to any such committee. I am in favor of a real investigating committee which will go to the root of the situation and tell the public the truth. Under no other circumstances will the country be satisfied. I am, therefore, opposed to any compromise with the House or with anybody else. I believe that if we can not have a real investigation by a joint committee of the House and Senate, we should have a real investigation by the Senate itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine, that the Senate adhere to its amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

OIL SCANDAL AND CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I desire to announce at this time that at next Thursday's session of the Senate, as soon as I shall be able to obtain the floor in my own right, I expect to address the Senate on the subject of the naval oil leases and Teapot Dome.

I make this announcement now because I understand the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] will not have returned until that time from attending the funeral services of our late colleague from Michigan, Mr. Ferris, but that he will be here on Thursday. I promised him I would not attempt to speak on the subject before his return, and it is necessary for me to leave the city that same evening. So I thought it well to make the announcement at this time.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the routine business to-morrow morning the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar until 2 o'clock, unless the calendar is sooner disposed of.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection to that arrangement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON in the chair). Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS AND GAME

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, Senate bill 1271.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1271) to more effectively meet the obligations of the United States under the migratory bird treaty with Great Britain by lessening the dangers threatening migratory game birds from drainage and other causes, by the acquisition of areas of land and of water to furnish in perpetuity reservations for the adequate protection of such birds; and by providing funds for the establishment of such areas, their maintenance and improvement, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] is recognized.

Mr. BLAINE resumed the speech begun by him on Wednesday last. His speech entire is as follows:

Wednesday, March 21, 1928

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, in the consideration I shall give to Senate bill 1271, I hope that I shall be credited with a proper motive in my opposition, for my objections to this bill are in no way facetious or frivolous.

I have no doubt but that the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] has a sincere desire to conserve wild life. I do not doubt for one moment that he believes that this measure will conserve wild life. I think the Senator and I will agree to the proposition that in the conservation of wild life there should be a consideration of certain fundamentals that relate to mankind; that there is a relationship between all living things; that there must be a sort of balancing and counterbalancing of nature if we are to conserve and make possible the continuity of human life. Human life depends upon the lower order of animal life, and can not exist without the preservation of all wild life.

We probably will differ as to the method and the procedure to be employed in the conservation of wild life. Life is a precious thing, whether there is a consciousness that arises out of the human soul or out of the instincts of the lower order of life. The taking of life may be justified; but when it is not justified it is a cruel, inhuman, and immoral act to take the life of a single thing that is essential to this well-ordered world of ours, not designed by man, but designed by a Power that has created all things, and the design of whom is to perpetuate all things.

As I conceive this measure to be, and as I think I shall be able to demonstrate beyond the peradventure of a doubt, if this bill is enacted into law, the result will be the destruction of wild life. This is not a conservation measure. This is a measure that promotes vandalism of our wild life. It is a measure that is sailing under false colors; but I want to say in passing now that the author of this bill has no design and no motive to bring about its enactment under false colors. I think, however, that he has been led into error through a limited public propaganda which, if it succeeds, is going to result in the destruction of wild life.

This measure has back of it certain selfish interests with which the Senator from South Dakota has no connection. There have been proponents of this legislation outside of Congresses and outside of legislatures who wanted and who still want to set up a system of game preserves that in effect would result in the exclusion of all others from the enjoyment of these game preserves except those who have the leisure and the funds with which to make use of these preserves.

I am of the opinion—and it is not one drawn from my imagination but one that is written in the very bill itself—that this bill is designed to conserve wild life just for one purpose, and that purpose is to kill, quite regardless of the justification of the killing.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I do not want to interrupt the Senator if he would rather proceed.

Mr. BLAINE. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORBECK. This bill provides mainly for the purchase of land. It provides, further, that there shall be no hunting on those reservations, except that 40 per cent of the land may be thrown open to hunting in case there is a surplus of game. Is that the feature to which the Senator objects?

Mr. BLAINE. I conceive the results that will flow from this bill entirely differently from the way the Senator from South Dakota does. Our difference may be due to a misunderstanding of what flows from the provisions contained in this bill, and which I will very shortly point out.

Mr. NORBECK. In regard to the Senator's reference to wild life, he understands that this bill has been drawn on this theory, that a good deal of the wild life is to be used for the benefit of man. Under this plan we raise ducks and geese for the purpose of killing them, just the same as we do turkeys, and chickens, and domestic animals. In other words, civilization has been striving all the time to raise more animals so as to have more food. The same thought is carried out in this bill; that is, what is the use having a million geese eating up all the farmers raise unless those geese can be secured for human use? I do not want to have any misunderstanding about the purpose of the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. I thank the Senator. I understand the purpose as explained by the Senator, and I will get to that very shortly; but just presently, in passing, if the provisions of the bill will result as the Senator suggests, there is no reason why the little boy in blue jeans should pay a dollar a year toward a fund out of which will be created an army of game wardens, Federal officials, reaching out their strong, heavy hand upon those who really need this wild life for food. I will get to that very shortly. I am going to cover the whole subject.

Mr. NORBECK. May I ask whether the State of Wisconsin charges a license fee of a dollar for hunting at the present time?

Mr. BLAINE. I will get to that also.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit an interruption, not only must the boy pay the dollar license, but that very dollar will be used to employ game wardens, who receive their authority from Washington, D. C., to go around and interfere with people outside the reservation.

Mr. BLAINE. Yes. I want to say, in answer to the question of the Senator from South Dakota, that my State of Wisconsin does require for hunting a license fee of $1 per year, and that the State of Wisconsin has fully and efficiently carried out her duty and obligation under the laws enacted by the National Congress, and under the treaty with Great Britain, with reference to migratory birds. It is a police power which she exercises, under amendments 9 and 10 to our Constitution, a power which we are exercising effectually. There is no reason for interference by a centralized government 1,000 miles away from the homes of those boys, those farmers, those city workers, those in our villages, who are obeying the laws and conserving the wild life. Here is a bill in which it is proposed to extend the arm of a bureaucratic administration, located here in the city of Washington, far, far away, with the result that those who can least afford to pay, that those who must, through necessity, have this wild life for food, are unable, on account of circumstances or of distance and financial considerations, to approach this king of the wild here in Washington, a bureaucratic organization, to seek relief from the arbitrary acts of a game warden.

Mr. NORBECK. May I call the Senator's attention to the fact that there are no game preserves to be established in any State except in cooperation with the State? It is possible the Senator has reference to the Federal game wardens who are provided in the act of 10 years ago. Wisconsin to-day has a Federal game warden enforcing the laws of Wisconsin, as far as he is able to reach. It is not a new matter. That is provided in the law now.

Mr. DILL. The Senator knows there are only 24 game wardens in 48 States, and this will provide a tremendous fund.

Mr. NORBECK. Will the Senator permit me to ask how many game wardens the State of Wisconsin has?

Mr. BLAINE. All that the dollar license fee will support.

Mr. NORBECK. About a hundred?

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, no.

Mr. NORBECK. About 50?

Mr. BLAINE. About 50 or 60.

Mr. NORBECK. Give us 50 or 60 in the whole United States and we will do some business.

Mr. BLAINE. But we are performing our whole duty.

Mr. NORBECK. But all the States are not.

Mr. BLAINE. Why does the Senator want to empower a Federal organization to interfere with this local police regulation? What is going to be the result of this? There is a constant attempt, and some attempts have been successful, to extend this arm of the centralized government over the States and over our people to such an extent that to-day men and women recognize that there is little respect for law. The time was when Uncle Sam and Uncle Sam's legislation were held in high regard, but never in the history of America has there been such disregard for law. Why? Simply because Congresses have been engaged in a veritable diarrhea of legislation, until no man knows what the law is.

Worse than that, by extending the arm of the Federal Government out over the States, usurping the police power of the States, a psychology is being brought about whereby local enforcement of the law is being discouraged. There can be no effective enforcement of any law, I do not care what it is, unless there is local public opinion back of it, and also unless there is local responsibility as well. Take off the shoulders and conscience of the American people locally this responsibility and duty to enforce law, and there will be no law enforcement. Men and women are willing to bear that responsibility, but when agencies are set up that assume that responsibility, at once the local communities are discouraged, the very force and power that make law enforceable and enforced are disheartened. They are discouraged from continuing to perform their duties and responsibilities, because whenever Government becomes intermeddling with respect to everything, whether it is regarding the freaks of weather or the frills of fashion, we may expect the people to receive more of that kind of interference and that kind of intermeddling and that kind of paternalism, until the moral fiber of our people is destroyed, and it is made impossible to enforce law.

That is the trouble to-day. America is not a disordered Nation. The American people as a whole are law-abiding citizens, decent citizens, but when the centralized Government spreads its hands out all over the United States, getting its fingers into every activity of life, then the man on the street says "Let George do it," with the result that we can not and do not have law enforcement in America to-day.

The States are being deprived of their self-government, their police power guaranteed to them under the Constitution; and if you continue to destroy this responsibility and these rights you will destroy the very thing that makes it possible to sustain and maintain law and order. All that will be left will be an army of public employees, such as there were in the ancient régime of France, and there will be a public official in the shadow of every citizen. He will be followed everywhere. If he has hogs to take to market, there will be a hog inspector. If he has a calf to take to market, there will be a calf inspector. If he has something else to take to market, there will be some other public official controlling in his shadow, and if perchance the sow has a litter of pigs, there will be inspectors of pigs. So it goes all the way down the line, and here it is proposed to have game wardens, to put into the hands of one department 500 or more game wardens, spread out all over the United States to enforce this law, which is not a law for conservation but a law the result of which will mean the destruction of wild life, and the very bill itself so proclaims. I want to read that section at this time.

Mr. NORBECK. Where does the Senator get his figures of 500 game wardens?

Mr. BLAINE. I will get to that very shortly.

Mr. NORBECK. That would be only 10 for each State.

Mr. BLAINE. I will give the figures shortly.

Mr. NORBECK. That would be a very small number compared to what Wisconsin uses in the enforcement of the law.

Mr. BLAINE. Wisconsin can take care of herself. We do not want a single Federal game warden there. The more we have, the less law enforcement we have.

Mr. NORBECK. Under this measure there would be no preserves in Wisconsin unless they were asked for.

Mr. BLAINE. We have them already, and I am going to show the evil consequences that flow from the autocratic administration on the preserve that it forced upon our State.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator is opposed to the Mississippi wild-life bird refuge, is he?

Mr. BLAINE. I am not, and I will read the provisions in the State law, which I had the privilege to write, designed to preserve the rights of the people of Wisconsin, not only under the Constitution, but as well under the Ordinance of the Northwest Territory.

Mr. NORBECK. I did not understand the Senator, then. I thought the Senator was criticizing that Federal activity up there.

Mr. BLAINE. I am; and when I give the Senator the facts, I know that he, as an honorable Member of this body, will aid me in the denunciation of this arbitrary, autocratic rule which comes from the Capital of our Nation. I have the information here. Privileges under these Federal laws are bought by individuals, and I will show that as well. I think it is a mighty serious proposition.

I said that I would read a provision in this bill. It is the heart of the bill. It is the thing which proposes to preserve, to kill, and to slaughter, not to perpetuate, wild life. Listen to it:

Section 11, which, as I said, and I repeat, is the heart of the bill, provides:

> That the primary purpose of this act is to provide necessary areas for feeding and breeding places for migratory game birds in order that an adequate supply of said birds may be maintained—

For what purpose?

> When, in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture, a sufficient surplus of said birds exists—

Then he may, by public notice, provide for the hunting and killing thereof. Yes; the primary purpose of the act is to establish a trap into which these innocent birds will be invited, fed, and bred until the time comes when the game hog will be privileged to build for himself a blind. I have criticism for that kind of sportsmanship. Imagine a strong-armed biped building his blind in the bushes of the lake shore or the marsh, covering himself with a camouflage of vegetation. Into that blind he goes with a Winchester or some other firearm, a repeating shotgun, double-barreled shotgun, or an automatic gun, and a belt of ammunition. Out on the placid waters he places the camouflaged ducks, the wooden decoys. Among them he plants the live Judases to seductively invite this feathered life of ours to alight within shooting distance of his gun. In the moment when this wild life, assuming instinctively that it has some protection, alights it is shot down, not for necessary food, not to sustain life, but for the mere purpose of killing, killing for sport. The bill is an invitation for those who have the money and the leisure to build their blinds, to bring in their decoys and their Judases, and to destroy for no other reason than sport, the joy of killing this wild life which has been preserved and protected by the Federal Government. It will have been fed and bred and induced to inhabit that refuge and that sacred place for the purpose of being killed.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McMASTER in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. I would like to ask him a question. I am anxious to arrive at the understanding of the Senator. I am not at all clear about it. Does he favor bird refuges without hunting? If so, we are not far apart.

Mr. BLAINE. I will make myself very clear on that point before I get through.

Mr. NORBECK. I want to call attention to the argument used in favor of shooting grounds. It is to give the average boy a chance to go into those shooting grounds instead of having duck clubs; that is, having millionaires and wealthy men acquire all the land around the preserves and do the slaughtering there.

Mr. BLAINE. I will answer that in due time.

Mr. NORBECK. The purpose of the bill is to give everybody a chance?

Mr. BLAINE. I think I will be able to answer that to the Senator's satisfaction.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator let me make a suggestion?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. There is nothing in the bill to prevent those very millionaire hunters who are being talked about from going in and slaughtering all the birds they want to in these reserves.

Mr. NORBECK. But it is hard to say in a bill that a millionaire shall not have the same right as anyone else. The millionaire has a right now that nobody else has. The boys do not have that right now. The millionaire buys land right around these places and owns it. Under the bill it will be possible to have an area there that can be thrown open to the whole public instead of to the exclusive few.

Mr. DILL. If the Senator were sincere in his purpose, then he would agree to a provision that would limit the number of birds or ducks that anybody could take out of these reserves. As it is, they can take out 25 or 50 or as many as they want.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator has been very desirous to have me agree to let a lot of foreign matter into the bill. If I permit that to go in, he knows the bill will be defeated, and I would rather be accused of insincerity than to kill the bill merely to please the Senator. I do not know that I have any objection to limiting the number of birds that may be killed on the preserve proper.

Mr. DILL. The Senator will agree to almost any kind of an amendment so long as we do not interfere with charging everybody for a license.

Mr. NORBECK. As long as we do not get any money to do business, the Senator is willing to agree to any kind of a bill we want.

Mr. DILL. And the Senator from South Dakota will not agree to a proposal to get money in any other way.

Mr. NORBECK. Because it has been tried and failed in the past.

Mr. DILL. I think it would be well to try it again. The Senate does not always in the first instance pass a bill which is satisfactory to the House.

Mr. NORBECK. But here is a bill which has passed both Houses.

Mr. DILL. This bill has not passed the House.

Mr. NORBECK. No; the bill that passed the House had no inviolate preserves provided for in it. This is a decided improvement over one of the bills that passed the House, providing a dollar license fee.

Mr. DILL. I do not think it will pass again. If the bill had come from the House and the Senator was then forced to accept the House provisions or nothing, there would be something in his position, but he insists that we do the way this bill provides or that nothing can be done.

Mr. NORBECK. Two years ago the Senator insisted that we could get an appropriation for other reserves. When we attempted to do it, and sent it over to the House, they killed it.

Mr. DILL. But we got an appropriation for a bird reserve in the Mississippi Valley of $1,500,000.

Mr. NORBECK. We did that many years ago, and it is the only one we have.

Mr. DILL. We have not spent one-fourth of the money.

Mr. NORBECK. I beg the pardon of the Senator from Wisconsin. I shall not interrupt him again. I am really anxious to hear his discussion of the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I know the Senator is perfectly sincere in the attainment of the object or the end he is seeking, but I fear that the Senator has misconceived the results which will flow from the enactment of the bill into law. I think I shall be able to convince every reasonable man who believes in the preservation of wild life for life's sake—not for sport, but for the sake of wild life—that the bill is headed but one way, and that is to the destruction of wild life. I do not make that just as a mere declaration. I think I shall be able by logic, drawing from experience, drawing from the past, and pointing out the provisions of law, to establish that statement as true.

Mr. President, the taking of life may occur under certain circumstances. I am going to discuss this philosophy just a little bit, because it goes right to the foundation of the whole question of the conservation of wild life. The State may take human life in the carrying out of its penal laws under certain circumstances. I do not think that the State has any moral right to do it, but it has the legal right to do it. One man may take the life of another with justification in self-defense. That is according to the first law of nature. The individual has a right to preserve his own existence, and when that existence is threatened, when his life is threatened to the point of danger to him, he has the right to take the life of another. This is upon the theory of the right of self-defense, the right to preserve ourselves against the assaults and violence of other men. The taking of human life under those circumstances is, of course, justifiable.

Then there is justification for the taking of wild life under some circumstances. Mankind, being the superior order of life, has the right to perpetuate and conserve mankind in the interests of his own existence and the existence of the race and according to the design of the Maker. But that is a limited right. As I said, all life is precious. The man who crushes, wilfully or wantonly, the life out of a worm under his foot, unless that worm is a menace to mankind, is violating a moral duty. He has no right to do that. However, man may take wild life for certain legitimate purposes. Upon the theory of self-preservation he may take wild life for food. Food is essential to existence and for self-preservation. It takes the lower order of life to preserve the higher order of life under those circumstances, and there is justification for that.

There is justification to take wild life for raiment and protection upon the same theory and for the same reason. There is justification for a man to kill an animal, a bird which is edible, for the purpose of furnishing food for himself and his family as a matter of self-preservation, to take the furs, the wool, the feathers for shelter and raiment for mankind upon the basis of self-preservation. That is self-defense. But there is no moral right to take animal life for the mere purpose of killing. That is wanton killing, unless it is taken in self-defense or self-protection. Any other taking of wild life is not according to the moral law; it is not according to the design of Him who formed the universe, who placed in the air the birds, in the sea the fishes, upon the land mankind and other life.

There is another justification for taking wild life, though it is limited. There are certain forms of wild life which may be a menace to mankind. The justification for the taking of such wild life is self-preservation, self-defense. There is justification for the eradication of certain predatory animals and predatory birds and of certain insects.

It is justified upon the ground of self-defense, self-preservation, and sometimes for the purpose of counterbalancing what we call nature; but the justification is always on the ground of self-preservation and self-defense. Yet here is a bill that proposes to create, by the solemnity of an enactment through the sovereignty of a great Nation, so-called refuges, so-called sanctuaries, in the name of sanctuaries and refuges for the purpose of the feeding and breeding and propagating wild life to the extent where it may become so numerous that there will be sufficient surplus to kill and to slaughter for sport. That is going to be the result of this bill, if it shall be enacted into law.

Then the same section further provides:

> Whenever the surplus migratory game birds decrease so that further public hunting on any such area * * * might prove harmful to the future supply of said birds—

This king of the wild, the Secretary of Agriculture, may stop the shooting and killing for such a period of time as there may be further feeding and breeding and propagating of game birds and wild life, again to be slaughtered, again to be killed for sport.

There is no Senator in this Chamber, I am sure, who is willing to risk his reputation for integrity, who will contend that there is any necessity for propagating and breeding wild life merely for the purpose of furnishing food. The farmers, led by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], are complaining before this Congress, and have complained for many years, that there has been a tremendous surplus of food; that they want either to reduce the supply of food or to find some way to dispose of the surplus. The contention, therefore, that we must conserve wild life to furnish sufficient food for our people, of course, is nonsense, in the face of the present situation. This bill is flying under false colors; it is not fair; it is not square with wild life.

The right to kill, as I have suggested, is a very limited right in good morals and in good conscience, and until the necessity arises that there must be killing—justified killing for food, for shelter, for raiment, for self-protection, for self-preservation—the great Government of the United States should not entice and seduce the migratory birds and animals of this continent into refuges, into sanctuaries, in order that they may breed and multiply so that men—"game hogs"—may have the opportunity to shoot, to kill for sport.

Section 11 is the heart of this proposed legislation, and not only the heart, but it is the lifeblood as well. The whole purpose of this measure is to conserve not for the sake of preserving wild life because it is wild life, but, I repeat, for the purpose of affording an opportunity to kill for sport.

I have pictured the biped who is so unsportsmanlike as to sneak into a blind and take unaware members of the feathery tribe which have been induced and seduced by the Judases of their kind into a death trap. As a great conservationist once said:

> Under those circumstances, instead of the gun being in the hands of the man, the gun ought to be placed in charge of the bird.

Again, there are the brant and the wild goose which make their flight northward, especially through the Mississippi Valley, at this very season of the year, going to their summer haunts in Canada, there to feed and there to breed and there to reproduce and later, in the autumn, to make their return flight to more sunny climes. There are those who propose to establish refuges and sanctuaries to which the brant and the wild goose will be enticed and seduced in order that man may hide himself in a blind, camouflaging its appearance according to the color of the surroundings, and kill the brant and the wild goose which may have been induced by the Judases of their kind in captivity to light upon frozen ground. Thus those beautiful birds, some of which live for over a hundred years if they escape the rifle and the shotgun of mankind, are slaughtered seldom for food, but usually for sport.

We propose by this bill to provide sanctuaries for these forms of wild life, the very highest order of the bird tribe, and entice and induce them into a sanctuary that their mating of half a century or more may reproduce their kind to be slaughtered, to be killed for one purpose, and one purpose only, so far as the present necessities are concerned, and that is for sport.

I concede that there are people in America, there are people in this country of ours, who need this wild life for food, and who ought to have this wild life for food; but this bill is not designed to give that great mass of our people that opportunity for self-preservation, the right to take this wild life for food. No! Those people never will get a look-in under the provisions of this bill.

Whom will the bill benefit? Before discussing that problem I want to have placed in the RECORD the wild life that is included within the terms of the treaty with Canada.

Under the treaty between the President of the United States of America, with the advice and consent of the Senate—the treaty having been ratified—and his Britannic Majesty, the King of Great Britain, done at Washington on August 16, 1916, these birds are embraced within that treaty:

Water fowl, including brant, wild ducks, geese, and swans. Of those, the ducks and the geese are game fowl. The swan is protected against any killing for any purpose under our present laws and the laws of the States over which these migratory birds fly in their flight north and south.

There are the cranes, including the little brown, the sandhill, and the whooping cranes. I think they are all protected under existing law against the violence of mankind.

There are the rails, including coots, gallinules, sora, and other rails.

Included within that treaty are the shore birds, including the avocets, the curlews, the dowitchers, the godwits, the knots, the oyster catchers, the phalaropes, the plovers, the sandpipers, the snipe, the stilts, the surf birds, the turnstones, the willets, the woodcock, and the yellow legs—all familiar, of course, to those who take an interest in nature and nature's denizens.

Included also within that treaty are the pigeons, including the doves and the wild pigeons. The only remaining ones of that feathery tribe are the doves. They are all protected under present and existing laws, both State and Federal.

Then come the migratory insectivorous birds—the bobolinks, the catbirds, the chickadees, the cuckoos, the flickers, the flycatchers, the grosbeaks, the humming birds, the kinglets, the martins, the meadow larks, the nighthawks or bull bats, the nuthatches, the orioles, the robins, the shrikes, the swallows, the swifts, the tanagers, the titmice, the thrushes, the vireos, the warblers, the waxwings, the whippoorwills, the woodpeckers, and the wrens, all protected against the violence of mankind for any purpose.

Then come other migratory nongame birds—the auks, the auklets, the bitterns, the fulmars, the gannets, the grebes, the guillemots, the gulls, the herons, the jaegers, the loons, the murres, the petrels, the puffins, the shearwaters, and the terns. All have their place in this general organization of life.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. DILL. In connection with the list of birds the Senator is reading, I call attention to how strained is the decision of the court in supporting the migratory-bird treaty when it did it on the basis of conserving the food supply of this country. There is very little food supply in a lot of the wrens and orioles and puffins that are mentioned there.

Mr. BLAINE. I thank the Senator. The only birds furnishing justifiable food supply in that list are the brant and the wild ducks and the geese, under the treaty generally referred to as the treaty with Canada, the migratory-bird treaty.

Before entering upon a discussion of the extent to which our Government has fully performed its obligations under the treaty, I desire to have in the RECORD the fact that the treaty itself makes certain regulations relating to migratory birds.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it not a fact that most of the States in the Union have now provided game sanctuaries, and also have very good and fairly complete laws dealing with that subject?

Mr. BLAINE. I think the Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it not rather a duplication of effort to tax the people who already have to pay State taxes in taking out a game license and to compel them to take out a Federal license in addition to that? Does not the Senator really think that our efforts should be directed toward inducing each State to improve and tighten up its game laws, rather than to establish another bureau of the Government with hundreds—yes, thousands—of office holders, all to be paid for by the American people, which will expand beyond any limits we now anticipate?

Mr. BLAINE. There is no question about the correctness of the Senator's position on that point. I wholly agree with the Senator; and before I get through I am going to present, not merely my opinion nor the Senator's individual statement—I know both of them are valuable—but I am going to point out, I am going to give the record, I am going to show how the United States has more than fulfilled her obligations under that treaty; and, over and above that, the various States of the Union have gone far beyond any provisions of the treaty in the protection of these migratory birds.

Mr. TYDINGS. There are just two other observations I should like to make with which I am sure the Senator is familiar. I have no reference to the prohibition question except to illustrate what may be done by the treaty-making power.

The Senator will recall that we entered into a treaty with Great Britain which extended the limits of the ocean over which the United States has jurisdiction from 3 miles to 12 miles. That, in my opinion, is an abuse of the treaty-making power, because, under the guise of making a treaty with England, what we really did was to pass a local law for the United States; but one branch of the Government elected by the people had no voice in the enactment of that law, because the House of Representatives had nothing to do with the ratification of the treaty. If these treaty precedents are to be set up here and there, after a while we shall be able to pass any amount of laws under the guise of treaties upon which the representatives of the people will have no vote.

The second thing I should like to observe—and I am sure the Senator agrees—is this: While it may be very idealistic and very fine to establish game sanctuaries for the protection of game, it does seem to me, sitting here from day to day, that birds and incidental things in the Government are becoming more important than human beings. When our country was established, and our Constitution set up, we gave Congress only 18 general powers, among which was to provide a Navy, and provide an Army, and coin money, and regulate interstate and foreign commerce, and so forth. I should like to say to the Senator—and I think he is in accord with this—that every one of those subjects was an essentially national subject, and something which no State could do for the whole Nation. Obviously, every State could not have its own Army, with 48 different systems; neither could it have its own system of money, because there would be no uniformity in things that were essentially national. But we seem to have departed from that philosophy, which has been learned on the battle fields of all time, and nowadays, under the authority to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, we use that power for everything that is not essentially national, and which, under close inspection, is found to be essentially local.

I believe that the only way to prevent the abuse of the power to govern in the hands of men, whether the governor be a king, a congress, or a general, is not to give that power; and, if it must be given, it should be so surrounded by checks and balances that beyond the scope of its proper use the ruling agency, whatever its form, has no power to go. But we have abandoned that and by this bill are still further surrendering our philosophy of government.

I would like also to observe at this time that our Constitution did not just happen to be. The men who debated for four months upon the question as to the form of government under which the American people should live did not just choose it in a haphazard way. They went back into all the ruined kingdoms and governments—Greece and Rome and France and Italy and Germany, and all of the governments that had preceded them—and they tried to establish here liberty for men, and liberty for birds was incidental. I do not mean to say that I am not in favor of protecting wild life, because I am, but I am not in favor of having the National Government made the policeman for every incidental activity in our national life.

I simply wanted to observe that this is just another one of the thousand and one bills that are coming here at every session of Congress to enlarge the scope of the National Government and lead us to turn our backs, as we will be doing, upon all the philosophy of the people who brought this Government into existence. I only wish that those who are impelled by these idealistic motives would look a little into history and see that what we are really doing is embracing all the sins and errors of the past, which have brought more than one government down to ruin, because there are so many branches and so many boards and so many commissions regulating the life of the people of this country to-day in every kind of activity of which you can conceive that hardly any man can do anything without consulting his lawyer first to see whether it is legal.

For my part, I do not intend to vote for any single, solitary bill that will expand one iota any of the powers we have already assumed here in Congress, unless they are essentially national matters, and contained in the 18 general grants of power set forth in the Constitution.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Maryland has sounded a note of warning and a challenge. The impairment of the powers of our respective States is leading us headlong into an era of violation of law and of disregard for law. I referred to this briefly in the opening of this debate, that centralization—it is the history of the world—has always broken down the moral fiber of the people of nations until there were constant kicks against the pricks of government because more of a paternalistic nature was not done for them, and the people of those nations settled back into a state of indifference and unconcern about the government. Why should they not? It is the logical result. Their apathy was due to the very powers that governed them. They, having no responsibility, all responsibility having been taken off their shoulders, a government officialdom was set up for them to do that which the citizen ought to have done.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BLAINE. Yes.

Mr. PHIPPS. I want to ask the Senator if he contends that there is no national feature in this question of migratory birds. Could all the States, acting separately, have brought about the results which have been accomplished through the treaty of August 16, 1916?

Mr. BLAINE. I think that the substantial accomplishments have been by the States and not by the Federal Government, and while it has become a Federal question because of a treaty, essentially it is not a Federal question.

Mr. PHIPPS. I think the Senator realizes that the treaty itself immediately resulted in the stopping of the taking of eggs from the nests of the migratory birds in Alaska, the great breeding grounds. No State could have accomplished that by treaty or understanding with Canada.

Mr. BLAINE. The Government of the United States could have stopped it so far as its territory was concerned.

Mr. PHIPPS. Yes; but not as to the other Alaskan territory, which was under the control of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. BLAINE. I would assume that the Dominion of Canada would have taken care of it as readily locally as they did by treaty.

Mr. PHIPPS. But the Dominion of Canada could not enter into a treaty with any separate State; therefore it had to be national, as far as the United States was concerned. The result was accomplished, was it not, the stopping of the taking of the eggs from the nests for sale in commerce?

Mr. BLAINE. I do not know to what extent it has been stopped.

Mr. PHIPPS. To the very greatest extent possible.

Mr. BLAINE. But that does not affect the question I am discussing.

Mr. PHIPPS. I am leading to another question, with the Senator's permission. The Senator is aware of the fact that under the national law the open season on migratory birds has been limited, and the territory of the United States zoned in a way so that the shooting permitted is at the least objectionable seasons of the year. Is not that correct?

Mr. BLAINE. I was proceeding to demonstrate that our Government had fully performed its duties under the treaty, and I am going to proceed to that, and that there is no necessity now for the Federal Government extending its heavy hand over our States, and impairing the power of the States under the ninth and tenth amendments. We have performed our duty under the treaty, and so has Canada. Now, let us stop at that.

Mr. PHIPPS. But we have not gone as far as Canada has.

Mr. BLAINE. I think we have gone further.

Mr. PHIPPS. The main purpose of this bill is to do our share.

Mr. BLAINE. I think we have gone further. Canada is incomparably behind the United States with respect to bird refuges and sanctuaries, and I shall show that.

Mr. PHIPPS. If the Senator has that information, the Senate would be glad to have it. I do not wish to interfere with the course of the Senator's remarks, but I did want to call attention to this, the statement having been made by the junior Senator from Maryland that it was not a national question.

I contend, and I think the Senator would agree, that the States could not have separately limited the shooting seasons so that they would be in accord throughout the territory of the United States. They were not in agreement as to a maximum bag limit, which limit has been set by the Federal authority, and I think properly so; but with that maximum limitation, the States have made further limitations, reducing the numbers that may be taken in the bag limit, and restricting the number of days of shooting in many cases, and I trust the Senator will bear those points in mind in making his remarks.

Mr. BLAINE. I have all those points in mind. When I was interrupted by the Senator from Maryland and then by the Senator from Pennsylvania, I could not proceed. I am now proceeding to a discussion of that very problem.

Mr. PHIPPS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BLAINE. I think I will be able to demonstrate to the Senator conclusively that we have gone far beyond either the public demands or the moral demands of the treaty on this question, and that we should not further trespass upon the police powers of the States, or impair those powers, because I think it is a dangerous tendency.

As I said, and I am going to repeat, this tendency for intermeddling in everything by Government, by officials, means that the Government must be responsible, therefore, for everything. Since the Government becomes responsible for everything, there is no responsibility left with respect to the individual, and he lapses into a state of indifference to a government that is so paternalistic that it has deprived him of every duty and of every responsibility, with the result that we can not and do not have the enforcement of law. There is no country in the world to-day that has the lack of enforcement that we have in America.

We have increased penalties. We have increased the number of spies and agents of government, and the greater the increase the greater becomes the number of offenses. I do not know how many spies we have in this America of ours. I do know, however, that the Government of Rome for a thousand years permitted her people to live under a system that made the individual responsible. For another thousand years, yes, for 11 centuries, Rome, with her 10,000 spies, was in decay and finally in a complete state of decadence. Any people that are spied upon; any people off of whose shoulders are taken the responsibilities of government, lapse into indifference as to their Government, because when government becomes so paternalistic as to do all, there is no further necessity for the activity of her citizens.

But that is not my objection to the bill. It may be a passing criticism of it. I am going to the fundamentals of the bill with respect to the question of the conservation of wild life and to demonstrate that, instead of it being a conservation measure, it is a measure promoting the destruction of wild life, not for the necessities of man, but for the unsportmanship of some men.

There is no necessity for such legislation. The United States has fully performed its duties under the treaty. The treaty itself contains certain regulatory features which we need not repeat in any proposed measure for the alleged conservation of wild life. Article 2, section 1 of the treaty provides:

1. The close season on migratory game birds shall be between March 10 and September 1, except that the close season on the Limicolae or shorebirds in the maritime Provinces of Canada and in those States of the United States bordering on the Atlantic Ocean which are situated wholly or in part north of Chesapeake Bay shall be between February 1 and August 15, and that Indians may take at any time scoters for food but not for sale. The season for hunting shall be further restricted to such period not exceeding three and one-half months as the high contracting powers may severally deem appropriate and define by law or regulation.

2. The close season on migratory insectivorous birds shall continue throughout the year.

3. The close season on other migratory nongame birds shall continue throughout the year, except that Eskimos and Indians may take at any season auks, auklets, guillemots, murres, and puffins, and their eggs, for food, and their skins for clothing, but the birds and eggs so taken shall not be sold or offered for sale.

Those who designed the treaty did not design a system for the conservation of wild life to be killed for sport. It makes two justifications for the taking of wild life, and those are for food and for clothing. Those are the only justifications for the taking of wild life—self-defense, self-preservation—not sport.

Then it is further provided:

ART. 3. The high contracting powers agree that during the period of 10 years next following the going into effect of this convention there shall be a continuous closed season on the following migratory game birds, to wit:

Fan-tailed pigeons, little brown, sandhill, and whooping cranes, swans, curlew, and all shore birds (except the black-breasted and golden plover, Wilson or jack snipe, woodcock, and the greater and lesser yellowlegs): Provided, That during such 10 years the closed seasons on cranes, swans, and curlew in the Province of British Columbia shall be made by the proper authorities of that Province within the general dates and limitations elsewhere prescribed in this convention for the respective groups to which these birds belong.

ART. 4. The high contracting powers agree that special protection shall be given the wood duck and the eider duck—

I do not believe there is a State in the Union that permits the killing of either of those two species for any purpose at any time.

ART. IV. The high contracting powers agree that special protection shall be given the wood duck and the eider duck, either (1) by a close season extending over a period of at least five years, or (2) by the establishment of refuges, or (3) by such other regulations as may be deemed appropriate.

ART. V. The taking of nests or eggs of migratory game or insectivorous or nongame birds shall be prohibited, except for scientific or propagating purposes under such laws or regulations as the high contracting powers may severally deem appropriate.

ART. VI. The high contracting powers agree that the shipment or export of migratory birds or their eggs from any State or Province, during the continuance of the close season in such State or Province, shall be prohibited, except for scientific or propagating purposes, and the international traffic in any birds or eggs at such time captured, killed, taken, or shipped at any time contrary to the laws of the State or Province in which the same were captured, killed, taken, or shipped shall be likewise prohibited. Every package containing migratory birds or any parts thereof or any eggs of migratory birds transported, or offered for transportation, from the Dominion of Canada into the United States or from the United States into the Dominion of Canada, shall have the name and address of the shipper and an accurate statement of the contents clearly marked on the outside of such package.

It will be clearly perceived that the framers of the treaty scarcely anticipated any necessity for any legislation. The treaty itself covers every proposition designed for the protection of wild life. All that was reasonably left for our Government to do or for the Government of Canada to do was by legislative declaration to enact the several articles of the treaty, so that they would have the force of law, and our Government has done that. Every single article in the treaty relating to the protection of migratory birds is written in the statutes of the United States in almost exactly the same language as is contained in the treaty, so that we have fully performed our obligation under that treaty. The treaty makers understood the length to which Canada and the United States should go in the protection of migratory game birds. Those treaty makers throughout the treaty conceived the purpose and the only purpose to be that of conserving and perpetuating animal life for the necessities of mankind, food and clothing and shelter, and the effect of the treaty is to deny to the United States or Canada the right to permit this wild life to be killed for the sake of killing, just for sport as is designed by the pending bill.

ART. VII. Permits to kill any of the above-named birds which, under extraordinary conditions, may become seriously injurious to the agricultural or other interests in any particular community, may be issued by the proper authorities of the high contracting powers under suitable regulations prescribed therefor by them, respectively, but such permits shall elapse, or may be canceled, at any time when, in the opinion of said authorities, the particular exigency has passed, and no birds killed under this article shall be shipped, sold, or offered for sale.

That article has been carried out. It provides for regulation with respect to the destruction of predatory birds. Then Article VIII provides:

The high contracting powers agree themselves to take, or propose to their respective appropriate lawmaking bodies, the necessary measures for insuring the execution of the present convention.

In compliance with that agreement, Canada has enacted its legislation and the United States has enacted her legislation.

I want to review that, so that I may show conclusively that the obligations which America owed under the treaty have been performed. I do not need to discuss the question of whether we had a right to make the treaty or whether it was a wise or unwise treaty; I am not concerned with that now; I may be concerned with it as it affects my philosophy of government; but the treaty is made and until that treaty can be undone it is a part of the law of the land. I am willing to conform to that treaty; I am willing to support legislation to carry out the terms of that treaty to the letter; but I am unwilling to go beyond our obligations in these premises and I am unwilling further to extend the power of the Federal Government for the purpose of creating shooting grounds in America to kill for sport migratory birds, protected by the solemn obligation of the Canadian Government and the United States.

Mr. NORBECK. I am not sure I understand the Senator. Does the Senator contend that this proposed legislation tends to reduce the protection granted by the treaty?

Mr. BLAINE. No; nor does it increase the protection. It is just merely a shifting of things to create shooting grounds.

Mr. NORBECK. Then whatever protection the treaty affords for birds will still remain?

Mr. BLAINE. I do not know whether or not it will, but I doubt it very much. If we shall set up these refuges and sanctuaries for the purpose of feeding, breeding, and propagating birds in order that they may be slaughtered and killed for any other purpose than designed by the treaty, it would be in violation of the treaty.

Mr. NORBECK. The same limitations as to dates and bag limits which the treaty already prescribes will still prevail; in other words, there could be no birds shot out of season, and birds can to-day be shot on all the ground that would be affected by the treaty. Is not that true?

Mr. BLAINE. I presume that is correct, but the bill will merely provide that more birds may be propagated to be killed for sport.

Mr. NORBECK. Exactly so.

Mr. BLAINE. And that is not a compliance with the spirit of the treaty; it is not a compliance with that which ought to be and I believe is the moral consciousness of the American people and of mankind.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. BLAINE. Yes.

Mr. DILL. The Senator has made some examination of the Canadian situation, I take it?

Mr. BLAINE. I have.

Mr. DILL. Has Canada established any bird sanctuaries that have been opened to public shooting at various times as this bill will permit?

Mr. BLAINE. I must be frank with the Senator and state that I am not so certain about that.

Mr. DILL. My information is that Canada has not done that.

Mr. BLAINE. I assume not.

Mr. DILL. I do not know anybody who does that except private sporting clubs which fix up blinds and get the birds tame, so that they may slaughter them. This bill proposes that the Government shall enter into that business.

Mr. BLAINE. Let me say to the Senator that the private sporting clubs and private game refuges are going to be the beneficiaries of the breeding and propagating of birds in Government refuges. I think I can conclusively show that to be the case.

Mr. NORBECK. I wish to say that Canada has provided both game preserves and shooting grounds.

Mr. DILL. But Canada has not provided shooting grounds in game preserves. She has established shooting grounds entirely separate from game preserves.

Mr. NORBECK. I shall look that up and answer the question later.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I presume since I made the statement that we have fully performed our duties under this treaty that I ought to proceed to demonstrate that statement to be correct. I have here the Code of Laws of the United States, which contains the laws in force on December 7, 1925. I will use the section numbers observed by this code, as it is the most convenient compilation of the statutes we have. We had laws on this subject before the treaty of 1916. I refer to section 701 of the code, which reads as follows:

SEC. 701. Game and wild birds; preservation.—The duties and powers of the Department of Agriculture include the preservation, distribution, introduction, and restoration of game birds and other wild birds. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to adopt such measures as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section and sections 391 to 394 of title 18, Criminal Code and Criminal Procedure, and to purchase such game birds and other wild birds as may be required therefor, subject, however, to the laws of the various States and Territories. The object and purpose of this section is to aid in the restoration of such birds in those parts of the United States adapted thereto where the same have become scarce or extinct, and also to regulate the introduction of American or foreign birds or animals in localities where they have not heretofore existed.

The Secretary of Agriculture shall from time to time collect and publish useful information as to the propagation, uses, and preservation of such birds.

And the Secretary of Agriculture shall make and publish all needful rules and regulations for carrying out the purposes of said sections, and shall expend for said purposes such sums as Congress may appropriate therefor. (May 25, 1900, ch. 553 sec. 1, 31 Stat. 187.)

That was the legislation enacted on May 25, 1900, and is general and broad. I also wish to suggest that under section 702 of the same code it is provided:

The Secretary of Agriculture shall have the power to authorize the importation of eggs of game birds for purposes of propagation, and he shall prescribe all necessary rules and regulations governing the importation of eggs of said birds for such purposes.

That act was passed in 1902. Then came the enactments designed to make effective the treaty. I will not read them at this time, but I will call the attention of the Senate to them.

Section 703, enacted in 1918, relates to taking, killing, or possession of migratory birds. It was enacted to carry out the articles of the treaty which I have read.

Section 704, enacted in 1918, provides when and how migratory birds may be taken, killed, or possessed.

Section 705, enacted in 1918, relates to the transportation or importation of migratory birds.

Then come the provisions with respect to arrest and search warrants. Chapter 9, section 391, of the Criminal Code in the same compilation contains penal provisions relating to the importing of injurious birds and animals and permits for foreign wild animals and specimens for museums.

Section 392 relates to the transportation of illegally killed game, shipments in game season, and feathers of barnyard fowls.

Section 395, which was originally adopted in 1900, relates to the dead bodies of game animals or game or song birds which are subject to the laws of the States.

Some of these criminal provisions preceded the enactment of the treaty, but on the whole the Federal Government has carried out, technically, every single obligation under the treaty. It has done more than that, for the spirit of the treaty has likewise been observed, not only by the Federal Government but by the respective States.

Mr. President, before entering upon a discussion of the performance of the obligations of the treaty in spirit, I wish to say further that the Federal Government should be limited and restricted to a certain field of activity—that is, the field with respect to interstate matters. It should not encroach upon purely local affairs. The Congress has conceived that to be the proper field for Federal legislation with respect to this treaty and has enacted laws covering interstate shipments of all wild life embraced within the terms of the treaty relating to migratory birds. Those laws are complete. The Government has gone beyond that in its regulation of interstate commerce and under the powers of the treaty has regulated the shipment of wild life covered by the treaty in all respects, even providing that the shipments shall not be made contrary to the laws of any State or Territory, and that the shipment of wild life embraced within the terms of the treaty shall not be contrary to the laws of any Province of the Dominion of Canada.

Can you have a fuller, more complete compliance with a treaty than the United States has performed? It has embraced everything within the treaty. Our laws cover every conceivable project to carry out the terms of that treaty. Not a single thing has been overlooked, until within recent years some one has discovered that this treaty can be used, not only for the purpose of conserving wild life for the sake of wild life, but also for the purpose of establishing public hunting grounds to promote the killing and destruction of wild life.

To what extent has America performed in spirit every obligation of the treaty—not only every obligation of the treaty, but every purpose designed by the treaty? Every purpose designed by the treaty has been the preservation of wild life for the necessities of mankind—food, clothing, and shelter—not to establish shooting grounds and hunting grounds for the benefit of private clubs or millionaires. I am going to get to that after a while; but I want to go on further to show what America has done.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] the other day suggested that Canada had some extensive sanctuaries. Let me be accurate about this. How many sanctuaries did the Senator say were provided for?

Mr. NORBECK. Inviolate bird sanctuaries, 42, I think. A good many thousand square miles have been set aside by the Canadian Government as inviolate. They have others that are shooting grounds.

Mr. BLAINE. I understand the fact to be that the State of Wisconsin alone has more area of sanctuaries owned by the State for wild life than has the whole Dominion of Canada.

Mr. NORBECK. May I ask the Senator, is shooting entirely prohibited on those sanctuaries?

Mr. BLAINE. It is absolutely prohibited—shooting, trapping, or killing for any purpose.

Mr. NORBECK. At all seasons of the year?

Mr. BLAINE. At all seasons of the year and at all times.

Mr. NORBECK. That is on State-owned land in Wisconsin?

Mr. BLAINE. Yes.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator realizes that other States have done very little along that line.

Mr. BLAINE. I realize that many of the States have done much. I realize that the State of Minnesota has gone far on this proposition, perhaps further than the State of Wisconsin. I realize that the State of Michigan has gone far on this proposition, perhaps further than the State of Wisconsin. I do not know definitely about that, but I am going to review what the State of Wisconsin has done.

Mr. NORBECK. Will the Senator state the acreage in Wisconsin on which hunting is absolutely prohibited?

Mr. BLAINE. I will state the most important ones. We have a lot of small preserves that I will omit.

The State of Wisconsin now owns the Devils Lake Park, consisting of 1,113 acres—a small territory, but a beautiful lake—situated within those granite-clad hills towering two, three, four hundred feet high.

Back upon those hills, wherever there is any soil upon which the mighty pine might find a grip, pine towers over those hills, back over the wooded ridges, making a perfect sanctuary for wild life of every kind; and, remember, Wisconsin is a gateway for these migratory birds. That is only a small tract of land, it is true, but it is important; for in the season, northward and southward, the brant, the duck, the wild geese there rest without molestation by mankind; and, all honor to the people of the State of Wisconsin, they observe inviolate the sacredness of that wild life.

I do not want a meddling, bureaucratic government, located a thousand miles away from home, selling privileges to private parties upon the public reserve and the sanctuary for wild life upon the public domain; and I will prove before I get through that that is what will happen. I have the testimony here. I have it from the Secretary of Agriculture. I had it first from citizens of my own State, and I will produce it. I am not criticizing from the standpoint of mere criticism, however. I simply want to demonstrate that when the long arms, the Federal tentacles far away from our localities reach out, there is a temptation to misuse power because the government is far away from the people, and it is not responsive to the people, and therefore not responsive to public opinion. Public opinion, I think, is always in the interest of good government and always opposed to every form of corruption when that public opinion can once be given the facts, and an opportunity to act.

Mr. NORBECK. I was interested in the Senator's pursuing that question of acreage in the State. The Senator promised that he would give us a list of the main preserves.

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, I have not gotten through yet.

Mr. NORBECK. No; but I should like to know about what the total acreage is. The Senator has mentioned only 1,100 acres so far.

Mr. BLAINE. I am going to give it specifically. That is just one beautiful park.

Mr. NORBECK. Canada has done about a thousand times that much.

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, well, we have done several times that much.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator stated that Wisconsin had done more than Canada, and I simply wanted to get the information.

Mr. BLAINE. I understood the Senator to say that there were thousands of acres of preserves in Canada.

Mr. NORBECK. I said there were 42 preserves there.

Mr. BLAINE. How many acres?

Mr. NORBECK. I can give the Senator that. The Senator must have known, because he asserted the comparison here.

Mr. BLAINE. I want to be accurate, so I am going to take the Senator's figures for it. I am going to assume that they are right. If the Senator's figures are right, then my statement may be incorrect.

Mr. NORBECK. As I get it, about 1,124 square miles.

Mr. BLAINE. How many acres is that?

Mr. NORBECK. I have not made the computation, but I shall be pleased to do so. It is more than a thousand sections of land, though.

Mr. BLAINE. How many acres—about 600,000 acres?

Mr. NORBECK. About seven or eight hundred thousand acres, I take it.

Mr. BLAINE. Perhaps we can not reach that amount; but I will give the Senator the facts and then the comparison will stand out. I understood from his statement that the amount in Canada was less.

We have the Nelson Dewey Park, consisting of 1,651 acres, located where the Wisconsin River empties into the Mississippi River, at a point that is a natural sanctuary for the migratory birds referred to in the treaty, and to which sanctuary those birds go. That is only a small tract.

Then we have the Peninsula Park, in Door County, with its 3,900 acres; and if the Congress will respond to the request of the State for the passage of a bill we will add another 2,000 acres to that.

Mr. NORBECK. Do I understand that the Senator favors the Federal Government buying more land up there?

Mr. BLAINE. No; the State is going to take it. The State of Wisconsin is not asking the Federal Government to buy land for these sanctuaries.

Then we have other parks consisting of 586 acres, 660 acres, 590 acres. Those are separate tracts, but they are located along or near the Mississippi River; and those are important sanctuaries for bird life. It is far better, if you please, to have small areas furnishing sanctuaries for birds than large areas to attract the birds there by thousands. They are better protected; they will breed and propagate and live without the destruction that will come to them through these larger areas and larger sanctuaries.

That is not all. We have the Brule Park, the forest lands of the Brule River of over 4,000 acres, in the very heart of the northern woods of Wisconsin.

We have the Idlewild Game Refuge of 1,100 acres, a most ideal location as a sanctuary. We have, in connection with that, 14,000 acres added to that sanctuary.

We have in the State of Wisconsin not only this Idlewild Game Refuge of about 1,100 acres, but, as I said, attached to that is 14,000 acres.

We have the Forest County Game Refuge of 42,000 acres, a sanctuary for wild life.

We have another sanctuary for wild life 9 miles wide and 16 miles long, containing almost 100,000 acres of land, in which area are included, I think, 42 of the lakes of northern Wisconsin, lakes of extensive area.

These tracts are located at the gateways of the main-traveled paths from Sault Ste. Marie and Hudson Bay and westward. I have seen these migratory birds in thousands in these very tracts I have described, not a single one of which does the hand of man violate. They are just as safe within these sanctuaries as though they were a thousand miles back in the impenetrable forest.

Mr. TYDINGS. In that connection I would like to point out to the Senate that Chesapeake Bay is one of the largest bodies of inland water in the world. At the head of the bay, for about 4 miles south from where the bay begins and about 6 miles in width, are the feeding grounds, known as the Susquehanna Flats. All of the area of the Chesapeake Bay is a game sanctuary for wild fowl, ducks, geese, swan, and so on, except the rivers tributary to it and the Susquehanna Flats. It is probably one of the most frequented spots in the whole world for game of that kind. When we figure game preserves in land we should not overlook the fact that there are many, many square miles of water embraced in the Chesapeake Bay which is really a game preserve.

Mr. BLAINE. Are those sanctuaries owned by the State of Maryland?

Mr. TYDINGS. The State of Maryland has by law prohibited the shooting of wild fowl at any place on the bay except at its head for a distance of 4 miles, and on the tributaries that come into the bay; but the mass of the bay itself is used by ducks to feed in, and it is against the law to shoot them except at the head of the bay, and the area I have described, on the rivers and tributaries. I do not think that even Canada can point to a game refuge where more wild fowl congregate than the point I have mentioned, Chesapeake Bay, which is already protected by State legislation.

In that connection let me also say that Maryland is a very small State in area, but we have a game preserve there, and each year we send out many dozens of pheasant eggs, young partridges, and other kinds of game, all over the State. I can not see a bit of necessity for having the Federal Government come over into Maryland and tell us how to run our game preserves, what regulations we are to live under, and how much money we are to pay to the Federal Government, when we are making a pretty good job of it ourselves, if they will only let us alone.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator very much for the information.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I interrupt the Senator just once more?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The question has been asked me as to how long our season is, and it would be only fair to show another game-preserve measure in connection with that. The season for the shooting of wild ducks opens the first day of November and closes the last day of January. But it is unlawful to shoot wild fowl on the Chesapeake Bay except on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, three days a week, between sunrise and sunset, except in the month of January, when four days a week are permitted. But as Chesapeake Bay is usually frozen over at that point during the months of January and February, except for limited periods, it practically means that we have one good month of gunning, but only three days a week, and then between sunrise and sunset, and I would like to ask anyone favoring this treaty provision to point out where in all the Dominion of Canada there is a single law which prohibits the citizens of Canada from gunning for wild fowl every day in the week except Sunday on the gunning grounds they may have up there.

Mr. BLAINE. I am sure that other Senators could give the same testimony with respect to their States. I have no doubt but that the States of the Union, especially those located along the passageways and gateways for migratory birds, have ample sanctuaries, far beyond anything the Federal Government ever contemplated, far beyond anything that Canada has done.

I have reviewed just briefly what Wisconsin has done. In fairness to the Senator from South Dakota I will say that I had understood from him that Canada had only about 200,000 acres in sanctuaries, and I said that Wisconsin had as much. We have not as much as Canada has, if his figures are accurate to the effect that Canada has some 700,000 acres in sanctuaries. But here is one State alone that has close to 200,000 acres in sanctuaries for wild life, and in which wild life is not sacrificed. I dare say to the Senator from South Dakota that Canada has not a single sanctuary comparable with the sanctuaries of Wisconsin.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I challenge the correctness of that statement.

Mr. BLAINE. I want to say to the Senator that it would be interesting if he will submit to this body information respecting that. Remember that on these sanctuaries to which I have referred, located in Wisconsin, we do not permit shooting, killing, taking or pursuing sanctified wild life described in the treaty.

Mr. NORBECK. I want to say right now that that is true of the sanctuaries in Canada. I have not referred to those preserves that are shooting grounds.

Mr. BLAINE. Yes; but to preserves that are shooting grounds, and sanctuaries that are for breeding purposes which may be shooting grounds.

Mr. NORBECK. But which are not.

Mr. BLAINE. Any time during the year?

Mr. NORBECK. No; that is my information, that they make a distinction between shooting grounds and sanctuaries.

Mr. BLAINE. Do not those sanctuaries include national forests?

Mr. NORBECK. I can not tell the Senator what they include up there, but I can show him a map of them.

Mr. BLAINE. Let me point out what has been done in the United States along that line.

Mr. NORBECK. The statement of what Wisconsin has done is very interesting and I am proud of it for having done that. I wish other States would do as much. If there was more of it done, we would preserve the wild fowl from extinction. I want to say that even South Dakota has given hundreds of thousands of acres, but unfortunately there is very little of it that is adapted to migratory bird refuges, that is, marsh land. We have very little of that in our State.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I wanted to point out to the Senator from South Dakota that the Senator from Wisconsin is exactly right in his position as to these game refuges up in Canada. To start out with, Canada has a population of only about 8,000,000 people. It has a tremendous area. Most of the population of Canada is down along the St. Lawrence River and along the Great Lakes, and if Canada had no game preserves at all, all the northerly and westerly part of Canada would be a natural game preserve, because there are very few people there except Indians and a few trappers.

Mr. NORBECK. I share the views of the Senator from Maryland that there is less necessity for game preserves in Canada than in this country.

Mr. TYDINGS. But the point I am making is that even though they set up preserves in Canada it does not really amount to anything, because the laws could be violated with impunity; there is no police force to arrest offenders in those forest reserves, and there is no center of population there. That is where the game goes to hatch the young. All the ducks, all the swans, all the geese, are not hatched in the United States of America. They go north in the spring of the year, and the young are brought into being in the northern part of Canada. That is where the greatest amount of protection is needed, and not here in the United States. What difference does it make if you kill a few birds after they have actually come to life, as compared with gathering eggs from the nests of those birds, as has been done, and was done until recently all over Canada? What good is it for us to protect a few birds that are living, if, when they fly back to hatch their young, the eggs are to be taken from them?

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator has said that the great hatching ground for birds is up there in Canada. I fully agree with him. But this bill does not deal with Canada. The only point I am making is that Canada has done its part, and I hope that before it is too late to save our birds in the United States we will do better than we have been doing in the past. We have the migratory bird treaty, which has been very helpful. It was signed by President Wilson and supported by this side of the Chamber. It was a mighty good beginning. This bill simply seeks to supplement that by providing that we may make inviolate certain preserves. That is the main purpose of the bill; in other words, to do in a national way what Wisconsin has done in a State way. I think the Senator and I have nearly the same view of the matter.

Mr. TYDINGS. But Canada is not asking us to do this.

Mr. NORBECK. Certainly not.

Mr. TYDINGS. We have a treaty with Canada. We owe no obligation to Canada that we have not fulfilled. This is but the work of a few people who probably have never been among birds and wild fowl in their lives, who have conceived an idealistic plan which will cost the people a lot of money, will unloose a horde of officeholders to go into States and participate in the activities of the States whether they are in accord with it or not, when already most of the States have set aside game preserves, and, in addition to that, have enacted laws which are constantly growing more strict. Why destroy the effect of that? I would say to the Senator from South Dakota that whenever the Federal Government takes complete charge of the game laws in my State and in his State, he will find that there will be a movement to repeal the game laws of the States which are now on the statute books, because the restrictions will be so severe, perhaps, from the Federal Government, that the States will say, "Well, we will wipe our hands of it all and turn it all over to the Federal Government." I think what will really happen will be that the Senator from South Dakota will find that instead of the object of his bill being accomplished, in the long run the object of his bill will be defeated.

Mr. NORBECK. I would like to say that in my opinion we would have been pretty near out of migratory birds now if it had not been for the splendid beginning that was made 10 years ago through the migratory bird treaty and legislation in support of it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I would like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that I live next to one of the greatest natural game preserves in the world.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a moment?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. Am I correct in gathering the impression from what the Senator from Maryland just stated that he believes that in the great duck area in the State of Maryland, and I agree with him that it is one of the best, in the East at least, there would have been more ducks at the present time if the Federal Government had not intervened and passed the migratory bird law?

Mr. TYDINGS. I was just about to anticipate the Senator's question. Ever since I have been living alongside the bay, which is about as long as I have been living anywhere, each year there has been a limitation on the number of ducks; but so far as I have been able to observe the number has been about constant. Ducks do not come to the same spot every year any more than people go to the same theater every night. Conditions of atmosphere and climate and the feed that they live on vary over the United States, sometimes bringing to us great numbers in one season, while in the next season we do not have as many.

But I would like to say to the Senator from New Jersey that I have on a number of occasions looked out on Chesapeake Bay and have seen 4 to 5 solid miles of white swan sitting in a single row. We can not kill a swan because there is a closed season all the year around on swan, and yet the swan, which is a very active bird, has dug tremendous holes in the celery beds on the Susquehanna flats and destroyed large quantities of feed, so that the ducks no longer come and use those particular spots as they once did, because the swan sits there all day long, unmolested, and doing nothing but digging up tremendous amounts of duck feed, which floats away down the bay and is destroyed. I believe that it would be an act of conservation to permit a gunner to kill two or three swan every year, and no gunner will kill more than a dozen, because that is one bird which has a very fine college education when it comes to eluding the hunter.

We can not compare this year with last year, but I would say in the main that the number of ducks has been as constant as we could reasonably ask, and that there has been no great decrease and no great increase. Some seasons there are lots of ducks, hundreds of thousands of them. Other seasons there are not quite so many. It is not due so much to gunning, but to the season, the condition of feed, the length of the season, and many other things.

Have I answered the Senator's question?

Mr. EDGE. Yes; very interestingly, indeed. I am glad to have the Senator's views.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me a moment?

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly.

Mr. DILL. In the light of the discussion as to the amount of land used in Canada for refuges and reserves, I think it is worth noting that the State refuges in the United States amount to more than 30,000,000 acres of land. I get these figures from the Biological Survey.

Mr. NORBECK. Will the Senator enlighten us as to how much of that is suitable for the nesting of migratory birds?

Mr. DILL. I am not able to give the Senator a description of each piece of the land.

Mr. NORBECK. I asked that question when the Senator talked about it two years ago. What amount of it is suitable for the purposes of the pending bill?

Mr. DILL. I have not been able to go out and cruise the land.

Mr. NORBECK. My State has a very large area of sanctuary, but very little of it is suitable for migratory bird sanctuary, almost nil.

Mr. DILL. I notice there are over 7,000,000 acres of Federal refuges in the United States, making a total of almost 38,000,000 acres of land devoted to that purpose. Certainly out of that 38,000,000 acres there must be a few millions of it good for migratory birds, but because the ammunition makers a few years ago started a program to raise money to buy some more bird refuges and make some more public shooting grounds, and were intending to take it out of a 10 per cent tax on ammunition, which was later abolished, we have this hue and cry to put everybody in the country, who wants to hunt a little bit, under a Federal licensing system. There is absolutely no reason for it and there is no defense for it, in my judgment.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator certainly did not mean to make that remark. The bill is not applicable to everybody.

Mr. DILL. It is applicable to everybody who wants to hunt off of his own land.

Mr. NORBECK. It is applicable to everybody who wants to hunt migratory birds.

Mr. DILL. The bill says if he shall attempt to hunt them.

Mr. NORBECK. So does the law in the Senator's own State.

Mr. DILL. We have to have a license in my State.

Mr. NORBECK. That is all the Senator would have to do under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. DILL. But the Senator's bill says only to hunt migratory birds. How will the game warden know whether a man is hunting migratory birds or hunting rabbits?

Mr. NORBECK. How does he know under the law existing to-day in the different States?

Mr. DILL. I do not know what the reason is, but I know that the existing law does not provide penalties if a man shall attempt to hunt them.

Mr. NORBECK. Yes, it does. That matter was thrashed out two years ago. We have very large game areas covered under the State laws.

Mr. DILL. The Senator may defend that proposition if he wishes to do so.

Mr. NORBECK. I am not defending it, but there is no use attacking this bill because of something we have had for 20 or 30 or even 100 years. This is not bringing that provision into effect again, because it is something we have had before.

Mr. DILL. There is a vast difference in putting into a Federal bill provisions that may happen to be in State legislation, because the Federal legislation should cover only Federal grounds, but the Senator's bill covers State, Federal, and everything else.

Mr. NORBECK. And so does the migratory bird treaty entered into 10 years ago. In other words, we have had for 10 years that which we are endeavoring to get under the terms of the pending bill.

Mr. DILL. Then why enact it again? Why not strike it out of the bill if it is so terrible?

Mr. NORBECK. I am perfectly willing to strike it out of the bill, except so far as it relates to bird preserves, and I have so indicated before, because that authority rests with the Federal Government and has rested there for 10 years under the Wilson Migratory Bird Act.

Mr. DILL. There is nothing under the Wilson Migratory Bird Act that requires people to take out a license to hunt.

Mr. NORBECK. That is true. That is why there has not been money for bird preserves.

Mr. DILL. We could get money if the Senator would work as hard to get the money as he has worked for the passage of this bill.

Mr. NORBECK. I have worked with the Senator in attempting to get money. I have supported every bill under which the Senator has wanted to get money since I came here.

Mr. DILL. The Senator will not agree to any such thing in connection with this bill, though?

Mr. NORBECK. I do not care to have the bill destroyed.

Mr. DILL. I think it would be saved. I think it is the only way the bill could be saved.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield again to me?

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. I would like also to call the attention of the Senator from South Dakota, who is the author of the bill, that what the legislation really does is to prevent the poor man enjoying the benefit of the game refuges. Under our present treaty and under the laws passed in pursuance of that treaty a man can not sell any waterfowl that may be killed. The idea back of that is not a bad one if it is properly carried out; but what it really comes down to is that the man who wants to shoot has to have an outfit that costs from $100 to $2,000 or $3,000. Not every man can afford to do that. Furthermore, he has to have a crew of at least one man for a bushwhack boat, and if he guns out of a sinkbox he needs four or five. He has to have a cabin boat. It is the only way he can get any hunting on the bay. I would like to say to the Senator that very few working people, to illustrate, can afford to invest that much money in an outfit.

Mr. NORBECK. That may be true, but in our State they do not have to have those outfits.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am showing the Senator how the game law works out. I have seen people come into my State from New York and Philadelphia, gun on the flats, and kill the bag limit—which is 25 ducks per man—and take them out of the State. Men of means come down there every other day during the season; and yet the people of the town, who would like just once in a season to eat a pair of ducks, can not buy a pair of ducks to save their souls unless they violate the law, and yet they live in Maryland and live alongside the game preserves.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator is complaining about the laws of his own State.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; that is the Federal law. I am discussing the Federal law.

Mr. NORBECK. That is not the thing I am complaining about. It is not a matter we have under consideration now.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; but the Senator is giving the board he creates the right to make rules and regulations governing game preserves, and that is what the other bill did. Under that authority the board made rules and regulations which really took the game out of the poor man's hands and gave to the rich authority to gun wherever and whenever he saw fit, and to do whatever he wanted with the game when it was killed. When we give a bureau the right to make rules and regulations, we give them the right to make law. When we gave them that right under the terms of the other bill, they used that right as I have just explained. It works out just like the prohibition law, letting the wealthy man get everything he wants while the poor man gets nothing.

Mr. NORBECK. Let us not get mixed up in a discussion of the prohibition question at this time.

Mr. TYDINGS. The philosophy of the thing is just the same. It is a law for one class of people who get what they want, while another class not so fortunate have very little or no privilege under it.

I want also to ask the Senator whether he does not think there are enough laws in the country now? I would be delighted to have some candidate for President issue a proclamation and name about 500,000 laws that he would have repealed. Do we want to put people in chains and make ninnies out of them? Do we not want them to have some self-reliance? Talk about the land of the free and the home of the brave—most everything in this country that goes to make a man happy is either unlawful or unhealthy. [Laughter.]

I think we have gone far enough. I think it is time for the Senate to quit delegating its authority to boards and commissions. If we must enact a lot of laws, let us do the thing ourselves and not turn it over to some one who probably knows nothing about the subject, but who issues thousands upon thousands of regulations respecting the liberties of the people.

Mr. NORBECK. During the last week the Senate passed a bill by a unanimous vote conferring that very kind of power.

Mr. TYDINGS. Not with my vote.

Mr. NORBECK. Nor with any protest.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is a brave flea that eats its breakfast on the lip of a lion. I have not been here long enough to reach the stage of protesting. I am just finishing my breakfast, being a new Member, and shall wait until lunch time comes along before I protest, and then I am going to do more of it.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I would like to ask the Senator from South Dakota a question. I think the United States has been divided into three zones, so far as migratory birds are concerned.

Mr. NORBECK. No; not under the bill now before us; only under the old law.

Mr. BROUSSARD. My understanding is that in the first and second zones; that is, the eastern zone and the middle zone, there are more birds than we have ever had before. Is that true?

Mr. NORBECK. No. The Senator has just asked for my opinion of the matter, and that is all I could give. I will say that the testimony before the committee has shown a constant decrease in birds except the last year. For instance, if we have a year of unusual rainfall, then more birds are destroyed in the United States than when we have better weather conditions, but there has been a gradual drainage of swamps and polluting of waters, and it has been more difficult for the birds to find nesting places. That is the general condition.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Does the Senator mean breeding places?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes. There would not have been any necessity for a migratory-bird treaty had it not been for that fact. I think in most of the United States the game birds have been protected. I think legislation which has been adopted has tended somewhat to retard destruction.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I am not talking about what happened in the United States, because we have had a 25-bag limit all the time.

Mr. NORBECK. In some States they have less, of course. It is unequal among the States. That is the maximum under the Federal law.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I attended some sessions of the committee last year where it was admitted that there are more birds in the eastern and central zones than ever before. In the western zone it was explained that, due to some poison or other, the birds had been destroyed.

Mr. NORBECK. Due to low water, drainage of swamps, which meant alkali poisoning of large areas.

Mr. BROUSSARD. In the western zone?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes.

Mr. BROUSSARD. My understanding has been that in the eastern and central zones we have had more birds than we ever had before. That was my understanding a year ago. That is an increase under the present law.

I should like to ask the Senator this question: Why would not the Senator be satisfied to permit the acquisition by the Federal Government of the necessary resting places for birds and to appropriate the money for that purpose out of the Federal Treasury, instead of proposing, as the bill provides, to send game wardens and other Federal agents into every State of the Union to sell Federal licenses to those who may wish to hunt? In most cases, I think, that will discourage the enforcement of the State laws and the activities of the agencies set up in the States to protect game. In my opinion, in States such as my own, which have spent a great deal of money and have set aside many hundreds of thousands of acres of land for bird refuges where the birds may remain during the entire winter, the effect of this bill will not be salutary. The birds in the State sanctuaries are under the control of State wardens.

If we are going to permit Federal wardens to go into the various States and sell licenses to hunters, to disarm those who have not taken out Federal licenses, and to bring them to a Federal court, which in most instances, of course, will not be in the county where the offender resides, but many miles away, to answer a misdemeanor charge of violating the game laws, it appears to me it will work an unnecessary hardship.

Would it not be easier and much more convenient to everybody to appropriate the money in order to provide these resting places without requiring Federal licenses and sending into the several States an army of Federal game wardens and other officers to sell Federal licenses and to enforce the game laws? In my opinion, that will confuse the people, and will make it probable that the State law will be more easily violated by those who have Federal licenses. Would it not be easier to appropriate the money directly to do what the Senator in his bill aims to do, without imposing these licenses upon the individual citizens of the respective States?

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I wish to answer the Senator frankly. I recognize his real sincerity in behalf of proper conservation. The Senator, I presume, wants to bring about a condition where more birds will be produced.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I do.

Mr. NORBECK. About 90 per cent of my concern is in regard to that very point. The question of enforcement is entirely secondary. It is always an open question how much of it should be done by the Federal Government, or whether the greater part of it should be left to the State.

We have to-day Federal game wardens who travel over the States. I have noticed when they come into my State that they have a stiffening influence on the local wardens and their presence tends to check violations of the law. There has been no objection to Federal game wardens so far. However, that is a minor thing; the main thing is to acquire ground for nesting places for birds. The Senator and I, I take it, are thoroughly in accord on that point.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to state to the Senator that just the contrary is true in my State. In Maryland we do object to the Federal Government sending its agents into the State to run our own local affairs.

Mr. NORBECK. South Dakota does not even object to the enforcement of the Volstead Act by Federal agents.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wish to say further that we do not object to the Federal Government providing an Army, providing a Navy, establishing a standard of money and coining it; we do not object to the Government punishing counterfeiting and establishing post offices and post roads, providing for a militia, instituting courts inferior to the Supreme Court, and doing what the Constitution provides that Congress shall do; but we do object to its meddling in every phase of our individual activities, because we feel we have just as much intelligence and just as much right to freedom as have the people of any other State. So that if we are forced to take this law or any other law which is outside of the general functions of the Federal Government, in effect, it is tantamount to saying that the Federal Government knows better than do the people of the States under what local laws they should live.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator was not listening to me very closely——

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I was.

Mr. NORBECK. When I said that, I considered the main part of this question was the acquiring of ground for nesting places for birds. I have much less interest in the other points.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is more interested in game than he is in the human beings who will be affected by this proposed law. I am more interested in the people than I am in the game; that is the difference.

Mr. NORBECK. I am simply trying to save the birds from extinction and to provide more birds for the people. The Senator can draw his own conclusion from that statement.

Mr. TYDINGS. What the Senator's bill would do is this: If a boy up in my end of the State, the northern part of Maryland, should kill a railbird or blue jay, a Federal officer would take him, although he was only 17 years of age, all the way to the United States court at Baltimore, while his poor mother and father were trying frantically to get bond so that he could get home. Then he would have to take his attorney down there and have a trial there, all because he killed a blue jay up in the northern part of Cecil County.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator is an attorney and I am not. Let me, therefore, ask the Senator if that is not the situation under the present law, instead of a situation which will be created by the bill which I am advocating?

Mr. TYDINGS. And the Senator admits that his remedy for it is to have more of it instead of less.

Mr. NORBECK. My remedy is to have more preserves and to raise more birds.

Mr. DILL. And to hire more Federal game wardens.

Mr. NORBECK. The present Federal law compels one who is charged with an offense against it to go into the Federal court. I might say that this bill, in a way, eases off that situation by permitting the commissioner to deal with minor offenses.

Mr. TYDINGS. What commissioner?

Mr. NORBECK. The United States commissioner.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is the commissioner going to have to travel all around the United States?

Mr. NORBECK. If the Senator will read the bill——

Mr. TYDINGS. I have read it.

Mr. NORBECK. He will find that it tries to ease off the very situation of which the Senator is complaining.

Now, however, I will ask the Senator to permit me to answer the question of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD]. He has asked a plain question, namely, why we can not carry out the purposes of this bill by direct appropriation? That gets down to the meat of the bill. Nothing would please me better than to do it by direct appropriation, but progress along that line has been discouraging. A good many efforts in that direction have been made, but all except one have proven futile. A year ago we passed a bill to establish a large game preserve in Utah. That bill went over to the House and it did not become a law. We have felt that if provision were made for direct appropriations to carry out the terms of this bill it might fare very much like the forest purchase law. Under that law appropriations were authorized and a policy was established; the department goes out and secures options on this piece of land and that piece of land, but Congress fails to make the appropriations, and the contracts default. Then the department goes out next year and gets options at higher prices. The hope of those who advocate the Federal license provision of the bill is that it will establish a definite policy under which the necessary money will be available from year to year and that it will be practicable to operate under it. Do I make myself clear?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I wish to say——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORBECK. Will the Senator from Maryland, please, let me answer the question of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I wish to say, Mr. President, that I would be very glad to vote for an appropriation to provide resting places for game, but I am very much opposed to the creation of additional Federal agencies throughout the States. In my own State, as I am sure the Senator is aware, we have spent much money in providing resting places for birds, where they spend the winter and where they are protected. That has been done at State expense. I am very much opposed to permitting Federal game wardens to come down there and take control of the agencies which the State has created with its own funds and to enforce laws over which the State itself will have no control locally. I should be glad to vote for an appropriation to acquire all the property necessary.

Mr. NORBECK. If I could accomplish that purpose, I would not ask for anything more. If we could establish the policy and secure the funds direct with which to establish bird preserves, I would be entirely happy.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I am willing to go with the Senator that far.

Mr. NORBECK. I appreciate the sentiments of the Senator, and I realize that there is room for a difference of opinion; but I could not resist the temptation of calling attention to the fact——

Mr. BROUSSARD. I can not go further than I have indicated.

Mr. NORBECK. I understand that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I know the Senator from North Dakota is sincere about this proposition.

Mr. NORBECK. I am glad there is no difference of opinion on this side of the Chamber as to whether I am sincere or not.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I must decline to yield further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES in the chair). The Senator from Wisconsin declines to yield further.

Mr. NORBECK. I think he is justified in doing so. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, my reason for declining to yield further is not because I want to object to the colloquy but I wish to conclude just a thought or two. Then the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], I am sure, wishes the Senate to go into executive session, and I want to accommodate myself accordingly.

Before I leave this subject I wish to make these general observations: I have shown conclusively that our Government has met all the requirements of the treaty, and, indeed, has gone far beyond its requirements. It is clear that many of the States have gone much further than the treaty requires or than the Federal Government has gone. I understand from the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] that Canada has about 700,000 acres in preserves or sanctuaries for wild life. I contend that area thus provided by Canada does not compare with the areas set aside in the United States, even by comparison of population.

In Wisconsin alone, according to my understanding, and according to the Senator from South Dakota, the number of acres set aside is about 25 per cent or more of the area set aside by Canada for game sanctuaries. The Federal Government has established national game and bird preserves as follows:

The National Bison Range, the Wind Cave National Game Preserve, the Wyoming Elk Reserve, the Sullys Hill National Park Game Reserve, the Custer State Park Game Sanctuary, the South Dakota Game, Animal, and Bird Refuge, the Ozark National Forest Game Reserve, the Wichita National Forest Game Breeding areas, the Grand Canyon Game Preserve, and the Upper Mississippi River Wild Life and Fish Refuge, a total of 10 of the national parks, all of which are wild life sanctuaries or reserves.

Moreover, just recently there was passed by the Senate a bill, which was introduced by the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], being Senate bill 2456, which provides:

> That for the purpose of providing breeding places for game and fur-bearing animals, game birds and fish on lands in the national forests not chiefly suitable for agriculture, the President of the United States is hereby authorized, upon recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture and with the approval of the State legislatures of the respective States in which said national forests are situated, to establish by public proclamation certain specified areas within said forests as game sanctuaries or refuges, which shall be devoted to the increase of game animals of all kinds naturally adapted thereto, but it is not intended that the lands included in such game sanctuaries or refuges shall cease to be parts of the national forests wherein they are located, and the establishment of such game sanctuaries or refuges shall not prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from permitting other uses of the national forests—

And it is provided that there can be no—

> hunting, pursuing, poisoning, killing, or capturing by trapping, netting, or any other means, or attempting to hunt, pursue, kill, or capture any wild animals for any purpose whatever upon the lands of the United States within the limits of said game sanctuaries.

The bill protects those national forests against invasion by man for the killing of wild life, and provides for sanctuaries many hundred times greater in area than Canada has provided. There are 19 national forests for wild life sanctuaries containing vast areas of land and water.

I am in favor of establishing such sanctuaries, but I want them to be inviolate. I am not in favor of establishing sanctuaries for the feeding and breeding and propagation of wild life designed exclusively, if you please, for the benefit of those who can afford the time and the leisure to enjoy them. Before I conclude to-morrow I think I can demonstrate clearly that this bill is to establish public preserves in America that will be as objectionable as were the game preserves created by the ancient régime in France. It is extremely interesting to know that the last great political battle waged by Premier Lloyd George of Great Britain before the World War was an attack, a campaign against the establishment of game preserves designed for the benefit of sportsmen who wanted conservation, not for the sake of wild life, but for the sake of shooting to kill.

I am in favor of sanctuaries that will permit the multiplying of wild life of every nature; but I want to give that wild life a chance for its life, an opportunity for its own defense. I do not want a game preserve or a bird refuge designed for the purpose of enticing these innocent creatures which are the friends of man to a place where they may be slaughtered.

To-morrow or at some future time before I conclude, I shall demonstrate conclusively that this bill is not designed in the interest of conservation; that it is a bill the title of which should read:

> A bill to more effectively defeat the obligations of the United States under the migratory bird treaty with Great Britain by increasing the dangers to migratory game birds from game hogs and other causes, by the acquisition of areas of land and of water to furnish in perpetuity reservations for the propagation of such birds for slaughter.

That should be the title of this proposed act.

I think I shall be able to prove conclusively that there can be no other result. I know it was not intended by the Senator from South Dakota; but I have shown conclusively that America has carried out every obligation of the treaty, gone far beyond that, and I think it will be as readily demonstrated that the purposes of this bill are as I have characterized them.

Monday, March 26, 1928

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, some days ago in discussing the migratory bird bill I undertook to define in a rather limited way the right to kill. I had not meant by my former remarks to suggest what meat men should eat. There may be those who choose other flesh in preference to fowl or who choose fowl in preference to fish. If there are those who desire to set up sanctuaries to breed and feed migratory game birds for food, I submit that their project is legitimate. Hunting is a very ancient right, dating back to the days of Nimrod, and I think I am tolerant enough to grant to any man the right to eat what he pleases, drink what he pleases, wear what he pleases, worship his God in the sanctuary of his own choice, pray to his God in the language of his choice, and to do anything else that is personal to himself that does not trespass upon the rights of his neighbor and his community. I therefore do not mean to say that a man has no right to hunt for food because he chooses wild game in preference to the meat of domesticated animals, but I merely want to point out that the establishment of game refuges and game sanctuaries for the mere purpose of propagating, breeding, and feeding game to be killed and slaughtered for the mere joy and sport of killing, in my opinion, is not justifiable.

I have, I think, clearly demonstrated that there is no necessity for this proposed legislation; that there is no obligation upon the United States to go beyond the point which we have gone in carrying out our duties under the treaty with Canada. I am, therefore, to-day intending to analyze this bill for what it is and what it will accomplish.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, before the Senator from Wisconsin starts on that branch of the subject may I ask him whether or not he has made an examination of the present law under the migratory bird treaty?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I have.

Mr. DILL. Does the Senator find any necessity or need of added legislation to control the game situation beyond that which the present law provides?

Mr. BLAINE. Absolutely none whatever, and during the course of debate the other day I pointed out section by section and provision by provision how the Congress of the United States had in all respects performed its obligation under the migratory bird treaty.

The real purpose of this proposed act is not to conserve wild life. The purpose of it is to tax the people of the United States in order to create a fund with which to buy areas of land as sanctuaries for migratory game birds, not for their protection, not for their conservation, but to create public shooting grounds. We might just as well be frank about this subject.

Mr. NORBECK. I wish the Senator from Wisconsin would be frank——

Mr. BLAINE. I will be.

Mr. NORBECK. And state that 60 per cent of the area of the sanctuaries would be inviolate to all hunting.

Mr. BLAINE. Exactly; and section 11——

Mr. NORBECK. I asked the Senator from Wisconsin whether he would favor the bill if we would make the prohibition against shooting apply to the entire sanctuaries and permit no hunting on any of them. I have not had his approval of that suggestion. If I had, we might amend the bill to meet that objection.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, let me suggest that there is not anything in the bill that provides which part of the sanctuaries may be used for public shooting grounds; whether it is to be along the side or down the middle; whether one portion is to be used one year and some other portion the next year. The bill leaves any part of the sanctuaries open for public shooting purposes or is so written that any part of a sanctuary may be open at any time.

Mr. BLAINE. To which fact I was going to call the attention of the Senator from South Dakota. I thank the Senator from Washington.

A committee amendment to section 11 provides:

> That at no time shall less than 60 per cent of the total acreage of the areas so acquired be maintained as inviolate sanctuaries for migratory birds.

That of itself is a vicious provision; that of itself establishes a trap. Far better, indeed, would it be to throw the entire sanctuary open to hunting and shooting and killing. The very provision making no less than 60 per cent of the total acreage of the sanctuaries for migratory birds inviolate is to set a trap into which the migratory birds are to be induced and seduced. That provision of itself ought to condemn the proposed legislation. What the whole bill proposes to do is to create a trap, and the more acreage which is embraced in a sanctuary the bigger the trap which would be created for migratory birds.

The Senator from South Dakota well knows there are very few migratory game birds covered by the treaty that propagate within the United States, and as to all the others the sanctuaries will constitute but a trap. That trap is to be a sanctified trap. It is to be planted with food for migratory birds so as to attract them there, not that they may breed but that they may be shot and killed. The 40 per cent of the area that is not to be inviolate will constitute the public slaughter ground. That is what this bill proposes.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, the Senator——

Mr. BLAINE. Just a moment. It is worse than that, if you please, for the entire area round and about the sanctuaries to such distances as migratory game birds may go likewise will be a part of the trap; it will constitute the outlying part of the trap; it will be the trap which the private hunting clubs of this country will use for private purposes, to the exclusion of the public. The sanctuary thereby becomes a part and parcel of those private shooting grounds; it is to be supported by public expenditures for the benefit of those who may be able to buy the adjoining land, and there establish blinds and places for hunting and shooting, from which area all other citizens are to be denied the right of ingress.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I now yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. NORBECK. For the purpose of clearing up this matter, let me say that I recognize the Senator's sincerity upon this question. The Senator does not believe in game sanctuaries in the way others of us do. My view is that the only way to preserve migratory bird life is to have bird sanctuaries. The Senator called my attention to the fact that Wisconsin, his home State, has done a great deal along that very line; that it has set aside large areas for bird sanctuaries; but, if I understand aright, he objects to the provisions of this bill on the ground that the establishment of sanctuaries will permit hunting outside the sanctuaries whether hunting grounds are allowed within the sanctuaries or whether they are not. I wish to ask if in the State of Wisconsin, under the very system which there the Senator recommends so highly, shooting is not permitted right outside of the bird sanctuaries by everybody, and if gun clubs are not established right around those sanctuaries—the very thing we are trying to avoid in this bill? I want to ask the Senator another question. Will there be one additional——

Mr. BLAINE. I can not answer several questions at once. Let me answer the question the Senator has asked before he asks me another.

Mr. NORBECK. Very well. I have asked the Senator one question; let us have an answer to it.

Mr. BLAINE. The migratory game birds covered by the treaty are not found generally adjoining any sanctuaries in Wisconsin. The birds are migratory; they do not stop anywhere, and if you want to hunt geese or if you want to hunt brant——

Mr. NORBECK. According to my understanding, the Senator took the position the other day that Wisconsin had done a great deal for this very purpose. Do I understand that it has done it for some other purpose, instead of protecting migratory birds?

Mr. BLAINE. No; the Senator is trying to twist my argument.

Mr. NORBECK. I am trying to get the Senator's view.

Mr. BLAINE. I argued the other day that Wisconsin has fully performed her duty and gone far beyond her duty under the treaty with Canada. She has gone as far perhaps as any other State. I say let her alone. I do not want to see the Federal Government with an army of game wardens step into Wisconsin and break down the splendid enforcement of the law that we have there. I say "keep out."

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator from Wisconsin will agree that the Federal Government at this time has a game warden who goes into Wisconsin, while the State of Wisconsin has 56 game wardens; that there is nothing in this bill that confers additional powers on going into Wisconsin; that if the Federal Government goes into Wisconsin, under this bill it will go in by the consent and the invitation of Wisconsin; and that is the only way it will get into Wisconsin unless it goes in under the law that is 10 years old.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not understand how this bill prevents the game wardens that are created under this law from going into Wisconsin.

Mr. NORBECK. But they operate under a law 10 years old when they go there.

Mr. BLAINE. If you enact this bill, the same five or six hundred game wardens that you propose to create by this bill can go into Wisconsin——

Mr. NORBECK. Now, be fair.

Mr. BLAINE. Wait a minute, now—they can go into the State of Wisconsin not to protect birds but to get votes, if you please.

Mr. NORBECK. Is that what game wardens are used for in Wisconsin? If so, I am glad to have the Senator enlighten us.

Mr. BLAINE. Your Federal officers are used for that purpose in Wisconsin. You know it, too. This bill provides——

Mr. NORBECK. It provides for their selection through the civil service, without any regard to politics.

Mr. BLAINE. Just wait a minute. I am entitled to answer the Senator's question. Here you have a whole army of game wardens——

Mr. NORBECK. There is no army provided for.

Mr. BLAINE. Wait a minute, now. I will not yield, Mr. President, until I answer the Senator's question. You provide for a whole army of game wardens. If the administration at Washington perchance wants a Mr. Hoover nominated for President, there is nothing in this bill to prevent this proposed army of game wardens from being sent into Wisconsin just at the proper time when the primaries are being held in Wisconsin for the nomination of delegates. There is nothing in this bill that will prevent that army of game wardens from going into Wisconsin just about the time the election is held in November; and I want to tell you, when you throw three or four or five hundred Federal officers into a State——

Mr. NORBECK. Why does not the Senator call it 5,000? He has just as much right to call it 5,000 as 500.

Mr. BLAINE. I will ask the Senator please not to interrupt me while I am making a statement. They can go into any State in the Union, and they become a powerful political machine.

I am going to discuss that question before I get through. I think I can fairly infer from the provisions of this bill how many game wardens are going to be provided for under the bill.

Mr. NORBECK. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that I have repeatedly suggested that I am willing to limit the number to 1 or 2 from each State, instead of the 500 or 5,000 that the Senator talks about.

Mr. BLAINE. I am talking about this bill. There is not any amendment before the Senate for any such purpose. Why, you have set up here a beautiful scheme for political manipulation, a beautiful situation, not to protect migratory game birds. I will say that if this bill were the law now, and had been for the last five or six years, it would have been a splendid scheme to have this army of game wardens going out into these various States where men were candidates for Senator, where the Democratic Party might have an opportunity to succeed, or where the progressive membership of the several States might have an opportunity to succeed—it would have been a wonderful scheme to have sent these game wardens into those States—to protect migratory game birds? No! To nominate and elect men favorable to the administration. It is a wonderful system you have here for the protection of predatory interests if the President or the administration wants to use the power that you are going to give an administration under this bill.

Now let me proceed to the analysis of this bill.

Here is a sanctuary purchased. We will say it is 100,000 acres, or we will say it is 10 miles square. Sixty per cent of it is inviolate. Forty per cent of it is a public shooting ground. Just outside of that sanctuary there are 40 miles of boundary line about which can be and will be set up private hunting grounds, encouraged by the establishment of this sanctuary—a sanctuary to which these migratory game birds are to be induced and seduced by feeding. That is what this bill does. I challenge the Senator from South Dakota to bring in here a bill that provides money out of the Treasury of the United States directly with which to buy these sanctuaries and make them inviolate.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, does the Senator want me to respond to that challenge? Was it made in good faith for the purpose of having a reply?

Mr. BLAINE. You have the remainder of the session to bring out such a bill.

Mr. NORBECK. I thought so.

Mr. BLAINE. You may introduce it as an amendment to this bill, and I will vote for it.

Mr. NORBECK. Because the Senator knows that very few others will.

Mr. BLAINE. I trust the Senator has a little different opinion of my motives in this matter. I am not questioning his motives.

Mr. NORBECK. No; I will amend that, and I will say it is well known that it can not pass. There have been repeated efforts made to do that; so that is futile.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not know whether it can pass or not. That is not a reason why this bill should be brought out here, and a special fund raised at the cost of some 5,000,000 people in America, only a small portion of whom will have the opportunity to enjoy these hunting grounds.

Mr. NORBECK. Where does the Senator get his number of 5,000,000?

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator will just let me proceed, I will get to that.

Mr. NORBECK. I challenge those statements; and I should like to show that they are wrong, but I can not break in. I will let the Senator proceed now.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator will have an opportunity to disprove my statements when I get through. I am going to give the reasons for my statements.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, would it disturb the Senator if I should interrupt him at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I left the Chamber a moment ago, in response to a telephone call; and as I was leaving the Chamber the Senator was animadverting upon the fact that this bill provided for a large number of game wardens to be appointed by the Department of Agriculture and by the Biological Survey, and that that army of officials might come from one section or various sections and might be thrust into States at the critical time to aid the administration that happened to be in power.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, may I inform the Senator from Utah that I have just offered an amendment to the bill the purpose of which is to limit game wardens to the States in which they reside; and there is also a civil-service provision under which they can not take part in politics.

Mr. KING. May I say to my friend from South Dakota that what he says about civil-service employees not taking part in politics is an illusion, because we know that many civil-service employees do take part in politics, and are a potential factor in elections. I congratulate the Senator upon offering that amendment, however. I think it is a proper one.

I was about to observe that we have now nearly 800,000 employees in the Government service, possibly more, the greater part of whom are under the civil service. The number is being augmented almost daily. New bureaus are constantly being created. I do not know how many will be created at this session. The President of the United States has recommended the creation of another department. That department, of course, will be the central cell, and will throw off other cells, and those cells still other cells, and there will be bureaus and sub-bureaus and agencies, all attached to the central cell known as the department.

The way we are progressing, in 25 years there will be from a million and a half to two million Federal employees. They will be found by the thousand in every State. In my State, with its limited population, there are now hundreds of Federal employees. They are concerned with every activity of the people. They go into their homes; pry into their business; and often seek to influence the views of the people upon economic, industrial, and political questions. We are literally suffering now from the evils of an omnipotent bureaucracy; and no government in the world is as tyrannous as a bureaucracy.

The Senator from Wisconsin has put his finger upon one of the evils in our Government to-day, because a bureaucracy in a democracy is the worst form of bureaucracy. I submit to the Senator that he is entirely right in his observation that the game wardens, if they are selected as the bill provides they shall be selected, would go into States where they did not live and many of them would actively participate in politics.

Does not the Senator think it is time that we should try to curb Federal bureaucracy, bring the Government back to the people, permit the States to enjoy the sovereignty which belongs to them, develop more local self-government and more individuality, and oppose this movement manifesting itself industrially and politically, which in the end must culminate in a powerful paternalistic and bureaucratic government, and in the growth of trusts and combinations in restraint of trade which will dominate the industrial and economic life of the people?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, there is no question but that the tendency is exactly as described by the distinguished Senator from Utah. It does not appear to me that that tendency is making the strength of our Nation. I am convinced, as I said the other day, that when you take the responsibility of government off a people, off a community, when you relieve them of duties and obligations, you are destroying the sanctity of law, for there is no other sanction for law except that which abides in the people, and when that ceases to abide in the people there ceases to be sanction for law and you then have a government with the responsibility to do all things.

It has been the history of the world that when local responsibility has ceased, when community responsibility has ceased, when there is a public official at the heels of every citizen, commanding, intermeddling, the citizen then has become merely a minor cog and the Government no longer a government of the people but a government by a select few, and the sanctity of law and the sanction for law have ceased. I discussed that matter the other day. I know it can not be emphasized too often or too strongly. We are facing these problems not only in this proposed legislation but in other legislation past and presently proposed.

Here is a proposition to surrender a part of local self-government to centralized government, to surrender a duty and a responsibility of local self-government to the administration of a department operating through game wardens. The very dignity of our government in this proposal is being dragged down, and America and her institutions are becoming mere arms of the police power which should be exercised by the States.

Mr. President, as I said a few moments ago, if this bill were before this Congress making an appropriation out of the general funds for the purchase of these sanctuaries, stripped of all other objections, of course there would be little support for it, because we would not submit to taking money out of the general funds of the Federal Government with which to buy game preserves in the interest of public shooting grounds and private shooting grounds. Here it is proposed, however, with a strong arm to collect the dollars from the little boys in blue jeans, from the farmers, from the workingmen, from the small business men, from every class of our citizenship who choose occasionally to shoulder their guns, not in the hunting of these migratory game birds, but in the hunting of the game that is in their localities and near their homes. It is proposed that we taken those dollars and invest them in these sanctuaries, which I think I have demonstrated become public shooting grounds and the adjuncts of the private millionaire hunting clubs of this Nation, furnishing them a splendid opportunity to build their blinds and their traps around and about these sanctuaries, whereby they will be afforded an opportunity to kill for sport.

The proponents of this measure do not dare advocate a bill that will take money out of the Public Treasury for that purpose. It is proposed to take it from a large class who have but a small interest in the immediate purposes of this bill.

The other day a map was drawn showing the outline of one of the sanctuaries proposed by this bill. Its area was in length about twice its width. We will assume that it was 20 miles in length and 10 miles in width. Around and about that sanctuary, having a boundary of 60 miles, were located the private shooting clubs of that State and of that section, and that is exactly what is going to occur if this bill is passed, not only as to one sanctuary but as to every sanctuary and as many sanctuaries as the fund proposed by this legislation will purchase.

It therefore at once becomes apparent that these so-called sanctuaries will be nothing more and nothing less than traps into which the innocent wild life is to be enticed, and there fed and there bred, where there may be breeding, to supply hunting privileges upon those innumerable private reserves and private millionaire clubs around and about these public sanctuaries, and the few American citizens who have the time and the opportunity and the leisure and money to buy the equipment to make the trip, may be privileged to hunt upon a portion of these sanctuaries as public shooting grounds.

The great mass of the people will not derive benefit out of the establishment of these public shooting grounds. The greater benefits are going to enure to the private individuals who have the money and the time and the leisure to join the private hunting clubs, who establish the private game reserves, and they, throughout the entire open season for these game birds, will enjoy that which will have been furnished them by the great Government of the United States out of the pockets of those who can not afford either the time or the expenditure.

If that does not bring resentment, then I do not know the American people. It is proposed that we exact from them dollars in order to buy sanctuaries, and pay for their maintenance. Those dollars will be exacted out of the men who will not have the opportunity to enjoy, if there is enjoyment, those public shooting grounds. The millionaire, the man of leisure, is to be the beneficiary of these exactions.

Worse than that, here is a new proposal in America. It is almost the beginning of an attempt to exercise the entire police power that exists in the governments of our respective States. Anyone who has studied this problem knows full well that when the Federal Government once seizes a power, small though it may be—a power that trespasses upon the rights of the States, that trespasses upon local self-government—the time when that power is seized, no matter how small a portion the Federal Government may take, is the first step in the particular field so entered by the Government to occupy that field to the exclusion of the powers and duties and responsibilities of the State. That has been the history we have had in our interstate commerce legislation. It is a well-recognized principle that when the Federal Government once enters a field, if it has any power at all, the Congress of the United States will permit it to enter that field exclusive of all other power and all other jurisdiction.

If we permit the Federal Government to enter the field of policing game preserves in our respective States, policing the whole State—every acre of it—quite without regard to whether or not there is a game preserve in the State, it does not take any stretch of the imagination at once to appreciate that the next step will be to take control of our streams, our rivers, and our lakes, and all those ancient privileges of hunting and fishing, and whatever may be granted to the citizens will then come from the Government of the United States and not from the respective States. Therein, I think, lies the curse of this kind of legislation—the danger that threatens the very existence of our Union, as I have remarked, breaking down local and community interests, destroying local and community responsibility and duty until the citizens lapse into a state of indifference as to their Government, so that instead of the Government being made for the citizen the citizen is made for the Government, and government at once becomes the enemy of her citizens.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The Senator's observations exhibit a knowledge of the philosophy of government and of the irresistible movements, political and economic, manifesting themselves in the Republic to-day. The Senator is familiar with the attitude of many writers and professors who apotheosize the unitary system of government and look with indifference, if not hostility, upon our dual form of government. They say the gravitational forces of government are so powerful that they will draw to the central orb all local government and overwhelm if not destroy all appreciation of local responsibility.

The Senator has pointed out with clearness the fact that when the Federal Government enters the field of economic, industrial, or political activities it crowds out or submerges the sovereign States or the local government and assumes responsibilities which belong to the latter. The Senator has instanced a number of cases. May I call his attention to the fact that on the question of prohibition—and I do not mean to express any opinion in regard to that matter—when the Federal Government enacted the Volstead law and sent large numbers of officials into the States to enforce it some of the States who had enacted excellent prohibitory statutes which were being enforced with intelligence and zeal experienced a reaction which, in some instances, led to diminished zeal in the enforcement of State laws and in other cases brought almost to a standstill local enforcement. A feeling developed in some localities that the Federal Government had taken over the control of the liquor traffic and had assumed responsibilities which theretofore had been accepted by the States. I might add in passing that when a superior power or authority is invoked the lesser authority usually becomes less active and competent. Divided authority often weakens responsibility and effectiveness. Many States have excellent public health organizations which have accomplished great good in promoting sanitation and health. The Federal Government, with its itch and ambition for further authority and power, has reached out into the domain of the States and is more and more controlling the public health activities which appertain to sovereign States, and many people are not dissuading the Federal Government in its efforts to extend its activities into the States, but, upon the contrary, they are encouraging it so to do.

The result will be that if this Federal policy is continued there will be greater demands for Federal control of the entire Public Health Service of the United States. There are some who demand that our educational system shall be controlled by the Federal Government as was largely the case in Germany. The processes of Federal absorption of States and their political subdivisions is being carried forward with accelerated speed and apparently with resistless momentum. Most of the important measures in Congress seek to transfer from the States to the Federal Government authority and rights and obligations which belong to the States and to the people. The tenth amendment to the Constitution is disregarded and any challenge of Federal invasion of State rights is regarded as only within the domain of academic discussion and unworthy of this practical and utilitarian age. Rights which patriots struggled to secure are fritted away, indeed, are gladly surrendered to the central Government with its all-embracing authority and its unchecked—I was about to say imperial—power. In my opinion the great question before the American people is, "Shall the States be preserved?" Shall local self-government endure? Shall the school of democracy be permitted to live or shall our form of government suffer radical and fundamental changes which will result in a powerful central government unrestrained by constitutional limitations and exercising an unrestrained power?

In the days of Lincoln the question was, Shall the Union be preserved? The issue now is, and it is as important as the issue then raised, Shall the States be preserved? It has often been declared that this is an indestructible Union of indestructible States. It is as great a crime to destroy the States as it is to destroy the Union. No issue in the coming campaign should be more vital or more important than that raised by the question, Shall the States survive or shall local self-government endure? The pages of history record the rise and fall of nations. Liberal governments have degenerated into tyrannies and then have fallen. This Government should rest as a pyramid upon a broad base. If the people surrender their rights, if they are not trained in the school of local self-government, if they barter away the crown of State sovereignty for the glittering bauble of centralized power and authority, then if they are brave enough or thoughtful enough to look into the future they will witness the consequences of inexorable laws and behold the ruin of a system of government which was the hope of the world. Aristotle chronicled the death of many nations which had come to untimely ends because of the centralizing forces which destroyed liberty and rendered the people incapable of self-government.

Nations have died from hypertrophy; they have taken the blood from the extremities; they have concentrated the vital fluid in the heart. The transfer of political authority from the people and from the States to Washington is not only dangerous but a deadly thing. It leads to the paralysis of the great cells of life and vitality. We must have more local self-government, more vitality and power in the smallest local subdivisions of the States. There must be more active participation by the people in their local affairs, more interest and zeal in their local governmental concerns; there must be developed a greater State pride and greater love of State and city and county and precinct and parish. There must be a love of home, and home ties must be strengthened, and the home must be the great spring of liberty and independence, the great fountain which will pour forth the waters of salvation for our political, economic, and cultural activities. There can be a despotism, though it bears the name of democracy. Perhaps there can be no more oppressive government than a bureaucratic one. The bolsheviks of Russia proclaim their devotion to liberty and claim that they are building a democratic structure. The fact is that the far-off cities and provinces and communities of Russia are within the powerful grasp of a despotic bureaucracy which is controlled by a few individuals sitting in the Kremlin in Moscow.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] is doing the public a service in challenging attention to the growth of bureaucracy in the United States and the evils which must follow bureaucratic triumph and centralization of political power and authority in Washington. The States must not be destroyed. The line of demarkation separating them from the National Government must not be obliterated. This is a government of republics in a Republic, and the 48 republics may not be destroyed by the National Government. If our dual system shall be destroyed, if the gravitational forces draw the States into the arms of a mighty National Government, then the faith and hopes of those who believed that Republican institutions could survive will have been in vain.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a short observation?

Mr. BLAINE. I will yield in just a moment. I want to stress, in connection with what the Senator from Utah has said, that I am not concerned about the destruction of mere abstract powers. What I am concerned about is the destruction of the duties, the responsibilities, and the obligations of the men and women of America. I think the Senator from Utah has analyzed the situation correctly, and that other governments had reached their decadence because governments persistently and effectually destroy the duties and the obligations and the responsibilities which rest upon the people in whom and in whom alone abide the sanction of the law. There is no other sanction for the law, and when the abiding place for that sanction has been destroyed by the removing of obligations and duties and responsibilities, then, of course, comes the destruction of a government. I am glad now to yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. This bill, if enacted into law, would create another bureau in the Government; and I want to draw to the Senator's attention an illustration of where the bureaus are leading us. As the Senator knows, we have a Bureau of Animal Industry. Among its various duties is the duty of inspecting meat which is shipped to the people from those killing steers and sheep and other livestock. I take no exception to this proper function. It so happens that last year in my State four or five small concerns wanted to go into the business of selling meat, and before they could go into that business they had to have certain plans for the building of their plants and certain machinery and certain restrictions surrounding their industry all approved by the Bureau of Animal Industry. This before they could sell a pound of meat.

That might be all right in places, but after these gentlemen had built their plants, installed their machinery, and had it all approved by the Federal Government, the Bureau of Animal Industry served notice upon them that they could not sell any meat anyhow. The question was naturally asked, Why? The Bureau of Animal Industry said that the Congress had failed to appropriate sufficient money to permit an inspector to be placed at those points where meats had to be inspected. But, these men said, "The big four packing establishments have between them upwards of 600 meat inspectors. We only require one for all our activities. Is it not in the interest of justice that you take one of those inspectors away from the men who now have 500 or 600, because it will not hamper them much, but if we do not get at least one inspector we will be put out of business." The bureau said they were powerless to act and could not give them an inspector, because they wanted to place the inspectors where they could inspect the greatest volume of meat. Therefore after all the plants in question were constructed at a cost of many thousands of dollars, those men were told they could not actually engage in business when they had done everything that the law required them to do.

Finally, upon my own responsibility, I told the men to go ahead and sell the meat, because the delinquency was that of the Government and not theirs; that they had in every way complied with the law, and that, in my judgment, no jury in the world would convict them when the Government and not they was at fault. They went ahead and sold the meat. The first carload that went out of the State of Maryland into a neighboring State was seized by the policemen of the Federal Government, and those men were haled into court charged with the crime of selling meat which was not inspected by the Government. I immediately took the matter up again with the proper authorities, and I found that while they did not have money enough to supply an inspector for those meat plants they did have money enough to have four or five policemen to catch anybody who violated the law. I suggested that they do away with that one policeman and appoint one inspector with the money, which was done after a delay of over three months in permitting these small packing establishments to operate.

That is a sample of the way bureaucracy works in this Government. The idealistic views which are set forth in legislation, under rules and regulations and red tape and appropriations contingent upon the operation of the law, are not forthcoming, and the citizen is simply bound hand and foot. His natural and honest and competitive rights are taken away from him. For that reason I am very glad the Senator is going into the subject, showing to what bureaucracy leads, the loss of individual freedom, and showing the amount of control and regulation by a lot of people who very often are not in great sympathy with the thing they are regulating, but who simply want a political place. For my part I am ready and willing to leave a lot of these things to the people to settle as they want to settle them, and not have the Federal Government dipping into every activity from the cradle to the grave that surrounds the life and actions of human beings. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, in the case to which the junior Senator from Maryland refers he must appreciate that his constituents were only about 40 miles from the Capital. Had they been 3,000 miles away, instead of taking three or four months to adjust the difficulty, it would have taken three or four years, and perhaps even then it never would have been adjusted. The idea of having government far away from the people is the very cause against which our forefathers struggled. I will discuss that briefly before I get through.

I was calling attention to the fact that if it had been the intent of the author, he could not have designed a more perfect scheme for encouraging millionaires' private hunting clubs and game clubs than this bill provides. I think I have shown very clearly that if the bill shall become a law, the bird sanctuaries will not only provide public shooting grounds for the few who can afford the time and leisure but they will afford a source of replenishing the supply of wild life and game on the private hunting grounds and millionaire gun club preserves. I am not saying this merely upon my own opinion. I think it clearly appears to anyone who has made an effort to understand the tendencies that flow from this kind of legislation, that the very condition I have discussed is precisely the one that is going to prevail. I have in my hand a letter written by Professor Shimek, professor of botany, curator of the herbarium of the State University of Iowa, dated Iowa City, Iowa, March 17, 1928. I am informed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] that Professor Shimek is a man of integrity, one who has thought long and seriously on the question of conservation of wild life, whose opinion is worthy of consideration, and whose word may be regarded as the expression of an honest motive. Let me say that this letter was written to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and with his consent I shall read it, so that it may be made a part of my remarks. Writing to the junior Senator from Utah, Professor Shimek states:

> The so-called game refuge bill (Senate bill 1271 and House bill 5467) is before Congress again, and, if my information is correct, it contains all the old objectionable features which were previously urged under the pretense of "conservation" and "sport."

Under the plan of a dollar "license" the many are expected to furnish shooting grounds for the few. The many surely can not find sufficient game in the "refuges" (?) that could be provided with funds so raised, even if they could afford to travel great distances to visit the grounds.

Any plan which sets up a tract to which game—especially migratory birds—is enticed and then slaughtered by the privileged few is vicious and unsportsmanlike. It will only hasten the total extermination of game, and it is in no sense a conservation measure.

Instead of this, the Government should purchase scattered tracts—not necessarily large—largely in the path of the migrations, which would serve as real refuges, where migrating birds would find feeding and resting places in their journeys, and where local game could breed. Even if the present bill is passed and traps are created in the form of hunting grounds, the Government should secure well-chosen areas which would serve as inviolable game and wild-life refuges. That would be a proper function of the Federal Government. The providing of mere hunting grounds is not.

It is a rather disheartening situation, Mr. President, that we who know that the sanctity of and sanction for law abide in the people must spend hours of time and energy in debating a bill under which it is proposed that the United States shall create hunting grounds. Of course, it is the right of any Member to introduce a bill, and then it becomes the duty of Congress to consider any measure that may be presented; but I am surprised that a measure should find its way into the Congress that proposes, at the expense of the people of America, to establish public hunting grounds—public hunting grounds to serve as adjuncts to the private hunting grounds of millionaires and men of leisure. But there is more than that involved in this bill. If nothing else were involved, I might waive that; but, in addition to establishing public hunting grounds, vicious and unsportsmanlike as that is, as Professor Shimek says, when it goes beyond that and undertakes to destroy the duties and responsibilities and the obligations of local self-government, then, of course, we who believe that the sanction for law and the sanctity of law abide in the people must exert our energies and our time in opposition to that feature of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I trust the Senator, if it will not disturb the continuity of his remarks, will elaborate the suggestion as to the Government taxing the people for the purpose of establishing hunting grounds? It strikes me, if I may say so in the Senator's time, that it is unconstitutional for Congress to levy taxes upon the people to furnish hunting grounds for people who desire to hunt migratory game. It would be as great an abuse of the taxing power as it would be to furnish croquet grounds for those who desire to play croquet or golf grounds for those who desire to play golf or fishing grounds for those who wish to fish.

If there is any obligation arising under the treaty which the United States has with the Canadian Government, it is merely to protect the migratory birds named in the treaty. It may be—and yet it is stretching the power of the Federal Government—that the Federal Government may constitutionally acquire ground for game-refuge purposes and impose taxes upon the people for that purpose. I have conceded heretofore in the debate and I will concede now for the purposes of the debate that the Federal Government may acquire sanctuaries for the birds that come within the Canadian treaty; but I have never been able to see where the authority existed for the Federal Government to buy shooting grounds or to furnish shooting grounds for hunters or anybody else. It seems to me to be an abuse of the taxing power and a usurpation upon the part of the Federal Government to tax the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Wisconsin, or any other State in order to furnish shooting grounds for the happy hunters or those who would like to be hunters, in such States or in other parts of the United States. I shall be glad if the Senator would give his views as to the constitutionality of measures to tax the people to obtain moneys to purchase "shooting" grounds.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, under the Constitution, of course, Congress can not appropriate money except for a public purpose; there can not be a single dollar taken out of the Treasury of the United States except for a public purpose. The expression "public purpose" embraces rather a broad field; and it was only a few moments ago that I was challenging the Senator from South Dakota to present here a bill that would enact into a law a provision whereby public money was to be taken from the Public Treasury to buy hunting grounds.

Those who are back of this bill do not propose to come to Congress with a proposition of that kind and face it squarely; so they provide "that the primary purpose of this act is to provide necessary areas for feeding and breeding places for migratory game birds in order that an adequate supply of said birds may be maintained"; so they come in through the back door in order to get this money and in order to give this legislation some stamp of character as a valid enactment. They do not proceed directly and through the front door to take this money out of the Public Treasury and buy public shooting grounds. They propose it by these indirect methods, and camouflage it with the suggestion that it is in the interest of conservation; and, as Professor Shimek has said, speaking of this bill:

It will only hasten the total extermination of game, and it is in no sense a conservation measure.

Continuing reading from his letter, he says:

If this bill passes, there will be an inevitable increase of cost of maintenance and supervision which will not be fully covered by the license fund. That means that the Government is to help in providing sport for a favored few at the expense of the many, and by doing so will materially hasten the destruction of our wild life.

Under this law, if enacted, another tremendous increase in power will be given to a Government bureau. The police and even law-making powers for which the bill provides would mean a long stride toward complete bureaucratic control of our Government—a danger even now all too evident.

And he, too, sees the danger lurking in this kind of legislation.

The plan contained in the bill has always had the backing of the large arms and ammunition corporations.

That is a matter to which my attention had not been directed. He is, no doubt, correct in his statement. This idea of encouraging the feeding and breeding of more game birds, of course, means the selling of more arms and more ammunition with which to kill living things for sport.

Continuing:

and of that class of "sportsmen"—

He has quoted the word "sportsmen"— who have the means and the leisure to travel to the shooting grounds, and who are urging that some one else provide cheap sport for them. In both cases the motive is purely selfish, and the effort to represent this as a "conservation" measure is a mere pretense.

I can read nothing else in this bill than a thing that mocks at conservation, clothed in hypocrisy, and if enacted into law is to be carried out in providing cheap sport at the expense of the American people.

He further says:

The inevitable conflict between the Federal and State authorities in the efforts to enforce the game laws, and the power which would thus be given to a Government bureau to determine State policies in this field, should also be considered. The difficulties which arose between State and Federal authorities in connection with the Upper Mississippi Wild Life Preserve—

If the Senator from South Dakota will now give me his attention, I shall not have to repeat what I am going to say about the Upper Mississippi Wild Life Preserve.

Mr. NORBECK. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me to answer his questions when he asks them, he shall certainly have my attention.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator will be given an opportunity to answer them.

Mr. NORBECK. I hope the Senator will not address questions to me unless he wants them answered.

Mr. BLAINE. I have not addressed any questions to the Senator except in a general way. I can not ask a question of these chairs, benches, desks. I have to ask a question which may be answered by the Senator from South Dakota or some other Senator.

Mr. NORBECK. Without joking at all, I shall be delighted to answer the Senator's questions. I want to be helpful in clearing up any matter that may be ambiguous. If the Senator asks questions for the purpose of having them answered, I shall be delighted to try to answer them.

Mr. BLAINE. I have not asked a question that I do not want answered.

Professor Shimek refers to the difficulties which arose between the State and Federal authorities in connection with the Upper Mississippi Wild Life Preserve. He says they "are sufficient to show that these fears are not unfounded"—that is, the conflict between State and Federal authority.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President——

Mr. BLAINE. Wait a moment, until I get through with this—

In the present case the dangers of conflict, moreover, would undoubtedly be greater because of the wider exercise of police powers which would be necessary on "public" (for those who pay) shooting grounds.

Now, I am going to conclude reading this letter, so that it may be in the RECORD in a consecutive way, and then I will discuss the Upper Mississippi Wild Life Preserve.

In conclusion I wish to warn you against the recommendations of certain organizations which, while making a pretense of conservation, are in reality helping the special interests to which I have referred by supporting this bill. The bill is not a conservation measure, and it should not be called a "game refuge bill," but rather a "game trap bill" or "game slaughterhouse bill."

I request and urge that you oppose this bill, and particularly those features herein discussed.

There have been some difficulties, and mighty serious ones, with respect to the Upper Mississippi River Wild Life Refuge. There is bound to be conflict between the Federal Government and its citizens, especially when there are certain rights and duties and obligations upon which the Federal Government has been trespassing with respect to our States and our localities. There was created by Congress what was called the Upper Mississippi River Wild Life and Fish Refuge. When the matter was called to the attention of the Wisconsin Legislature it was my privilege and honor to be the governor of our State. The Federal Government wanted blanket power in that valley. I conceived it to be the duty of the chosen representatives of our State to preserve whatever rights the State and her people had on the western boundary of our State. It was my privilege to write the law that gave the Federal Government consent to acquire the land in that valley, and I thought that I had preserved the rights and duties as well of the people of my State; but I have found since that I was mistaken. I had assumed that every conceivable situation that might arise was taken care of, and that there could be no trespassing either upon the laws of Wisconsin or the rights of her citizens; but I have found in the last year that I was mistaken.

I could not at that time have conceived that a Federal department in the city of Washington would create a situation which in effect is a conspiracy to defeat conservation of wild life in Wisconsin. I have found to my disappointment that the Department of Agriculture has defeated and is defeating Wisconsin's efforts in the conservation of wild life in that valley.

There are those who have bought privileges from the Government of the United States through the Department of Agriculture; and I want to say now, in passing, that whenever a government becomes autocratic and bureaucratic you may expect that it will sell privileges, and you may expect that those who can afford to do so will buy privileges from that kind of a government. Bureaucracy and autocracy invite special privileges.

Whenever a department once gets power, it desires to grab more power. Once there is placed in the hands of a department of the Government just a semblance of power, its appetite for more power and more power increases with the meat upon which that appetite is fed. That meat is to constantly grant more and more power.

It has been the history of autocracy and bureaucracy to extend their hands wider and further into the realm of administration, until the departments have embraced all the power that may reside in a centralized government, with the result that that kind of bureaucracy and autocracy is responsible to no one. It certainly is not responsible to public opinion. It is not even responsible to the consciousness of good morals. In order to reach it the process is a long one. There is no single individual who can make the fight; life is too short. So the people become apathetic and indifferent, and then there are privileges purchased by those who have the money and whose interest it is to purchase those privileges.

Section 1035 of the statutes of Wisconsin of 1927 provides, in giving consent to the purchase of the area in the Mississippi Valley acquired for a wild-life refuge, as follows:

(2) The consent hereby given is upon the condition that the United States shall not by an act of Congress or by regulation of any department prevent the State and its agents from going upon the navigable waters within or adjoining any area of land, or land and water, so acquired by the United States, for the purpose of rescuing or obtaining fish therefrom; and the State shall have the right to construct and operate fish hatcheries and fish rescue stations adjacent to the areas so acquired by the United States; and the navigable waters leading into the Mississippi and the carrying places between the same, and the navigable lakes, sloughs, and ponds within or adjoining such areas, shall remain common highways for navigation and portaging, and the use thereof, as well to the inhabitants of this State as to the citizens of the United States, shall not be denied.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is that the amendment which the Senator proposes to offer to the pending bill?

Mr. BLAINE. No; this is what was written into the enabling act by the Wisconsin Legislature with reference to the upper Mississippi Valley wild-life refuge. I am quoting this so that I may show what results from administration by and through a bureaucracy.

Mr. KING. I regret to learn that the Interior Department is now supporting a doctrine which is hostile to the rights and prerogatives of the States and opposed to principles accepted by the American people from the foundation of the Republic. It is claimed by this department that the Federal Government owns, or at least controls, all navigable streams and the beds and banks thereof. Indeed, as I understand its position, it goes further, and with respect to nonnavigable streams it claims that the Federal Government controls them and their waters, particularly in the public-land States. The famous case of Pollard against Lessee, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States more than a hundred years ago, announced the doctrine that the States held in trust for the people the streams and waters within their borders, and that the authority of the Federal Government extended only to navigable streams, and then only so far as was necessary to prevent interference with navigation. This position of one of the departments of the Government illustrates the movement for Federal control over the domestic and internal affairs of the States. The States are the owners of the beds and banks of navigable streams, holding them in trust for the people, and the States have the right to establish the riparian doctrines with respect to water and water rights or the doctrine of appropriation such as prevails in most of the Western States. The adoption of the views of the Interior Department would be an assault upon the integrity and the autonomous sovereignty of the States.

Mr. BLAINE. I want to suggest, so that this matter will appear clear, that in writing these provisions in our laws it was my purpose to conserve the rights of the people of Wisconsin and of the citizens of the United States under the ordinance of the Northwest Territory. It was further provided:

(3) The legal title to and the custody and protection of the fish in the navigable waters leading into the Mississippi River and in the navigable lakes, sloughs, and ponds within or adjoining such areas in this State, is vested in the State, for the purpose of regulating the enjoyment, use, disposition, and conservation thereof.

It would appear that in drafting that legislation the question of the protection of fur-bearing animals was overlooked. It was not overlooked. It was assumed that the laws of the State of Wisconsin would protect them. Let us see what has happened under this bureaucracy.

The Secretary of Agriculture was authorized to purchase these lands in the Mississippi Valley, beginning at some point below the southern boundary of Wisconsin and extending north about 300 miles, at an average rate per acre.

Mr. KING. Not to exceed $5.

Mr. BLAINE. I think it was $5.

Mr. KING. Not to exceed $5.

Mr. BLAINE. Not to exceed $5. The Secretary was unable to purchase some of the land at $5 an acre. In the purchasing of other acreage he purchased it at less than $5. But there was a very large tract of land, and a very desirable tract, I might say, which he desired to purchase, but which he could not purchase within the $5 limitation.

I do not charge the department with corruption, nor do I charge the man who sold the land with any improper motives. I am simply charging that that which the Secretary did in this instance could never be done under State legislation under the influence of public opinion locally. But this situation that is created presents a condition whereby those who are interested are helpless.

The Secretary of Agriculture can not be removed. I am not speaking of the present Secretary; I am speaking of the department. I am not accusing any man or any individual. I am speaking of the bureau which has the power. What power did the Secretary exercise? He purchased that land and gave an exclusive privilege to one individual for the taking of two of the most valuable fur-bearing animals in the United States, the exclusive right to take muskrat and mink upon thousands of acres of land.

Mr. KING. For how long?

Mr. BLAINE. A 10-year period.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator say that is one of the conditions annexed to the deed by which the Government secured the land?

Mr. BLAINE. I said that it appeared that we had overlooked, in the drafting of the enabling act, the protection of fur-bearing animals. It had not been overlooked, because we had assumed that the laws of the State of Wisconsin were sufficient without any reservation, and therefore there was no reservation made, with the result that one individual has the exclusive right for a 10-year period to take the muskrats and the mink from something over 5,000 acres of land, the richest mink and muskrat breeding and producing area in the United States.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. Let me add right here that the land was sold for less than the value of it. The individual who received this exclusive right had made the proposition to accept a certain amount per acre with this exclusive right. But there is the objection: If the Government is going to maintain these sanctuaries, special rights should not be granted to any individual.

Under this bill the Secretary of Agriculture can do the very same thing. He can purchase a large tract of land, we will say, at a very small figure and give the hunting privilege to the person from whom he purchases the land, the exclusive hunting privilege for as many years as he sees fit, just the same as was done in this case. Here is a 10-year privilege, which excludes all other citizens from enjoying the trapping of those two very valuable fur-bearing animals. A tremendous profit is to be made out of those furs.

Here is a privilege purchased by an individual, purchased from the Government, on a public preserve, a sanctuary, denied to all other citizens for a period of 10 years. There is no relief from this situation. I do not believe the department had the power, but there is no way by which that question can be tested unless citizens will take a chance of being arrested and dragged into a Federal court to defend themselves in a criminal action—a thing which honorable citizens will not do. They will even sacrifice the rights to which they are entitled, rather than jeopardize their liberty or run the risk of loss of their reputations in a criminal action. Under this bill as proposed, privileges can be granted. The Senator from South Dakota can not say that they have not been granted with respect to other sanctuaries, for they have been. I have the admission of the United States Department of Agriculture. In a letter dated March 6, 1928, the department says:

In the agreement entered into with—

I will omit the man's name because there is no reason why he should be dragged into this debate. There is nothing dishonorable about his case.

dated November 26, 1926, covering 4,936.64 acres, he or his heirs or assigns were granted the right to take certain muskrats and minks—

This is to be in accordance with the State law for a 10-year period beginning November 1, 1926. The agreement of March 17, 1927, for 209.13 acres, contained a similar provision, making over 5,000 acres. These lands are all situated in Crawford County, Wis., and by arrangement were payable at $7 per acre, the two agreements covering a total acreage of 5,145.77 acres.

For the reduction of $2 per acre the privilege was granted by the bureau for a 10 years' exclusive right to trap the two precious and valuable fur-bearing animals. More than that, this exclusive privilege, as anyone who understands the nature of these fur-bearing animals will appreciate, extends far beyond the 5,000 acres. One man planted himself almost in the very center of this splendid sanctuary for wild life with the exclusive privilege to take that wild life. How must he take it? He has no right to come into the State of Wisconsin as a nonresident, but the understanding is with the Secretary of Agriculture that he may hire Wisconsin citizens to do the trapping. I think the situation demonstrates that when a bureau of the Government, possessing the broad and unlimited powers granted to them under the terms of this bill, has functioned in this way with respect to the only sanctuary specifically set aside by Congress, granting such a privilege to a single individual, we may expect that the same situation will result and the same acts will flow from the bill under consideration.

The Secretary of Agriculture is given absolute power and authority under the bill to make rules and regulations, the fines for the violation of which may be collected as a forfeiture. Under the terms of the bill those who are accused of violating the law or the regulations made by a single individual may be dragged hundreds of miles from their homes and taken before a Federal court and subjected to trial before a Federal court.

Not being satisfied with imposing a penalty by act of Congress, it is proposed by the bill to give the Secretary of Agriculture the right to inflict a penalty by and through a regulation or rule. Here we have the very apex of the doctrine of autocracy and centralized government, a doctrine sacred under the autocracy of Italy and Russia and proposed to be sanctified here in America—the right of an individual to make a rule or regulation which imposes a penalty.

When the game wardens believe that a rule has been violated, the innocent boy, never having known of the regulation, never having read it or heard of it, may be hauled three or four hundred miles from his home before a Federal judge or before a Federal grand jury, indicted, and thrown into jail.

Mr. President, we had the Boston Tea Party and Lexington because citizens of the colonies were taken to distant places, far beyond the confines of their home colony, to be tried. Yes; a game warden may seize any citizen who has not his hunting license with him, even for refusing to show a hunting license; and, of course, he could not show it if he did not have it. He could be dragged three or four hundred miles before a Federal judge or a Federal grand jury, indicted and cast into prison because he did not take out a hunting license and pay his dollar to make up a fund with which to buy public shooting grounds in the interest of millionaire huntsmen and clubmen.

The offense is a minor one. The penalty imposed under the terms of the bill is not a large one. The offense and the penalty is characteristic of a violation of a village ordinance and a trial before a village justice. And yet here it is proposed in the name of conservation to dignify such a thing by a congressional act, the enforcement of which will require a game warden to seize the man or boy and haul him three or four hundred miles to be indicted by a Federal jury, tried by a Federal judge, and punished because he did not have his hunting license with him. When we place this power in the hands of these petty officials we may make up our minds that they are going to exercise, as arbitrarily as their narrow-mindedness will permit, all the power that is given them.

They are not few in number either. I understood the Senator from South Dakota was going to limit the number of game wardens. He is beginning to appreciate the danger, but he is not going to limit them in number. He may limit the number at this session of Congress, but he will find that the law will be violated and the demand will be made that there shall be more game wardens. Congress will say, "We have entered upon this project and we must furnish more game wardens. There is more money coming in and, anyway, it does not come out of the public Treasury. It comes out of the pocketbooks of these boys and men. What is the difference? We will give them more game wardens, so that they will uphold the dignity of the United States." Even in the United States perhaps some one would suggest calling out the Army in order to maintain this kind of a law, as I understand they have suggested for the enforcement of some other police regulations.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I may observe that there is no limitation in the bill with respect to the utilization of the 40 per cent; that is to say, the 40 per cent is not the entire sum which may be obtained and made available for game wardens and the administration of the act. Such further portion of the 60 per cent derived from licenses as may "be deemed necessary" for the administration of the refuges which may be secured may be used. So it may be that only 30 or 40 per cent of the 100 per cent will be spent for refuges and the residue of 60 per cent spent in administration of the law, together with the 40 per cent which it proposes shall be used for game wardens and for administration purposes. Then, in addition, the appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture carries tens of millions of dollars annually. I think it will carry something over $140,000,000 for the next fiscal year.

Importunities will be made to Congress to increase the appropriations directly from the Treasury of the United States as they are made now for the Department of Agriculture and the Biological Survey, so that there will be not only the amount received from the sale of licenses as a fund upon which to draw, but Congress will probably add to the fund large sums which will go to the Biological Survey to be used for so-called administrative purposes. So the Senator can not, in my opinion, with any assurance, assume that the amount derived from the sale of licenses will be the only amount which will be used by the Biological Survey for the acquisition of refuges, the administration of refuges, and the payment of wardens.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, of course, the suggestion to limit the number of game wardens is a mere bait. I am going to discuss the question of the available number of game wardens under this bill. The bill proposes that every person who desires to hunt migratory game birds shall take out a Federal license. The cost of that license is to be $1. The bill also provides that the Department of Agriculture may make regulations respecting the administration of the entire law. What would be the effect? We who have had any experience whatever with law enforcement, and those of us who have observed it without experience, quite clearly understand that there are certain measures taken in the enforcement of law that have no relationship whatever to the violation of some particular statute.

For instance, the Secretary of Agriculture may make a rule or a regulation and enforce it, providing that no one during the open season for migratory game birds shall carry a gun without a license at any place in any State, or at any place in the United States. What will be the result? Every citizen will find himself in a position where he can not hunt wild game birds and game animals within his State during the closed season for migratory game birds unless he shall have a Federal license. Such a rule, I think, will be essential for the enforcement of this proposed law; and the Secretary of Agriculture, no doubt conscientiously believing that he should go the full length in bringing about observance of the law, will make such regulations as that no one shall carry a gun during the closed season or that no one shall hunt any kind of game during the closed season unless he shall have a Federal license.

That is not drawing upon the imagination; that is what these departments do. They make rules which they claim are essential to the enforcement of a particular law under their jurisdiction though those rules may have nothing to do with an offense against the law itself. They are initiated for the purpose of making enforcement complete, effective, and efficient. Therefore, instead of 800,000 licenses being issued, as the Senator from South Dakota has suggested, there will be issued just as many Federal hunting licenses as there are citizens who desire to go hunting for any purpose at any time. There can be no other result. This proposed law can not be enforced effectively unless there shall be rules and regulations relating to hunting in the open season and in the closed season. Moreover, there are few citizens going to take the chance of hunting even for rabbits for fear a migratory game bird may come across their path, when the temptation would be to shoot the game bird, and such a person would need a Federal license.

Ah, the first year there would not be so many. A bureaucratic system of government proceeds step by step. It is not extremely exacting during the first year or so; it feels its way; its exactions are evolutionary; they grow as the years go on. So a slight step is taken the first year or so, and a further step and a further step as the years go by, until the department has succeeded in obtaining exclusive administration within the field it has entered over the subject embraced within the legislation. So the Department of Agriculture, when it once has this power, step by step will feel its way carefully, cautiously, exacting neither too much nor too little, but just enough so that there will not be a public reaction, until it shall have taken the final step and occupied the entire field to the exclusion of all other jurisdictions. I predict that if this bill shall become a law five years will not have expired until there will not be a single citizen in America permitted to hunt at any time without a Federal license.

What will that mean? For the fiscal year closing July 1, 1926, there were issued by the States of this Union hunting licenses to the number of 5,150,000. That was two years ago. On the basis of the average increase the number that will have been issued by July 1, 1928, by the time this bill will go into operation, if it shall become a law, will be 5,600,000 licenses. At a dollar apiece that will mean a revenue of $5,600,000, of which 40 per cent is dedicated by the bill to the employment of game wardens and their expenses. The average cost of a game warden—and I am giving this figure not by guess, I desire to inform the Senator from South Dakota, but from experience over a long period of time with this very subject—a game warden will cost about $4,000 a year.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, is that what a game warden costs in the State of Wisconsin?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BLAINE. I will not yield now, because I do not want that statement to stand disconnected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin declines to yield.

Mr. BLAINE. Just as soon as I finish the statement I will yield to the Senator. The average cost for the administration of game laws is on the basis of about $4,000 a year per game warden. That includes the game warden's salary, his expenses, and the expenses of administration of the central or administrative office. Therefore, when the time comes that every citizen in America must take out a Federal hunting license before he may hunt at any time there will be $2,260,000 available for game wardens, which will finance a force of 565 game wardens, which is a fair-sized army for political purposes. Now I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I wish to call the Senator's attention to what I think is a misapprehension of the bill on his part. He is in error in speaking of 40 per cent of the revenue being used for game wardens. The bill provides that not over 40 per cent shall be so used. I suggest to the Senator that a game warden or two in each State will be very helpful in promoting the enforcement of the law.

I notice that Wisconsin is very liberal in regard to game wardens. No one can hunt in that State without paying for a license. I find that in Wisconsin there are 56 field wardens; and then they have something that I have never heard of in any other State, namely, six district wardens, and then they have a chief warden. The employment of such wardens of the different classes may be based on wisdom, but the expense comes out of the pocket of the taxpayer. I find no fault with the Wisconsin system, but if sixty-odd game wardens are all right for the one State of Wisconsin how would it do to provide for 60 Federal game wardens for the entire United States? If the Senator will agree to that we can amend the bill accordingly.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator says there would be only 60 Federal game wardens?

Mr. NORBECK. I say I am willing to amend the bill so as to provide for 60 Federal game wardens.

Mr. BLAINE. But the Senator from South Dakota is not going to administer this proposed law. The Secretary of Agriculture is to do that.

Mr. NORBECK. But if we place such a limit in the bill, then it will be beyond the power of the Secretary to change it.

Mr. BLAINE. What is proposed to do with the remainder of the money which will be collected?

Mr. NORBECK. That can be used for bird refuges.

Mr. BLAINE. Sixty game wardens for the entire United States would have about as much effect in enforcing this proposed law as the proverbial snowball would have in quenching the fires of hades.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator has complained that the employment of Federal game wardens would have too much effect and now he complains that the employment of 60 would have too little effect. It can not work both ways.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not want to see enacted a law that will not be enforced. That is the trouble to-day. The trouble in America to-day is that we have by law created sins and crimes and there is no enforcement of the laws which create those sins and crimes. I do not want to be a party to the enactment of a piece of legislation designed purposely and deliberately on the floor of this body so that it will not be enforced effectively. We have too much of that already.

Every single dollar of the 40 per cent will be used for game wardens and administration.

But no part of such 60 per cent shall be used for payment of the salary, compensation, or expenses of any United States game warden, and not more than 40 per cent thereof for enforcing this act, the migratory bird act—

And so forth; and you can make up your minds that when a department has a certain amount of money to spend, it will spend it. I do not see very much money being returned to the Treasury from any unexpended balances around Washington. They do not have unexpended balances. They spend every dollar.

Mr. NORBECK. They do not have much unexpended balances in Wisconsin, either.

Mr. BLAINE. Of course not—not recently.

Mr. NORBECK. Three hundred and fifty-six thousand dollars in their game department for one year—a third of a million dollars in one year!

Mr. BLAINE. Unexpended?

Mr. NORBECK. No; that is spent, I guess.

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, no.

Mr. NORBECK. All right. The Senator will correct me if I am wrong. The expenditures of the Wisconsin game department are about a third of a million dollars annually.

Mr. BLAINE. Permit me to suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that I ought to know more about Wisconsin than he does. Let me read the Senator the facts.

Mr. NORBECK. All right.

Mr. BLAINE. The total number of hunting licenses in 1926 was 179,504, in 1907 it was 161,774, and these were dollar licenses largely. That is my understanding.

Mr. NORBECK. Yes.

Mr. BLAINE. What is the Senator talking about, then, when he says "a third of a million dollars"?

Mr. NORBECK. All right. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the collections from nonresident fishing licenses were $161,873.76 in Wisconsin last year.

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, yes; probably.

Mr. NORBECK. They have another tax which they call the trap-tag tax under which $17,000 was collected.

They have another one called the deer-tag tax under which some $900 is collected.

They have a traveling license of $18,000.

They have a nonresident hunting license of $9,900.

If you add up those figures, you have your $356,000 in Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE. We do not spend all of that on game wardens. We spend a large portion of that on constructive work, fish hatcheries, maintaining our State parks, and so forth.

Mr. NORBECK. That is the plan of this bill, too—exactly the same.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not know what you are going to do with fish hatcheries in propagating migratory birds, unless you hatch the fish to feed the birds. I think we are much safer when we keep within our own bailiwicks on what the facts are.

Here is a splendid political organization to be created. I repeat that within five years every single individual in America who desires to hunt will find himself paying a dollar a year to the Federal Government. Everybody knows that. That is the tendency. It always has been the case, and always will be. It is a beautiful system that will furnish 550 game wardens. Well, suppose it furnishes only 500. Suppose it is only 400. Suppose we get it away down where only half of the people will take out hunting licenses from the Federal Government. You have 275 Federal game wardens.

We have a primary election on in Wisconsin the first Tuesday in April. There is another one on in Nebraska a week afterwards. There is another one on in New York, another one in Indiana, another one in Ohio. Migratory birds, of course, are migratory, and so are Federal game wardens; and they become very efficient in campaigns, I have understood. Even the one in Wisconsin to whom the Senator refers has not failed to do his duty as the Department of Agriculture assumed his duty to be; and your Federal prohibition enforcement officers are always on hand when there is a primary or an election.

Add to the present perambulating Federal officers this army of perambulators looking after migratory birds, and there would be no difficulty in throwing an army of two or three hundred game wardens into Wisconsin—if we had this legislation—this week, right up to the time the polls are closed a week from to-morrow. There would be no trouble whatever in marching those game wardens over into Nebraska the next week and back into Ohio and Indiana. They would be the most effective and efficient political machine that could be created. Why, the excuse for sending them would be splendid. There are times, as seasons shift around, when birds are migrating, and so you will have the Federal game wardens following them up so that they will not be killed.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a minute?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. Do I understand that this bill provides for a flying squadron that can be sent anywhere, in time of political distress, to rally the faithful?

Mr. BLAINE. Why, of course. They do not exactly write that language into the bill.

Mr. SWANSON. I mean, it is possible? Of course, they would not write it in the bill. Nobody would swallow it if that were done; but can it be done?

Mr. BLAINE. That is exactly what will flow from this bill.

Mr. SWANSON. A flying squadron for political purposes?

Mr. BLAINE. A flying squadron after the flying birds. The excuse will be, "Why, March and April and May are just the months when the migratory birds must be protected," and the game wardens will be hot afoot for the protection of the migratory game birds. So, if the President wants a Mr. Hoover nominated there would be no trouble in throwing this army into the State of Ohio to defeat the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], or in throwing them into the State of Indiana to defeat the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. There would be no trouble at all in throwing them into Wisconsin in an attempt to get a delegation that could support the distinguished British statesman who spent the major portion of his adult life under the British flag and British influence. There would be no difficulty at all in taking this army of Federal game wardens and nominating a President of the United States.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BLAINE. I do.

Mr. HEFLIN. We can not hear on this side the whispered conversation between the two Senators. I was wondering if the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] was making inquiry about Mr. Hoover.

Mr. BLAINE. The whispering between the two Senators was with reference to an agreement to go into executive session. I did not get the comment of the Senator.

Mr. HEFLIN. I was wondering if the Senator from Ohio got it in his mind well that the Senator from Wisconsin was speaking of his friend Hoover.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BLAINE. An election comes on, and the preelection campaign is on, and you have this army of game wardens. That is in the fall, when migratory birds take their flight southward—a most suitable time for the flight of the game wardens. This same perambulating, migrating army of Federal employees can march down into Missouri, if it is a doubtful State, and use their influence there. They ought to be down there, because it is the time when migratory birds are passing southward. Of course, there would be justification for them to go to Missouri, a doubtful State. Kentucky and Tennessee are fruitful fields for these perambulating, migrating game wardens to be thrust into those two States at the very time that an election is in the balance between the two major parties.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a minute?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. I have not read the provisions of this bill; but do I understand that the committee has reported a bill here that allows these game wardens to go from one State to another?

Mr. BLAINE. Why, what good is a game warden unless he follows the migratory game birds?

Mr. SWANSON. Does the Senator mean to tell me that the bill permits game wardens anywhere to come into a State and enforce this law?

Mr. BLAINE. Why, certainly. The game warden must protect the migratory game birds, must he not? That is the purpose.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from Virginia that under a law passed when Woodrow Wilson was President that is what they may do.

Mr. SWANSON. You continue that?

Mr. NORBECK. We do not repeal it.

Mr. SWANSON. You do not repeal it?

Mr. NORBECK. No.

Mr. SWANSON. Where Wilson was right you do not follow him, but where he made a mistake you follow him. I do not think that is right. I do not know whether I voted for the other bill or not.

Mr. NORBECK. I want to say to the Senator in all seriousness that I have an amendment pending that will prohibit the very thing the Senator from Wisconsin is complaining about, and I so stated in this Chamber about an hour ago.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the matter to which the Senator from South Dakota refers is the civil service law. Does he think for one moment that the civil service law, under which most of the postmasters are appointed, prevents them from engaging in political activity? If he does, then he is not of the caliber that I have assumed him to be. Does he think that the prohibition-enforcement officers of this Nation are not engaged in political activities during primaries and election campaigns? They may not in South Dakota, but they have been so engaged in Wisconsin. I have seen them in veritable hordes, and they are under civil service; and, of course, they are directed in such special cases to protect those who vote right and to punish those who vote wrong.

Mr. NORBECK. I thought I had had some political experience, but I have never known the value of a game warden in politics. The Senator from Wisconsin is quite enlightening to me. He has been governor of his State for six years, and I presume he understands what he is talking about—this army of sixty-odd game wardens traveling over Wisconsin in a political campaign. It had never occurred to me that they were a political asset. Maybe they were.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the Senator from South Dakota charge the Senator from Wisconsin with using a single game warden or State official in a political campaign in his behalf?

Mr. NORBECK. I charge the Senator——

Mr. BLAINE. Now, wait: Does the Senator charge that?

Mr. NORBECK. Will the Senator wait while I answer?

Mr. BLAINE. I want to know whether the Senator charges it?

Mr. NORBECK. I will answer the question if the Senator will give me a chance to answer it.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator can answer "yes" or "no."

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator can not come any lawyer tricks on me. I am not on the witness stand. I will answer the Senator, however.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator has made a personal insinuation and I challenge him now to answer.

Mr. NORBECK. Yes; if the Senator will let me answer, I shall be glad to answer. I charge the Senator with having more knowledge of game wardens in politics than any other man I ever met. That is what I charge him with; and I ask him whether that is the way they did in Wisconsin. They do not in South Dakota.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the Senator from South Dakota charge that the Senator from Wisconsin has used game wardens for political purposes?

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator from Wisconsin charges himself, if anybody charges him. Nobody else has charged him with it.

Mr. BLAINE. Then what is the purpose of the Senator's remarks?

Mr. NORBECK. He is always talking about game wardens in politics, and that is something I have never heard about from any other State.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BLEASE. Just a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BLEASE. I want to say to the Senator from South Dakota that in the State of South Carolina, where we have only one party, the game wardens are not only very active but they are very influential in factional politics.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from South Dakota that there is not a single Federal employee under civil service in the State of Wisconsin who does not engage in political campaigns—not a single Federal employee.

Mr. NORBECK. I do not know anything about that; but I know that in South Dakota they observe the law.

Mr. BLAINE. But, Mr. President, I repeat and say to the Senator from South Dakota that when he interjected his insinuating remarks concerning my experience with game wardens I was talking about Federal employees; and I challenge him to deny the truth of my statements.

Not only do they engage in political campaigns, but they are used to browbeat and beat down citizens because they choose to vote differently from the power which directs those public and Federal officials. Do we want an army of cheap game wardens migrating to any State in the Union during primaries and election campaigns, which they will have the privilege of doing?

I know that sometimes these Federal employees are not effective. I have seen in their trail a good many "lame ducks." They are not successful in my State but they may be. I want to take no chance that this army of game wardens which is proposed to be created by this bill may control our primaries and our elections.

The Senator may limit the number to 20 or 40 or 60, but he will find that at the succeeding sessions of Congress there will be demand for more game wardens on the claim that the law is not being effectively and efficiently enforced. Therefore, demand will come for more and more game wardens until we will reach the time when this army of Federal employees will be migrating from State to State and from section to section of our country in the interest of certain candidates for office or to defeat certain candidates for office, depending entirely upon the administration and control of the Government at at Washington.

PRESIDENT WILSON AND THE VOLSTEAD ACT

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the action of President Woodrow Wilson in vetoing a measure which contained both the war-time prohibition act and the Volstead Act is being cited by the opponents of prohibition.

The unqualified statement that Woodrow Wilson vetoed the Volstead Act is misleading. The act which he vetoed contained not only the Volstead Act but the war-time prohibition act. Practically all of his brief veto message was devoted to the war-time prohibition act and not the Volstead Act. He could not under the Federal Constitution separate the two in order to veto one and consequently was compelled to veto both in order to reach one. A perusal of the veto message will show that the veto was directed toward the war-time prohibition part of the act and not toward the Volstead Act; that he objected to the former because he believed at time of his veto, October 27, 1919, the war emergency had passed. It is interesting to observe that in the concluding sentence he referred to prohibition as a great reform. The veto message is as follows:

> I am returning without my signature H. R. 6810, "An act to prohibit intoxicating beverages, and to regulate the manufacture, production, use, and sale of high-proof spirits for other than beverage purposes, and to insure an ample supply of alcohol and promote its use in scientific research and in the development of fuel, dye, and other lawful industries."
> The subject matter treated in this measure deals with two distinct phases of the prohibition legislation. One part of the act under consideration seeks to enforce war-time prohibition. The other provides for the enforcement which was made necessary by the adoption of the constitutional amendment. I object to and can not approve that part of this legislation with reference to war-time prohibition. It has to do with the enforcement of an act which was passed by reason of the emergencies of the war and whose objects have been satisfied in the demobilization of the Army and Navy and whose repeal I have already sought at the hands of Congress. Where the purpose of particular legislation arising out of war emergency have been satisfied, sound public policy makes clear the reason and necessity for repeal.
> It would not be difficult for Congress in considering this important matter to separate these two questions and effectively to legislate regarding them, making the proper distinction between temporary causes which arose out of war-time emergencies and those like the constitutional amendment of prohibition which is now part of the fundamental law of the country. In all matters having to do with the personal habits and customs of large numbers of our people we must be certain that the established processes of legal change are followed. In no other way can the salutary object sought be accomplished or great reforms of this character be made satisfactory and permanent.

I ask that there be printed at this point in the RECORD a clipping from the Chicago Herald and Examiner of March 12, 1928.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GERMAN "WET" SEES UNITED STATES AND BECOMES DRY—DOCTOR BERG, TOURING WORLD, TURNS AGAINST RUM; SAYS AMERICA WILL PRODUCE SUPERIOR RACE

A short stay in the United States converted Dr. Walter Berg, of Stuttgart, German scholar and financier, from a wet into a dry. He is traveling around the world and came to Chicago.

Doctor Berg is a student of political science and an associate of Count Hermann Keyserling in the School of Wisdom at Darmstadt. He controls large banking interests in Germany.

"I was opposed to prohibition before I came to the United States," Doctor Berg said at the Bismarck Hotel, "but after two months of observation I completely changed my views.

"Prohibition will enable America to produce a superior race. In the nonprohibition countries alcohol is taking more and more victims. Drunken men are seen everywhere. Here it is comparatively rare.

"Upon returning to Germany I shall advocate laws similar to the Volstead Act."

PUBLIC UTILITIES OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I present a petition from the governing body of the city of New York petitioning Congress to amend the income tax law so far as it relates to their public utilities. I ask unanimous consent that the petition be referred to the Committee on Finance and printed in the RECORD, including a letter to me transmitting the petition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter and the petition were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOARD OF TRANSPORTATION OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK,
New York, March 20, 1928.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The board of estimate and apportionment of the city voted yesterday in committee of the whole to petition Congress to amend the Federal income tax law, and I am writing you in advance of the secretary of the board of estimate so that the subject will come to your attention immediately. I understand that the Senate Finance Committee will report this bill very soon.

The Finance Committee of the Senate has under consideration certain amendments to the Federal income tax law in the form of a bill passed by the House of Representatives, H. R. 1, entitled "An act to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes." The attention of this board has been directed to certain decisions of the Treasury Department interpreting and construing the meaning of section 116 of the existing revenue law in a manner which imposes a tax upon the revenues of the city-owned railroads, which interpretation appears to be contrary to the intent of section 116 but which may be upheld by the courts on account of the phrasing of the act as it now stands. It appears to the board of transportation that section 116 should be amended to make it clear that the revenues derived from the city-owned railroad should be exempt from income tax.

The Federal income tax law, in section 116 thereof, provides that whenever a State, Territory, or any political subdivision of a State or Territory, prior to September 8, 1916, entered into a contract for acquisition, construction, operation, or maintenance of a public utility and by the terms of such contract the Federal tax on income is to be paid out of the proceeds from the operation of such public utility prior to any division of the proceeds between the person and the State, Territory, or political subdivision, that there shall be refunded to the State, Territory, or political subdivision a proportional part of any income tax collected from such public utility contractor to the extent that "if, but for the imposition of the tax imposed by this title, a part of such proceeds for the taxable year would accrue directly to or for the use of the political subdivision."

There is clearly a limitation in this act as to contracts entered into prior to September 8, 1916, which would preclude any contract or other arrangement which may be made by the city for the operation of the new subways. It is also a matter of doubt and dispute whether the city is now entitled to a rebate of income tax levied upon earnings of the existing subways, because these earnings have not yet been sufficient to permit of any division of profits between the operator and the city, although the imposition of these taxes increases the expenses of the operating company, which are chargeable against the revenues before the city is entitled to share in them and acts to increase the deficits which become accumulative under the existing contracts. All taxes are included in the deductions allowed to the companies as expenses of operation. The elimination of such taxes would, therefore, reduce the deficits from operation and to that extent would be distinctly in the interests of the city.

This board is informed that Boston, Philadelphia, Detroit, Cleveland, and perhaps other cities have an interest similar to that of New York in the amendment of section 116 of the Federal tax law and will cooperate in endeavoring to secure an amendment.

Therefore the board of estimate and apportionment has adopted resolutions petitioning Congress to amend the act so that there may be no doubt that the revenues from railroad operation in which the city is officially interested shall be made exempt from income tax.

Yours very truly,

JOHN H. DELANEY.

Whereas the city of New York, as the owner of an extensive system of rapid transit railroads and subways, entered into contracts dated March 19, 1913, with operating companies for the maintenance and operation of those railroads on behalf of the city, by the terms of which contracts there inures to the benefit of the city certain rights, profits, and interests under the conditions set out in those contracts wherein, among other things, it is provided that the net profits resulting from operation shall be equally divided between the city and the lessee corporations, previous to which, however, there shall be deducted from revenues derived from such operation "all taxes or other governmental charges of every description * * * assessed or which may hereafter be assessed against the lessee in connection with or incident to the operation of the railroad" before the city shall receive any rental or compensation for the rights leased or granted, or receive any payment or amortization on the public debt which represents the cost of constructing said railroads, or any division of net profits from operation of said railroads as aforesaid, and that these prior deductions are cumulative in their priority to the city's participation in profits or its realization of other rights, benefits, or interests under the contracts aforesaid; and

Whereas the realization by the city of such rights, profits, and interests are minimized, decreased, and postponed and a loss or burden thereby imposed upon the city to the extent that deductions are made by the operating companies, on account of increased operating costs due to the imposition of Federal income taxes, before the profits, rights, benefits, or interests of the city can be realized on the property owned by it, and that to such extent the taxes so imposed and paid by the operating companies are in last analysis paid by the city out of the taxes levied by it upon its citizens; and

Whereas the city of New York is now engaged in the construction of additional rapid transit railroads at an estimated cost of $700,000,000, and contemplates the acquisition of other lines or connecting railroads as necessary to the efficient operation of its transit system, the cost of all of which is to be paid out of public funds; and

Whereas upon the acquisition or construction of such railroads as a necessary part of the city's transit system it will become necessary or advisable for the city to enter into contracts for the maintenance and operation of them, and that the methods of operation of such new railroads must be decided upon in the near future before such contracts are executed; and

Whereas the proposed revenue bill now pending before the Congress, H. R. 1, and entitled "An act to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes," provides, in subdivision (d) of section 116 thereof, that whenever a State, Territory, or any political subdivision of a State or Territory, prior to September 8, 1916, entered into a contract for the acquisition, construction, operation, or maintenance of a public utility, and by the terms of such contract the Federal tax on income is to be paid out of the proceeds from the operation of such public utility prior to any division of the proceeds between the person and the State, Territory, or political subdivision, that there shall be refunded to the State, Territory, or political subdivision, a proportional part of any income tax collected from such public utility contractor to the extent that "if, but for the imposition of the tax imposed by this title, a part of such proceeds for the taxable year would accrue directly to or for the use of" the city; and

Whereas by and under the construction and interpretation placed upon the corresponding similar subdivisions of the revenue acts of prior years by the governmental agencies, the city of New York is deprived and will be deprived of the benefits of a rebate of income taxes charged against the revenues derived from the operation of the railroads which are owned by the city contrary to the true intent and spirit of the revenue laws; and

Whereas the city of New York will be deprived of any and all benefit which, under any construction of the proposed revenue law it would be entitled to, arising under any contract entered into by it subsequent to September 8, 1916, the object of which contract is the acquisition, construction, operation, or maintenance of a public utility; and

Whereas it has been proposed that subdivision (d) of section 116 of the proposed revenue bill now pending before the Congress, H. R. 1, and entitled "An act to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes," be amended so as to make more specific and certain that under such contractual relation having for its purpose the acquisition, construction, operation, or maintenance of a public utility, the amount of any Federal income tax paid by the lessee, grantee, or person operating a public utility under such contract or contracts, or certificates similar to the contracts of March 19, 1913, aforesaid, shall, to the same extent as the amount, but for the imposition of such taxes, would have accrued directly to or for the use of or inure to the benefit of or increase the right, title, interest, or equity in such public utility of such municipality, be refunded to the city or shall not be levied, all of which is more particularly set forth in said proposed amendment as follows:

"Whenever any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of a State or Territory, enters in good faith into a contract with any person, the object and purpose of which is to acquire, construct, operate, or maintain a public utility—

"(1) If by the terms of such contract the tax imposed by this title is to be paid out of the proceeds from the operation of such public utility, prior to any division of such proceeds between the person and the State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia; and if, but for the imposition of the tax imposed by this title, a part of such proceeds for the taxable year would accrue directly to or for the use of, or inure to the benefit of, or increase the right, title, interest, or equity in such public utility of, such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, then a tax upon the net income from the operation of such public utility shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in the manner and at the rates prescribed in this title, but there shall be refunded to such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia (under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary), an amount which bears the same relation to the amount of the tax as the amount which (but for the imposition of the tax imposed by this title) would have accrued directly to or for the use of, or inure to the benefit of, or increase the right, title, interest, or equity in such public utility of such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, bears to the amount of the net income from the operation of such public utility for such taxable year;

tive of the tax imposed by this title, accrue directly to or for the use of, or inure to the benefit of, or increase the right, title, interest, or equity in such public utility of such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, then the tax upon the net income of such person from the operation of such public utility shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in the manner and at the rates prescribed in this title;

"(3) If by the terms of such contract the acquisition, construction, operation, or maintenance of such public utility is for or on behalf of a State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, or the effect of such contract is to enable the State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, to acquire a right, title, interest, or equity in such public utility, no tax shall be levied under the provisions of this title upon the income derived from the acquisition, construction, operation, or maintenance of such public utility, so far as the payment thereof will impose a loss or burden upon, or decrease or postpone such right, title, interest, or equity of such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia"; and

Whereas this board is advised and is of the opinion that the foregoing proposed amendment will be beneficial to the interests of the city of New York under the said contracts of March 19, 1913, and under contracts which may be entered into by it subsequent thereto for the acquisition, construction, operation, or maintenance of such public utilities, and under any plan of consolidation or unification as is now being considered by the transit commission, pursuant to the provisions of the public service commission law:

Resolved, That the board of estimate and apportionment does hereby approve of the proposed amendment aforesaid, and that it does hereby urge upon the Congress the passage of such amendment; further

Resolved, That the secretary of this board be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to transmit to each of the United States Senators for the State of New York and to each Member of the House of Representatives from the State of New York a certified copy of this resolution.

BOULDER DAM

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter I have written to the chairman of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, March 23, 1928.

BOULDER DAM

Hon. ADDISON T. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SMITH: I have just been informed that your committee, or a subcommittee of your committee, are considering amendments to be proposed by your committee on the floor of the House to H. R. 5773, commonly known as the Boulder Dam bill.

I am also informed that you have adopted the Senate committee amendment found on page 6, between lines 4 and 13, to S. 728, being the Boulder Dam bill in the Senate, providing for State revenues, with certain suggested modifications. This is one of the amendments proposed by me in the Senate committee. If I understand the addition that you made to the amendment, it meets with my approval.

I am also informed that on Monday you will take up for consideration the Senate committee amendments found on page 9, lines 12 to 19, inclusive, offered to S. 728, giving preference to States to contract for electrical energy for use in the State. This amendment was also offered by me in the Senate committee on behalf of Nevada and Arizona particularly, although it equally applies to the State of California. It met with no particular opposition in the Senate committee.

Permit me to briefly state the reasons that urged the Senate committee to adopt this amendment. Senator JOHNSON in his bill (S. 728) provided that in the event of conflicting applications for electrical energy the preferences should be decided in accordance with the preferences set forth in the Federal power act. In that act "States and municipalities" shall have a preference over other applicants for contracts or licenses. It was undoubtedly the intention of Congress in making such provision in the Federal power act to place the State prior to the municipality. The reason Congress granted the preference to States and municipalities in such act was because States and municipalities represent a greater number of citizens and have a greater responsibility than a private corporation. It follows from such reasoning that a State, representing a greater number of citizens than a municipality or other subdivision of a State, has a greater responsibility and therefore should have preference in the matter of a conflict in applications between a State and a municipality or subdivision of a State. In the bill under consideration it is a matter of great importance that the preference of the State over a subdivision of a State or a municipality within a State be definitely declared.

The whole theory of the seven-State compact, upon which the bill under consideration is based, was an equitable division of the benefits of the waters of the Colorado River between the seven States. The benefits of water are derived from its use for potable purposes, irrigation, and generation of power.

Nevada is so unfortunately situated that it is impossible for it to get equal benefit of the use of water for any purpose other than power. Nevada, of course, is entitled to equal development with Arizona and California through the use of power. California has a large municipality—Los Angeles—which is capable of contracting for all of the power generated at Boulder Dam. Nevada has no such municipality.

Nevada is the only agency in Nevada that has the credit to contract for power for the use of its citizens within the State. If it is discretionary with the Secretary of the Interior to treat States and municipalities or subdivisions of States as having equal preferences, then he could give preference for all of the power to the city of Los Angeles to the exclusion of the applications by the States of Arizona, California, and Nevada, or either of them. As I say, the amendment under consideration is only a declaration of policy evidently intended by Congress to be established in the Federal power act, but it is indefinite.

If the State of Nevada is assured by the terms of the act upon its approval that it has a preference to contract for electrical energy for use in the State, then it can stimulate its citizens or those engaged in industry in the State to make investigations, even at very large expense, between the date of the approval of the act and the time when contracts will be called for, so that the State may determine the amount of power that can be used in the State when the power is ready for delivery upon completion of the dam.

Under the terms of the act it is evident that there will be a period of 12 to 18 months between the approval of the act and the time when contracts will be called for. It is during this period that such investigations must be made. Unless the act contains the assurance that the State will have such preference, then it will be difficult to induce industries to make the necessary extensive and expensive investigations necessary to determine the amount of hydroelectric energy that may be used in the State and that must be contracted for by the State at the time the contracts are called for.

For instance, there are large deposits of low-grade zinc ores in southern Nevada. If these deposits are sufficiently large and if the values are sufficiently great, and cheap hydroelectric power is assured, then the power will be contracted for. It will probably require an expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars to determine these facts before a contract is entered into for power. Of course, these expenditures will not be made unless there is an assurance in the act that there is a preference to the State to contract for power that is required for use in the State. Mind you, we limit the preference of a State over a municipality to contract for use of power in the State exclusively.

I have only cited you one instance. There are many other conditions that must be investigated at great expense to determine the amount of power that Nevada will contract for, and the same certainty must exist before this large expense can be undertaken.

Nevada is anxious for the development of the lower Colorado River and favors the purpose of the act, but the State of Nevada believes that, in so far as is possible, Congress should equitably divide the benefits of the water allocated to the lower basin between the States of Arizona, California, and Nevada. If this spirit of fairness is manifested, then those who favor the legislation should be enabled to obtain consideration for it at this session of Congress and pass it.

Permit me to congratulate you and your committee upon what I deem to be the wise course of eliminating from conference on the House and Senate bills as many questions as possible.

Nevada is entirely neutral as between Arizona and California and is still working to bring about a compromise on the division of water. I believe I am at liberty to state that such compromise is very nearly effected.

I trust that the deep interest that Nevada has in this matter will excuse me for taking the liberty of writing this letter to you as chairman of your committee.

Sincerely,

KEY PITTMAN.

CONDITIONS IN NICARAGUA

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that as soon as I can get the floor to-morrow I shall make a few remarks on the subject of Nicaragua.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, March 26, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed, blessed Lord—the Father of us all—in Thee we have a refuge in every time of need. When temptation is nigh and human courage is at the test, Thou art near; when problems perplex and the way is uncertain, Thou dost help us to understand; when the clouds are lowering and earth's pathway is hard and forbidding, Thou art at our side to revive the fainting heart; even when the sky is radiant and there is no cloud to cast a shadow, Thou dost counsel wisdom. O we praise Thee that Thou dost come into the hearts of men, like a happy sunlight, and bid them rejoice and be glad. Whisper words to us to-day that shall teach us lessons of priceless worth. Give us the understanding heart that shall rebuke all wrong and that shall exalt the right. Bless our country, all the States and all our firesides from border to border. May peace, happiness, and prosperity bless every room in our national mansion. As sons of God may we arise in gratitude for all the blessings of life and may we know that there is nothing so royal as truth and there is nothing so kingly as love. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, March 24, 1928, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3173. An act authorizing the St. Johns River Development Co., a corporation of the State of Florida, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Suwannee River at a point where State Road No. 15 crosses the Suwannee River, State of Florida;

S. 3174. An act authorizing the St. Johns River Development Co., a corporation of the State of Florida, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Choctawhatchee River at or near a point where State Road No. 10 crosses Choctawhatchee River, State of Florida;

S. 3387. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to lend War Department equipment for use at the Tenth National Convention of the American Legion;

S. 3558. An act authorizing Point Pleasant & Henderson Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Kanawha River at or near Point Pleasant, W. Va.; and

S. 3611. An act to authorize the Board of County Commissioners of Itasca County, Minn., to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the north line of section 35, township 144 north, range 25 west.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2317) entitled "An act continuing for one year the powers and authority of the Federal Radio Commission under the radio act of 1927, and for other purposes."

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred to the appropriate committee, as follows:

S. 3173. An act authorizing the St. Johns River Development Co., a corporation of the State of Florida, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Suwannee River at a point where State Road No. 15 crosses the Suwannee River, State of Florida; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 3174. An act authorizing the St. Johns River Development Co., a corporation of the State of Florida, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Choctawhatchee River at or near a point where State Road No. 10 crosses Choctawhatchee River, State of Florida; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 3611. An act authorizing the Board of County Commissioners of Itasca County, Minn., to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the north line of section 35, township 144 north, range 25 west; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

COMPULSORY UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a bill for compulsory unemployment insurance. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on that subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the discussion which is taking place concerning the problem of unemployment, I desire to call the attention of the House to my bill (H. R. 12205), which provides for the establishment of a Federal compulsory unemployment insurance system similar to the one now in vogue in other modern industrial nations.

It is a sad commentary on the state of our social reform legislation that the only time unemployment receives any consideration at all—and then mighty little—is when it reaches such proportions that it becomes impossible for those in power to pretend not to see it, or on the eve of a presidential election, when political capital can be made of the situation by one of the contenders for the nomination raising the issue so that it can no longer be dodged.

As a matter of fact—and any student of industrial and economic conditions will verify this—unemployment is not an accidental condition, nor caused by the laziness of individuals.

Every civilized country where the present capitalist system prevails has recognized that unemployment is an inevitable and inescapable condition of our industrial system, which always requires an army of unemployed, as a sort of reserve.

The size of that "reserve army" will vary, but in the United States it is never less than 1,000,000, and in times of business depression it reaches the staggering proportions of 3,000,000, 4,000,000, or 5,000,000.

The distress in which these millions of people and their dependents find themselves could be relieved if they had saved enough during the periods in which they were employed to keep them in times of unemployment.

But an examination of what it costs for the average-sized family to live, and what the average worker earns while employed, discloses that the large majority of our people—76,000,000 of them, according to official Government figures—do not earn enough to lay anything by for such emergencies as sickness, unemployment, or old age.

And fully between 10,000,000 and 12,000,000 of our people do not get enough to live on while they do work, as I had occasion to show during the discussion on the income tax bill.

If these people and their dependents are not to be permitted to starve, in the face of an abundance which their labors helped create, relief must come either from private charitable institutions, bread lines, and soup kitchens, or it must come as a result of an organized and scientific system of unemployment insurance.

Charity, whether public or private, is degrading to people who are ready and willing to work. There are many who prefer to die of starvation or commit suicide rather than resort to it.

Moreover, public charity is a costly method, as a large part of what charity collects for its activities goes to pay for salaries, drives, and incidentals. And it is inefficient when the demands made upon it become general. At such times it is also impossible for private relief agencies to take care of the situation.

The other method, a system of compulsory unemployment insurance, enables the worker to obtain a claim to come forward as a creditor and no longer to be regarded as an object of charity, since he paid for his share of the insurance. This unemployment insurance is not a dole.

This is the method used to meet the problem by other industrial nations. They know that it must be faced, and that it can only be faced satisfactorily and efficiently by compulsory unemployment insurance. England, Germany, Italy, the Scandinavian countries, Belgium—in fact, every industrial country of Europe—has adopted this method.

My bill establishes a system whereby the obligation of each group in society towards meeting what is a social problem can be discharged on a fair and equitable basis.

The wage earner, while he is employed, contributes one-third of what it will be necessary to raise any one year, to take care of the unemployment relief. The employer of labor, for whose profit the wage earner works and who discharges the worker after he has created a surplus which the employer finds it difficult to dispose of, contributes another third. And the Government, which has a primary interest in preventing widespread distress because of the effect such distress has upon the social fabric, pays the balance.

To avoid the possibility of some depending upon this kind of relief even when work is available, I have provided that the unemployment benefits shall not be paid where suitable employment can be furnished to an applicant by any of the branch offices of the United States Employment Service, which will aid in administering the provisions of the law.

There is also this: The benefits under the act are limited to six months in any one year, and the payments are never to exceed more than 50 per cent of the average earnings of the applicant. There is no inducement in this for men to stay out of work when there is work, no inducement to become lazy, but there is at least sufficient relief provided to keep workmen and their families from starvation when there is no work to be found.

I have been asked by Members of Congress what it would cost the Government to provide the one-third that it will have to pay into the fund. In ordinary times, when the number of unemployed does not exceed more than 1,000,000, I have estimated that the Government's contribution to the fund for six months of the year would have to be between $90,000,000 and $100,000,000 annually. It would temporarily increase in times of depression according to number of unemployed, but it ought never to reach a larger sum than $350,000,000 even in a great and continuing industrial crisis—what is called a "panic" in common parlance.

That ought not be considered a formidable sum by those of this House who have been clamoring for and voting tax relief for the superwealthy every time Congress met. The present House has voted a reduction of about $225,000,000 in taxes of the rich. That money—the loss of which would hardly be felt by the superwealthy—would take care of America's participation in this fund for several years.

And if we take into consideration the fact that the aggregate amount saved to our plutocracy during the Harding-Coolidge administration is more than $3,000,000,000—three thousand million dollars—we can not claim to be too poor to discharge our obligation to those who through no fault of their own are thrown out of employment.

In any event, my proposal has been tried in other countries, where similar conditions prevail, and found workable. These countries, not nearly as rich as ours, can afford to give this relief. It is undoubtedly needed.

I am confident that sooner or later my plan will be adopted, and the sooner it is adopted the less suffering and misery will our people have to undergo in the intervening years.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twenty-five Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

FRANK O. LOWDEN

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY] for 15 minutes.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen. Illinois has contributed her fair share of the men and of the ideals that have entered into, been a part of, and made possible the growth and development of our country. Permit me to mention only a few of her sons whose work is ended.

From the soil of Illinois Lincoln and Grant reached the White House; Stevenson became Vice President; Douglas, Trumbull, Logan, Yates, and Oglesby served with distinction in the Senate; Cannon and Mann have been powers in this House; and Davis was chosen to sit on the Supreme Bench.

As contributors to the economic progress of the country Armour and Swift, founders of the meat-packing industry, McCormick, as inventor of the first practical reaper, Pullman and his perfection of the sleeping car, and Funk, advocating improved methods of agriculture, take their places among the outstanding contributors to the progress of the Nation.

Really great men have much in common, and these men, classed among the greatest benefactors the Nation has produced, are not exceptions. They were all farm boys, imbued with the determination to achieve high places in their respective lines of endeavor, and the measure of success each attained is evidence of his worth.

When the name of a man is submitted, either by himself or by his friends, for consideration as a candidate for the Presidency of the United States, it is the privilege of the people of this country to survey thoroughly that man's background, to inquire into every phase of his past connections, and to scrutinize carefully the principles he advocates as binding, if elected.

In every State of the Union people are discussing Frank O. Lowden as the Republican candidate for President. Because of my somewhat close association with Mr. Lowden as Governor of the State of Illinois, I believe it entirely proper for me, of my own motion and on my sole responsibility, to speak about Mr. Lowden at this time. [Applause.]

During the later part of my 14 years as a member of the Illinois State Legislature Mr. Lowden served a four-year term as Governor of the State of Illinois. As I was at this time chairman of the committee which framed the Illinois Administrative Code and other outstanding measures of his administration, I came into close personal contact with the governor. About the only way to size up a man for the future is to weigh relatively his accomplishments in the past, and Governor Lowden's record speaks for itself.

Mr. Lowden was born in Minnesota and was reared on a farm in Iowa; taught school, studied law, and was admitted to the bar in Chicago. He built up and enjoyed for many years a large and profitable law practice. However, the love of farm life and an interest in the farmer's problems seem to have remained ever with him, and some 30 years ago he moved to his farm in Ogle County, Ill., where he has since devoted a large part of his time to practical agriculture and the problems of the farmer.

He has not only been interested in livestock breeding and grain growing in the Corn Belt of Illinois. but has been an extensive cotton grower in Arkansas. Still later he acquired farm property in Michigan, Texas, and Arizona. To-day he is one of the most extensive landowners in the United States and is at once one of the largest cotton planters of the South and a prominent dairyman in the North. I dare say he understands the problems of the cotton planter as well as my friends Representatives RANKIN and WHITTINGTON, of Mississippi. [Applause.] The stabilization of the cotton industry has claimed much of his time and efforts.

From 1905 to 1911 he was a Member of Congress, but declined renomination.

From 1917 to 1921 Mr. Lowden was Governor of Illinois. His record as chief executive of the State of Illinois was one of efficient administration during which business prospered and social conditions improved. Governor Lowden initiated the budget system in Illinois and was largely instrumental in the adoption of the same system by the National Government. The Illinois Administrative Code, perhaps the principal achievement of the Lowden administration, has been copied in a large part by a number of other States. It provided for the abolishment of some 125 separate boards and commissions and substituted in their places 9 executive departments.

Frank O. Lowden has never been a candidate for public office except to carry out a definite constructive program of advancement. [Applause.] He declined high office under McKinley. He has been offered Cabinet positions twice since. His State wanted him for a second term as governor, but his program had been carried out. He refused the most exalted diplomatic post in the world—the ambassadorship to the Court of St. James. He was nominated for Vice President over his own protest, and declined because he felt his field for service to the Nation lay elsewhere.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLADAY. I prefer not to yield at present.

Mr. Lowden's position on the major political issues of the day has been fearlessly stated and is well known. From his past record and his public announcements allow me to briefly summarize his position.

CONSERVATION OF NATURAL RESOURCES

He has long been interested in the conservation of forests and minerals and believes that conservation of our natural resources is one of our major problems.

In order to call attention to his long-standing interest in the conservation of our natural resources, allow me to quote from his message to the Illinois General Assembly under date of January 8, 1919:

> There are many thousand acres of land in Illinois which at the present time produce nothing, but which are suited to tree culture. Without encouragement, however, from the State, the owners of these lands are not likely to devote them to a crop which can not be harvested for possibly 50 years. The taxes upon these lands produce but little revenue to the State. If the State would exempt these lands from taxation upon the condition that they were planted to trees, with the provision that when the trees were harvested a proper tax would be collected upon the product, I believe that much of such land would become permanent forests, a source of revenue to their owners and to the State.

WELFARE OF INDUSTRIAL WORKERS

The true test of a country's greatness is the lot in life of the average men and women—the men and women of the shop, of the factory, and of the farm.

These are they who carry on the work of civilization, and a nation is strong in proportion to their well-being.

Whatever permanently improves their lot in life is best for all and best for the Nation.

As Governor of Illinois Mr. Lowden's attitude toward measures proposed for the betterment of wages, hours of labor, and working conditions of the laboring man and laboring woman was such as to merit and to receive the approval of organized labor in Illinois.

TARIFF

As a Member of Congress and as a private citizen, Mr. Lowden has always stood for the principle of a protective tariff. Addressing a gathering of farmers, he said:

> Interest and taxes are a large part of the cash outgo of the farmer. It seems to me clear that it is therefore much better for agriculture and for the country to bring agricultural prices up to a parity with prices of other commodities than to bring the prices of the latter down to the level of agricultural prices. Now, it is conceivable that a Democratic tariff would reduce the general price level, but it would leave the great burden of interest and taxes untouched. The true policy is not to debase industry but to raise agriculture to the level of industry. That policy can not be maintained without a protective tariff.
> For the reasons stated I believe that the farmers of America will work out of their difficulties more surely under a Republican protective tariff than under any tariff law the Democratic Party is likely to write.

[Applause.]

INLAND WATERWAYS

For many years Governor Lowden has been an active advocate of the development of our inland waterways. His work in this direction is a matter of public record in Illinois.

In referring to the development of waterways from the Great Lakes to the Gulf and from the Great Lakes to the sea, he said:

> If we adopt a system of broad and comprehensive development of our waterways throughout all parts of the country, we shall have begun at least to check the rapid trend toward centralization which has been going on ever since the industrial age was inaugurated.
> This is too big a proposition for geographical argument to play any part. Its benefits are too obvious and too great for the sole benefit of any part of the country. It affects the country so greatly as a whole, whether we can see it or not, that in the end it will prove itself to be best for every part of our country.

PROHIBITION

On the prohibition question I quote from a public announcement made by Mr. Lowden. While this quotation is from a statement made recently, it is, nevertheless, a restatement of what has long been his stand on this question:

The eighteenth amendment is in the Constitution and is unlikely to be taken out, and as to proposals to permit the States to decide for themselves what percentage of alcohol to permit in liquor—the Federal Government can not abdicate in favor of the State when a mandate has been laid upon it by the Constitution.

It is as unnecessary to ask Frank O. Lowden if he is in favor of law enforcement as it would be unnecessary to inquire if President Coolidge is in favor of economy. [Applause.]

FLOOD CONTROL

In an address delivered in Memphis, Tenn., on October 20, 1927. Mr. Lowden said:

Out of all the discussion which has followed the recent flood, two facts stand out clear. One is that the problem is a national problem of the first magnitude. The other is that the time has come for the formulation of a great, broad, comprehensive policy—a policy that recognizes that the problem is a complex one, involving not only the protection of the lower lands from overflow, but involving as well transportation, reforestation, water power, and soil erosion.

[Applause.]

My own idea as to how this can best be done is to create a mixed commission. And such commission should not be composed exclusively of the Engineer Corps. Able as that body is, it does not contain all the talent in the land. Nor is engineering ability alone required. Upon that commission should be experts in agriculture, in reforestation, in transportation, and in water-power development. The ablest men in these several fields, with the freshness of this disaster upon us, could be drafted to serve. That commission would be charged with a most impressive responsibility. It would be its duty to tame the waters in the richest portions of the North American continent to the uses of man.

In a more recent statement he said:

Flood control is a national problem, not local, and should be paid for by the Nation. The loss from floods is assessed against the Nation as a whole as well as against the particular districts affected, and the cost of prevention also should be distributed.

[Applause.]

FARM RELIEF

Mr. Lowden has stated his position on farm relief in a clear and decisive manner. Said he:

The great problem before the country is the restoration of a proper balance between industry and agriculture in the interest of the sane, healthy development of the country. That means farm relief through some such plan as that contained in the much discussed McNary-Haugen bill, including the equalization fee, or some acceptable substitute.

Several years ago Mr. Lowden sensed the approaching agricultural difficulty. He traveled in Europe, where he studied the cooperative systems of Denmark and other European countries. While he supported vigorously the cooperative movement, he was one of the first to realize the need for a governmental agency to supplement the "cooperative" in the orderly marketing of agricultural products.

In his message to the Illinois General Assembly while governor, he said:

It is generally recognized that something must be done to stabilize the price of farm commodities and to prevent such price from falling below the cost of production. Agriculture is still our great fundamental industry. Unless it flourishes, nothing prospers. Let the price which the farmer receives for his output continue below the cost of production for any considerable length of time, and the volume of farm produce will fall below the needs of the Nation and prices will become abnormally high. Therefore, the consumer is no less interested than the producer in a profitable agriculture.

Farm relief legislation will not be sectional in effect; it will aid the labor and manufacturing of the East by stabilizing the farming industry in the agricultural States. The question of farm relief is quite as vital to the agricultural States as is the matter of protective tariff to the manufacturing States.

A Republican nominee for President who is opposed to farm relief will incite as much enthusiasm in the agricultural States next fall as would a free-trade nominee in New England. [Applause.]

We speak of the availability of a man as a candidate. By availability is meant his ability to secure votes. This ability depends upon the trust and confidence he can inspire in the hearts and minds of the men and women of America.

Let me suggest to the Republicans: Why not nominate a man who, in addition to carrying the East, the West, and the agricultural States of the Middle West, will also be able to carry the border States?

Frank O. Lowden has been a lifelong Republican, always a resident of the United States, and has never been in favor of the League of Nations. [Laughter and applause.]

The record of Frank O. Lowden is in harmony with the principles of the Republican Party. He has consistently advocated all real constructive legislation.

Within the ranks of the Republican Party are many men who can lead the party to success in 1928. With some men leading, the fight will be hard; with others it will be desperate; but with Frank O. Lowden nominated the campaign will be easy and the victory will be assured. [Applause.]

AUTHORIZING THE SETTLEMENT OF CERTAIN SUITS AT LAW

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 1279) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to compromise and settle certain suits at law resulting from the subsidence of First Street east, in the District of Columbia, occasioned by the construction of a railroad tunnel under said street. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered to discontinue the prosecution of all claims and suits pending in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and entitled suits at law Nos. 63579, 63580, 63581, and 63582, to recover the sum of $58,198.80 expended from public funds in resurfacing, repairing, and restoring to grade First Street east, between B Street south and B Street north, which work was rendered necessary by the subsidence of said street occasioned by the construction of a railroad tunnel under the said street incident to the project of elimination of grade crossings and the establishment of a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, authorized by acts of Congress approved February 12, 1901, and February 28, 1903: Provided, That the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co., the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., and the Washington Terminal Co., jointly or severally, pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia a sum not less than $30,000 in compromise and settlement of said claim or claims: Provided further, That said sum shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and the revenues of the District of Columbia in equal parts.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ZIHLMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a part of the report on the bill in explanation of the purpose of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I herewith insert the report of the Committee on the District of Columbia, reporting the bill S. 1279 to the House, which report explains fully the purpose of the bill:

[To accompany S. 1279]

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1279) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to compromise and settle certain suits at law resulting from the subsidence of First Street east, in the District of Columbia, occasioned by the construction of a railroad tunnel under said street, having considered the same, report it back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

This bill is identical with H. R. 5759, which has also been considered by your committee, and in lieu of which it is reported.

The object of the bill is to enable the District Commissioners to compromise, upon receipt of a sum not less than $30,000, claims aggregating $58,198.80, against certain railway and street railway companies, such claims being the subject of suits now pending in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the outcome of which is considered quite doubtful if carried to trial.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia urge favorable action upon this bill.

The facts of the case are fully set forth in previous reports of your committee and in Senate Report No. 24, Seventieth Congress, which is appended to and made a part of this report.

[S. Rept. No. 24, 70th Cong., 1st sess.]

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1279) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to compromise and settle certain suits at law resulting from the subsidence of First Street east, in the District of Columbia, occasioned by the construction of a railroad tunnel under said street, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

This bill is the same as a bill (S. 5552) favorably reported by the committee and passed by the Senate in the Sixty-ninth Congress. It was introduced at the request of the District Commissioners, the purpose being to compromise certain lawsuits the outcome of which is quite doubtful if carried to trial. Full explanation is given in Senate Report No. 1521, Sixty-ninth Congress, second session, appended to and made a part of this report.

There is also appended to and made a part of this report letter from Col. J. F. Bell, former engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia, urging favorable action on the similar bill introduced in the Sixty-ninth Congress.

[S. Rept. No. 1521, 69th Cong., 2d sess.]

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5552) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to compromise and settle certain suits at law resulting from the subsidence of First Street east, in said District, occasioned by the construction of a railroad tunnel under said street, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The object of the bill is to enable the District Commissioners to compromise, upon receipt of a sum not less than $30,000, claims aggregating $58,198.80 against certain railway and street railway companies, such claims being the subject of suits now pending in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The bill provides that the sum received in settlement of the claims shall be credited equally to the United States and the District of Columbia.

The basis of the claims is the agreement made with the District by one of the defendants at the time of the construction of the railroad tunnel south from the Union Station in the period from 1903 to 1905, to assume responsibility to the District for any damage that might result to public or private property.

The first subsidence of the street, and other property damage occasioned by settling of ground over the tunnel, occurred in 1907; and the claims of the District of Columbia arising therefrom were paid by the railroad company. However, in 1914 the street and adjoining property again subsided, and upon the failure of the railway and street railway companies to pay the cost of the necessary replacements and repairs, the suits which the bill authorizes to be compromised were brought.

Due to the fact that a similar case, involving a smaller amount, was tried in court and lost by the District, and for the further reason that two of the most important witnesses for the District of Columbia are dead, and the delay in hearing the cases in question would be a disadvantage to the plaintiff, the commissioners, acting on the recommendation of the corporation counsel, have advised the acceptance of the compromise offer of $30,000, as proposed in the bill hereby reported. The defense of the railroad company to the District's claim is that it is not responsible for maintenance and that a lowered ground-water level, for which it could not be held responsible, was a contributing cause of damage.

In view of the apparently doubtful outcome of further prosecution of the suits, it would appear desirable to authorize compromise of the claims by enactment of the bill.

The commissioners' report, setting out in detail the origin, nature, and status of the claims, is appended to and made a part of this report.

There is also appended report of the Citizens' Advisory Council of the District of Columbia recommending enactment of the bill.

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, January 31, 1927.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: When the railroad tunnel south from the Union Station was constructed from 1903 to 1905 the work was done under permit issued by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co., by the New York Continental Jewel Filtration Co., contractor. The permit was worded with a view to making the railroad company responsible for any damage that might result to any public or private property. The plans for the work were approved by the commissioners. The railroad company wished to do part of the work by the "cut and fill" method, which would have been more economical, but in order to preserve the street surface and public facilities and improvements undisturbed and prevent interruption of traffic the work was required to be done by the "tunnel" method. Engineer inspection service was maintained at all times by the District government.

The danger of settlement over the tunnel was appreciated, because it is difficult to secure compact filling back of a tunnel lining when heavy timbering must be maintained to keep the earth overhead from caging; and then a tunnel is likely to change the ground-water level and loss of water from the soil may cause trouble later by water percolating through the soil from the surface. When the tunnel is far below the surface or is in rock these dangers are small. Orders were issued to use concrete in part of the back filling to reduce this danger of settlement.

In spite of the precautions taken, settlement has occurred and expenditures have been made as shown by the appendixes attached.

Appendix A is a statement of expenditures incurred by the District of Columbia.

Appendix B is a statement presented by McKenney & Flannery, attorneys, of the expenditures made by the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co.

Appendix C is a statement by the corporation counsel of the status of the cases at law which have grown out of this settlement.

The Pennsylvania Railroad has offered to pay $30,000 as a compromise settlement of all pending cases, and the commissioners have been unable to secure any better compromise offer. If the matter be pressed in court the result would be somewhat doubtful. The wording of the permit for the construction and the fact that the railroad company recognized its obligations and paid for a considerable portion of the damage would indicate a favorable outcome, but the claim of the company that it is not responsible for maintenance, that a lowered ground-water level for which the railroad company could not be held responsible is a contributing cause of damage, together with the fact that a similar case was lost, would indicate an unfavorable outcome. In addition, two of the most important witnesses for the District of Columbia are dead, and the delay in hearing these cases would be a disadvantage to the prosecution.

On the recommendation of the corporation counsel, and after considerable investigation, the commissioners are of the opinion that the compromise offer of $30,000 should be accepted.

Inclosed is a draft of a proposed bill authorizing the settlement at not less than $30,000.

Very respectfully yours,

PROCTOR L. DOUGHERTY,
President Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia.

APPENDIX A

STATEMENT OF EXPENDITURES BY THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA IN RESTORING SURFACE CONDITIONS OVER RAILROAD TUNNEL IN FIRST STREET EAST, BETWEEN B STREET SOUTH AND B STREET NORTH

Settlements appeared in the street about the year 1907. The railroad companies were notified to make repairs. The companies asked that the District of Columbia perform the work and the railroad companies would pay the cost.

Thirty-seven thousand five hundred dollars was deposited by the railroads and the work was done by the District, using all but a small portion of the deposit.

The street again subsided about the year 1914. The steam and street railway companies were notified, but all refused to assume responsibility. The commissioners then ordered the tracks of the street railway companies adjusted, and the street resurfaced. This was done at the following costs:

(a) Raising to grade the tracks of railways		[1] $34,548.32
(b) Resurfacing, including track space		22,535.40
(c) Adjusting and repairing water mains		1,115.08
Total		58,198.80

On the theory that the railway companies were responsible for the upkeep of their tracks and track space, all of item (a), and the part of item (b) falling within the track spaces were billed to the street railway companies as follows:

Adjusting tracks (item (a))—
Capital Traction Co	$842.63
Washington Railway & Electric Co	19,730.69
Both companies (joint tracks)	13,975.33
		[1] 34,548.32
Paving track space (of item (b))—
Capital Traction Co	245.88
Washington Railway & Electric Co	2,394.36
Both companies (joint space)	1,511.58
		4,151.82
Total		38,700.14
That part of item (b) outside of the limits of the track space, and the cost of repairing water mains, item (c), were billed to the steam railroads—
Resurfacing (of item (b))	$18,383.58
Repairing water mains (item (c))	1,115.08
		19,498.66
Total		58,198.80

[1] Actual cost of work, $34,548.65; error of 33 cents made in report to corporation counsel.

This total of $58,198.80 comprises all of the expenditures made by the District of Columbia, except some smaller items of work performed subsequent to the filing of suits, and which brings the total to be recovered to approximately $60,000.

APPENDIX B

STATEMENT SUBMITTED BY M'KENNEY & FLANNERY, ATTORNEYS FOR THE PHILADELPHIA, BALTIMORE & WASHINGTON RAILROAD CO.

Statement of expenditures which the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co. was required to make in consequence of settlement of First Street over tunnel:

Restoring tracks and structures of the street railway companies

January, 1908. E. Saxon, contractor, restoring tracks between East Capitol and B Streets north		$9,800.00
January, February, March, April, and May, 1908:
Washington Railway & Electric Co., restoring tracks between East Capitol and B Streets north	$457.01
Refunded by Washington Railway & Electric Co., on account of error in bill	6.89
		450.12
January, 1908. 5.32 tons "fit" rail		89.80
February, 1908. Hauling cinders (Drake & Stratton)	28.60
June, 1908. Digging test holes (Drake & Stratton)	15.00
July, 1908. Digging test holes (Drake & Stratton)	32.55
		76.15
May, 1909. Repairing crossings, First and B Streets, and First and C Streets NE		124.81
May, 1909. Restoring tracks between B and C Streets north, Capital Traction Co		2,270.12
June, 1908:
Judgment of Washington Railway & Electric Co. against Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co., in action at law No. 50213 in the Supreme Court, District of Columbia, for work done and materials furnished in and about restoring and sustaining the plaintiff's street railway tracks on First Street, between B and East Capitol Streets	$2,019.23
Amount paid railroad company on account of said judgment by contractor on notice by former to latter that it will look to it to save it harmless	1,855.75
	163.48
Interest and costs paid by railroad company in said suit	29.39
		192.87
Judgment in the suit of Capital Traction Co. and other street railway companies against the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co. in Supreme Court, District of Columbia, at law No. 50389, to recover for work done and materials furnished in restoring and sustaining plaintiff's railway tracks and structures at the intersection of First and C Streets NE	4,823.67
With interest and cost which the railroad company was compelled to pay to avoid execution	323.99
		5,147.66
February and April, 1908, and February, 1909:
Deposits made with District of Columbia to defray costs of restoring street surfaces (work done by District of Columbia under current contracts)	37,500.00
Unexpended balance of deposits	2,008.98
		35,491.02
Restoring electric light and telephone conduits and cables, which the contractor failed and refused to support, sustain, and restore:
March, 1908. Potomac Electric Power Co., restoring electric light cables		829.97
July, 1908. Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., rodding ducts at First and B Streets NE		2.68
August, 1908. Potomac Electric Power Co., raising manhole and repairing conduit, First and East Capitol Streets		44.38
Rebuilding wall on east side of United States Capitol Grounds:
November and December, 1909. E. Saxon, contractor, rebuilding wall which sunk and was damaged		1,200.00
Engineers' services and expenses—Expenses incurred from December, 1907, to February, 1910, inclusive, for services of engineers and inspectors and incidental expenses of same, while supervising all of the above work, including telephone calls, office rent, transportation, etc.:
Engineer's services	$1,595.00
Engineer's expenses	107.60
Labor inspecting	170.63
		1,873.23
Judgment recovered against Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co. in the suit of Jacob Karr against it and the contractor in the Supreme Court, District of Columbia, in action at law No. 49845 for damages to property of plaintiff located near the intersection of First and C Streets NE., growing out of the negligence of contractor in construction of tunnel under west side of First Street immediately adjacent to plaintiff's property; the contractor having successfully avoided service of process upon it, and having ignored notices of the railroad company to defend the action, railroad company was compelled, in order to avoid execution, to pay the judgment with interest and costs amounting in all to the sum of		19,085.08
In addition to the judgment, interest, and costs, the railroad company was compelled to pay costs and expenses in defending said suit as follows:
Typewriting copy of opinion	$3.25
Cost of testimony	96.25
Deposit to cover costs	5.00
Cost of record, docket fee, and depost to cover costs in court of appeals	117.25
Premiums on bond	33.00
Cost of printing brief	49.20
Cost of transcript of record and Supreme Court	27.85
Cost of certificate of satisfaction, judgment	.50
		$332.30
Amount paid Washington Railway & Electric Co. in August, 1916, in full settlement of judgment for $4,067.17, with interest and costs, entered Feb. 20, 1915, in action at law No. 55203, Supreme Court, District of Columbia, affirmed by the Court of Appeals, District of Columbia, Mar. 24, 1916 (44 App. D. C. 470), not including legal expenses connected with the litigation, which were considerable		5,325.56
Total		82,335.75

There is also not including in this settlement any of the costs of the railroad company in defending the suit of the District of Columbia v. Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co. et al., at law No. 54839 for damages to water main ($3,936) which resulted in a verdict of the jury and judgment of the court in favor of the defendant April 12–13, 1920.

This statement also does not include payments made by the railroad company for the restoration of street-railway tracks subsequent to the aforesaid decision of the court of appeals.

APPENDIX C

OFFICE OF CORPORATION COUNSEL,
Washington, January 19, 1927.

Memorandum for the commissioners in re cases filed to recover damages arising out of the construction of the First Street tunnel

There were five cases filed by this office involving this matter. The first one, at law No. 54839, was brought against the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railway Co. and the New York Continental Jewel Filtration Co., the contractor which did the work, for the breaking of a 30-inch trunk water main—damages amounting to $3,936. This case was tried before a jury and lost.

The other cases were:

At law No. 63579, D. C. v. Penn. R. R. Co., the P., B. & W. R. R. Co., and the Washington Terminal Co., to recover for restoring the surface of First Street occasioned by the sinking of the tunnel from 100 feet south to B Street south, to a point 100 feet north to B Street north, and the intersecting streets. This suit involved three principal items.

For damages to sidewalk, curb, and roadway, with interest from Sept. 11, 1917	$22,535.40
For restoring the surfaces of the tracks caused by the sinking, with interest from Apr. 15, 1917, and the claims for water mains amounting to $1,115.08	34,548.32

This last claim was made up of three items:

For injury to a 30-inch and 20-inch water main at First Street east, and under East Capitol Street, with interest from June 30, 1917	$733.99
For injury to a 20-inch main on B Street north at East Capitol, with interest from May 11, 1917	358.90
For injury to a 6-inch main on First Street south to C Street north, with interest from June 25, 1917	22.19

At law No. 63580 was brought against the Washington Railway & Electric Co. for the sinking of the street between the tracks and for 2 feet exterior thereto on First Street, between East Capitol and B Street north. This is made up of two items:

For bringing the surface back to grade, with interest from Apr. 5, 1917	$19,730.69
For paving between the tracks and 2 feet exterior thereto, with interest from Sept. 11, 1917	2,394.36

At law No. 63581 was brought against the Capital Traction Co. for the sinking of the streets between the tracks, as in the above suit, on First Street at or near B Street south. This also involved two items:

For raising the surface, with interest from Apr. 15, 1917	$842.63
For paving, with interest from Sept. 11, 1917	245.88

At law No. 63582 (the last suit) was brought against the Capital Traction Co. and the Washington Railway & Electric Co. for raising the street between the tracks, etc., as in the two foregoing suits, on First Street between B Street north and B Street south. This also involved two items:

For raising the surface, with interest from Apr. 15, 1917	$13,975.33
For paving, with interest from Sept. 11, 1917	1,511.58

In the first suit the amount for restoring the street surface and tracks was $34,548.32. In the other three suits these amounts were $19,730.69, $842.63, $13,975.33, making a total of $34,548.65.

The difference between this total and the amount in the first suit was 33 cents, which suggests a duplication of accounts, which is confirmed by the fact that the payments were all made on the same day; that is, the 15th day of April, 1917.

It is impossible to determine with any degree of accuracy from the declarations in these cases what the duplications are or the amounts. The figures submitted by the engineer department are no doubt correct and should be accepted.

F. H. STEPHENS,
Corporation Counsel, District of Columbia.

BONDS FOR COMPENSATION IN CRIMINAL CASES

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 52) to regulate the business of executing bonds for compensation in criminal cases and to improve the administration of justice in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 52) to regulate the business of executing bonds for compensation in criminal cases and to improve the administration of justice in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, on this bill I raise the question of consideration, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that on a regular District day the question of consideration is not in order because the District Committee is permitted by the rules to call up any bill it desires.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration is proper on District day. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York to proceed for five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, the reason I raised the question of consideration on this bill is not in respect to the merits of the bill at all. It is a good bill, and it ought to pass.

Mr. BLANTON. We could have given the gentleman five minutes without his going to all of this trouble.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman wait a moment and give me a chance to say what I want to say? This bill should not have been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. Under the rules, all matters pertaining to the courts and to the local courts of the District of Columbia and the Territories are to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am not mistaken about that.

Mr. BLANTON. All judicial matters pertaining solely to the District of Columbia rightfully go to the District Committee.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have not yielded.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; not now. The gentleman is just as correct in that as he was a moment ago when he raised the point of order. There is a long line of precedents that hold that such a bill, and bills pertaining to the administration of justice, should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Not now. This bill, surely by erroneous reference, found its way to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I can not raise the question of jurisdiction at this time, because the rules and precedents hold that once a bill has been referred to a committee and reported back the question of jurisdiction can not be raised. This matter first came to the attention of the Committee on the Judiciary when the bill appeared on the Consent Calendar. I am acting by the direction of the Committee on the Judiciary in calling the matter to the attention of the House. The only parliamentary step we are able to take at this time under the rule is to raise the question of consideration and get proper reference of the bill. Gentlemen can readily see that unless there is uniformity with reference to bills it is very easy and possible to create a great deal of confusion, especially in matters pertaining to the administration of justice and to the rules of court.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York is heartily in favor of this bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BLANTON. And if it had come before his committee he would have been in favor of reporting it and passing it?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Exactly.

Mr. BLANTON. And now that the bill is before the House for passage, and it being a good bill, and the gentleman being in favor of it, yet he is trying to put some obstacle in the way of its passage.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman himself has raised the question of proper reference many times during our joint services in the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Only when I was against bills.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, no. The gentleman must admit that in a body of 435 men, with 44 committees, we must follow certain rules.

Mr. BLANTON. Whenever I am in favor of a bill that is good legislation and I believe it ought to pass, I am just as anxious to pass it when it comes on the floor of the House from any committee, no matter who sponsors it or from what committee it comes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, the sponsoring of a bill has nothing to do with it. The gentleman follows the rules of the House. I have seen him rise many times and protest against the reference of certain bills, and no one has guarded more jealously than he the jurisdiction of his own committee, the Committee on the District of Columbia. Here is a bill about which there can be no question as to where it belongs, but with very many hundreds of bills dropped in the basket it is, of course, easy for a bill which refers to the District of Columbia to be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. GILBERT. I do not understand why the gentleman says that this bill unquestionably ought to have gone to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The bill provides for improving the administration of justice in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GILBERT. That is really a sort of surplusage in the title. The Judiciary Committee has never even interfered with the courts or the jurisdiction of the courts of the District of Columbia except the higher courts. This bill only incidentally affects one of the higher courts. I hope the gentleman will address his remarks to this proposition.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman will admit that the bill is penal in its character.

Mr. GILBERT. Certainly.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That brings it entirely under the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GILBERT. Lots of penal bills, and most of them affecting the District and the District solely, go to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Would an amendment to the Penal Code go there?

Mr. GILBERT. Not to the District Committee.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Of course not.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to allow the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] as to the jurisdiction of the Committee on the District of Columbia to go unchallenged in the RECORD. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the District Committee has time and again dealt with matters of legislation affecting not only the minor courts of the District of Columbia but the higher courts of the District. The Committee on the District of Columbia has exercised jurisdiction as to bills relating to executors, administrators, wills, and divorce in the District of Columbia. It has reported a bill to allow foreign executors and administrators to sue in the District of Columbia, as shown by the fourth volume of Hinds' Precedents, section 4289.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the gentleman will refer to section 4068 of the fourth volume of Hinds' Precedents, he will find a long list of bills there relating to the local courts in the District of Columbia, which have been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I understand that; and I will say to the gentleman that the jurisdiction of our committee over District matters pertains to both the minor and higher courts, and that has been held for a long time. In many instances jurisdiction over these bills has been exercised by the Judiciary Committee, but in many other instances it has been exercised by the District of Columbia Committee, and that committee has legislated on those matters; also on matters pertaining to the higher courts. As affecting lower courts, all questions relating to jurisdiction in local courts has been handled by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does not the gentleman think that bills of that kind would be part of the Penal Code and under proper parliamentary order would belong to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I do not so construe it. The bill before the District Committee has to do with regulating professional bondsmen, who deal not only with bonds in the higher courts, but also in the lower courts.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Has it not been the case ever since the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] has been here, that there has been a measure pending before the District Committee to do away with the death penalty in the District of Columbia? Is not that true?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And that committee had a bill passed here in the House to change the death penalty from hanging to electrocution, did it not?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And a bill was reported and passed here by the District Committee, providing a complete code on descent and distribution for the people of the District of Columbia?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. That is true.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York, having admitted that this is a good bill and that he is in favor of it, and the rules of the House having provided that when a committee reports a bill it has jurisdiction, what other question is there before the House when we shall have disposed of the question of consideration except that we should pass the bill? It is a good bill.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I wish to make a brief statement.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In order to get the precedents before the House, will not the gentleman cite section 4291 of Hinds' Precedents, following section 4289?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes; I am coming to that. In section 4290 of Hinds' Precedents, fourth volume, I read:

4290. The Committee for the District of Columbia has exercised jurisdiction as to the police and juvenile courts and justices of peace in the District. The Committee for the District of Columbia has exercised jurisdiction of legislation relating to the juvenile court and the police court of the District, and in 1906 reported on the subject of the justices of the peace, although in 1893 and 1895 the Judiciary Committee had exercised jurisdiction over bills relating to those offices.

Now I come to the section referred to by the gentleman from Illinois—section 4291. I read:

4291. The jurisdiction of the Committee for the District of Columbia as to matters affecting the higher courts of the District has been exceptional rather than general. The jurisdiction of the Committee for the District of Columbia over the District courts higher than the juvenile and police court has not been extensive, and such cases as have occurred seem exceptions to the rule that gives the general jurisdictions as to the courts to the Judiciary Committee.

In 1887 and 1891 the Committee for the District of Columbia reported bills relating to the reporter for the Supreme Court of the District, and even a bill for the regulation of the court itself; but in 1880 the Committee on the Judiciary had jurisdiction of the bill (H. R. 1809) to enable the courts to take cognizance of a case in which a citizen of the District of Columbia is a party.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. On what subject?

Mr. BLANTON. On the subject the gentleman is now considering.

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. So that matters of a general nature pertaining to the judiciary of the District of Columbia have time and again been considered by the District of Columbia Committee. The jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary, while it has sometimes obtained in matters affecting the higher courts, has been exceptional. The jurisdiction of the District Committee has existed from time to time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this is a question that has nothing in the world to do with courts. This is a question having to do only with bonds and professional bondsmen.

Mr. GILBERT. Suppose the bill referred to fiduciary bonds in the District of Columbia. Would the simple reason that they were executed generally before some court affect the court?

Mr. BLANTON. No. The gentleman's question answers itself.

If the Members of this House only knew what scandal there is in this District regarding the business of professional bondsmen, who have tips for them in this town, who in many instances are in league with law violators, and are protectors of law violators, knowing that they violate the law and stand behind them; if they knew half of the scandals that exist here, particularly my friend from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], who is one of the best lawyers here in the House, and who I consider to be a good legislator, and who I consider as far removed from bolshevism as our friend from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN], and who I consider a loyal, patriotic, earnest, industrious legislator for the people, he would be the last man to throw a suggestion in the way of the passage of this legislation.

Our District Committee has been working hard on this matter for several years. We have been trying to get a bill out of our committee to cover this situation, and have been trying to do so for a long time. Our friend from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT], who is a splendid lawyer, has been working on it; the gentleman from Vermont, Judge GIBSON, has been working hard on it; the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLEOD] has been working on it; and also the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] has been working hard on it; and this bill has been before the committee for some time. My friend from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] says it is a good bill and that it ought to pass. He says he is in favor of it. Then let us pass it. Let us vote for consideration of it and pass it. If you vote not to consider it now, do you know how many years it will take to get such a bill here and out of the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. About a week.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no. My friend from New York [Mr. STALKER], coming from the gentleman's State, has had a splendid bill pending there that has been sleeping the sleep of death for several sessions.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The Stalker bill has been reported.

Mr. BLANTON. But it has never been brought up here on the floor of the House for passage, and it took several sessions, when it ought to have taken five minutes to have reported it out of the gentleman's Judiciary Committee. What is the use of voting against the consideration of this bill, which the sole objector to it says is a good bill and ought to be passed? He says it is fine legislation and ought to be enacted. What is the use of wasting further time on the question? In my judgment we ought to pass this bill in order to stop this scandalous professional bondsman practice that has been going on in this District, to the detriment of the people, for the last 20 years. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the keynote speech delivered on the floor of this House a few minutes ago in behalf of the presidential candidacy of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Lowden. The keynoter indicated this presidential candidate's position on certain national legislation. His position, as given to the House, on the prohibition question, did not reflect much light as to where Mr. Lowden stands. We all know that any President who is elected by the people, be he Democrat or Republican, be he wet or be he dry, will see, to the best of his ability, that all of the laws of the Nation are enforced. I would like Mr. Lowden, his supporters and keynoter, to tell us, if Mr. Lowden is elected to the Presidency of the United States, whether or not he will request Congress to enact legislation to modify the Volstead Act so as to permit the manufacture and sale of light wine and beer. The voters of the great State of Illinois a few years ago, by an overwhelming majority, in a referendum vote, indicated their position in favor of modification of the Volstead Act.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order. I want to know upon what subject the gentleman is speaking.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield. In view of the fact that Mr. Lowden's keynoter has informed the House that Mr. Lowden was against the League of Nations I would like to know how Mr. Lowden stands now and how he stood several years ago on the League of Nations' World Court. A great majority of the Members of Congress from Illinois voted for the World Court resolution in this House. I would like to have Mr.

Lowden explain to the workingmen of this country whether the time is near at hand when the Pullman porters will be paid a living wage and not have to depend for the support of their families upon tips contributed by the traveling public. I should also like to have Mr. Lowden give his views on legislation which has been pending before this House for several years; namely, whether he will request Congress to enact legislation to repeal the Pullman surcharge.

There are many other questions, but these have just come to my mind at this time.

If the regular Republicans want a candidate who stands well before the country, I do not think they have to go to Illinois, because if they want a man who is a regular Republican, a man who is strong personally throughout the country, they could unite on the distinguished Speaker of the House, Mr. LONGWORTH. I think he would run stronger than any regular Republican candidate now in the field. [Applause.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I understand the question before the House to be that of consideration of the bill H. R. 52. Some observations have been made upon the reference of this bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

It is well known that I have taken a very consistent position, in the matter of the reference of bills to committees, in insisting that bills should be referred in strict accordance with the rules and precedents of the House. It seems to me, however, that this bill is at least on the border line. It has been shown, by the reading of precedents by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] that even on bills relating to the higher courts there have been exceptional references to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The bill now before the House—H. R. 52—may be said to relate more to the general welfare of the people of the District of Columbia in the administration of justice than to the organization or to the jurisdiction of the courts. I therefore hope, since the bill is here, and if it has all the merit that is claimed for it, even by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] who has raised the question of consideration, that we will not compel this bill to travel the route again but that it will receive consideration at this time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the House consider the bill?

The question was taken, and the House determined to consider the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the words "bonding business" as used in this act means the business of becoming surety for compensation upon bonds in criminal cases in the District of Columbia, and the word "bondsman" means any person or corporation engaged either as principal or as agent, clerk, or representative of another in such business.

SEC. 2. That the business of becoming surety for compensation upon bonds in criminal cases in the District of Columbia is impressed with a public interest.

SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person engaged, either as principal or as the clerk, agent, or representative of a corporation, or another person in the business of becoming surety upon bonds for compensation in the District of Columbia, either directly or indirectly, to give, donate, lend, contribute, or to promise to give, donate, loan, or contribute any money, property, entertainment, or other thing of value whatsoever to any attorney at law, police officer, deputy United States marshal, jailer, probation officer, clerk, or other attaché of a criminal court, or public official of any character, for procuring or assisting in procuring any person to employ said bondsman to execute as surety any bond for compensation in any criminal case in the District of Columbia; and it shall be unlawful for any attorney at law, police officer, deputy United States marshal, jailer, probation officer, clerk, bailiff, or other attaché of a criminal court, or public official of any character, to accept or receive from any such person engaged in the bonding business any money, property, entertainment, or other thing of value whatsoever for procuring or assisting in procuring any person to employ any bondsman to execute as surety any bond for compensation in any criminal case in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 4. It shall be unlawful for any attorney at law, either directly or indirectly, to give, loan, donate, contribute, or to promise to give, loan, donate, or contribute any money, property, entertainment, or other thing of value whatsoever to, or to split or divide any fee or commission with any bondsman, the agent, clerk, or representative of any bondsman, police officer, deputy United States marshal, probation officer, assistant probation officer, bailiff, clerk, or other attaché of any criminal court for causing or procuring or assisting in causing or procuring any person to employ such attorney to represent him in any criminal case in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 5. Five dollars per hundred shall be the maximum fee that it shall be lawful to charge for executing any bond in a criminal case in the District of Columbia, and it shall be unlawful for any person or corporation engaged in the bonding business, either as principal, or clerk, agent, or representative of another, either directly or indirectly, to charge, accept, or receive any sum of money, or other thing of value, other than the regular fee for bonding, from any person for whom he has executed bond, for any other service whatever performed in connection with any indictment, information, or charge upon which said person is bailed or held in the District of Columbia. It also shall be unlawful for any person or corporation engaged either as principal or as agent, clerk, or representative of another in the bonding business, to settle, or attempt to settle, or to procure or attempt to procure the dismissal of any indictment, information, or charge against any person in custody or held upon bond in the District of Columbia, with any court, or with the prosecuting attorney in any court in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 6. A typewritten or printed list of all persons engaged under the authority of any of the courts of criminal jurisdiction in the District of Columbia in the business of becoming surety upon bonds for compensation in criminal cases shall be posted in a conspicuous place in each police precinct, jail, prisoner's dock, house of detention, and every other place in the District of Columbia in which persons in custody of the law are detained, and one or more copies thereof kept on hand; and when any person who is detained in custody in any such place of detention shall request any person in charge thereof to furnish him the name of a bondsman, or to put him in communication with a bondsman, said list shall be furnished to the person so requesting, and it shall be the duty of the person in charge of said place of detention to put the person so detained in communication with the bondsman so selected, and the person in charge of said place of detention shall contemporaneously with said transaction make in the blotter or book of record kept in any such place of detention, a record showing the name of the person requesting the bondsman, the offense with which the said person is charged, the time at which the request was made, the bondsman requested, and the person by whom the said bondsman was called, and preserve the same as a permanent record in the book or blotter in which entered.

SEC. 7. It shall be unlawful for any bondsman, agent, clerk, or representative of any bondsman to enter a police precinct, jail, prisoner's dock, house of detention, or other place where persons in the custody of the law are detained in the District of Columbia for the purpose of obtaining employment as a bondsman, without having been previously called by a person so detained, or by some relative or other authorized person acting for or on behalf of the person so detained, and whenever any person engaged in the bonding business as principal, or as clerk, agent, or representative of another, shall enter a police precinct, jail, prisoner's dock, house of detention, or other place where persons in the custody of the law are detained in the District of Columbia, he shall forthwith give to the person in charge thereof his mission there, the name of the person calling him, and requesting him to come to such place, and the same shall be recorded by the person in charge of the said place of detention and preserved as a public record, and the failure to give such information, or the failure of the person in charge of said place of detention to make and preserve such a record, shall constitute a violation of this act.

SEC. 8. It shall be the duty of the police court, juvenile court, and the criminal divisions of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, each, to provide, under reasonable rules and regulations, the qualifications of persons and corporations applying for authority to engage in the bonding business in criminal cases in the District of Columbia, and the terms and conditions upon which such business shall be carried on, and no person or corporation shall, either as principal, or as agent, clerk, or representative of another, engage in the bonding business in any such court until he shall by order of the court be authorized to do so. Such courts, in making such rules and regulations, and in granting authority to persons to engage in the bonding business, shall take into consideration both the financial responsibility and the moral qualities of the person so applying, and no person shall be permitted to engage, either as principal or agent in the business of becoming surety upon bonds for compensation in criminal cases who has ever been convicted of any offense involving moral turpitude, or who is not known to be a person of good moral character. It shall be the duty of each of said courts to require every person qualifying to engage in the bonding business as principal to file with said court a list showing the name, age, and residence of each person employed by said bondsman as agent, clerk, or representative in the bonding business, and require an affidavit from each of said persons stating that said person will abide by the terms and provisions of this act. Each of said courts shall require the authority of each of said persons to be renewed from time to time at such periods as the court may by rule provide, and before said authority shall be renewed, the court shall require from each of said persons an affidavit that since his previous qualification to engage in the bonding business he has abided by the provisions of this act, and any person swearing falsely in any of said affidavits shall be guilty of perjury.

SEC. 9. It shall be unlawful for any police officer or other public official, in advance of any raid by police or other peace officers or public officials or the execution of any search warrant or warrant of arrest, to give or furnish, either directly or indirectly, any information concerning such proposed raid or arrest to any person engaged in any manner in the bonding business, or to any attorney at law.

SEC. 10. The judges of the police court of the District of Columbia shall have the authority to appoint some official of the Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia to act as a clerk of the police court with authority to take bail or collateral in criminal cases in the District of Columbia between the hours of 11 o'clock Saturday night and 9 o'clock Monday morning. The official so appointed shall have the same authority at said times with reference to taking bonds or collateral as the clerk of the police court now has; shall receive no compensation for said services other than his regular salary; shall be subject to the orders and rules of the police court in discharge of his said duties, and may be removed as such clerk at any time by the judges of the police court.

SEC. 11. Any person violating any provision of this act shall be punished by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $100, and by imprisonment of not less than 10 nor more than 60 days in jail; and if the person so convicted be a police officer or other public official, he shall also be forthwith dismissed from office; if a bondsman, or the agent, clerk, or representative of a bondsman, he shall be disqualified from thereafter engaging in any manner in the bonding business; and if an attorney at law, shall be subject to suspension or disbarment as attorney at law.

SEC. 12. It shall be the duty of the police court, juvenile court, and of the criminal divisions of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to see that this act is enforced, and upon the impaneling of each grand jury in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia it shall be the duty of the judge impaneling said jury to give it in charge to the jury to investigate the manner in which this act is enforced and all violations thereof.

During the reading of the bill the following occurred:

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the House Calendar and the time is in control of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN].

Mr. GILBERT. I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that the several committee amendments are not in this draft. The clerk by a mistake left them out, but they are committee amendments unanimously agreed upon by the committee and I have them here.

Mr. McLEOD. That is correct. I do not know how that occurred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call attention to the fact that this proceeding is a little irregular. The bill being a House bill should be read through before there are any amendments offered.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT].

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer some amendments. On page 4, line 7, after the word "list," insert "alphabetically arranged."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GILBERT: Page 4, line 7, after the word "list," insert the words "alphabetically arranged."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GILBERT. And on page 7, line 24, after the word "collateral," strike out the balance of that line and insert "from persons charged with offenses triable in the police court."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GILBERT: Page 7, line 24, after the word "collateral," insert the words "from persons charged with offenses triable in the police court."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GILBERT. And in the next line strike out the words "Saturday night and 9 o'clock Monday morning" and insert "p. m. and 9 o'clock a. m. and upon Sundays and holidays."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GILBERT: Page 7, line 25, strike out the words "Saturday night and 9 o'clock Monday morning" and insert "p. m. and 9 o'clock a. m. and upon Sundays and holidays."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GILBERT. And at the end of section 10, add the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GILBERT: At the end of section 10, page 8, line 8, insert: "The Supreme Court and the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia each shall have power by order to authorize the official appointed by the police court to take bond of persons arrested upon writs and processes from those courts in criminal cases between 4 o'clock p. m. and 9 o'clock a. m. and upon Sundays and holidays; and each of such courts shall have power at any time by order to revoke such authority granted by it."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GILBERT. And on page 8, line 12, after the word "jail," insert "where no other penalty is provided by this act."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GILBERT: Page 8, line 12, after the word "jail," insert the words "where no other penalty is provided by this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have learned that the reason for the objection of our friend from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] to the consideration of this bill was because of a procedure in the District Committee concerning which I agree with the gentleman from New York.

The District Committee of 21 members has been divided up into such a large bunch of subcommittees that I honestly believe the chairman himself does not know how many there are. One of these subcommittees is called "the judiciary committee," and it conflicts in name with the great Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives. I agree with the gentleman from New York and I agree with the gentlemen on the Judiciary Committee of the House that the District Committee ought to abolish its subcommittee that it calls the judiciary committee.

I hope the chairman of the District Committee will see that it is abolished. It is unnecessary and it is ridiculous to have so many subcommittees anyhow, and I will help the gentleman abolish it if he will make any effort along that line.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ZIHLMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD] may extend his remarks by inserting a part of the report giving the purposes of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may be permitted to extend his remarks on the bill just passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I hereby insert the following report of the Committee on the District of Columbia, reporting the bill (H. R. 52):

[To accompany H. R. 52]

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 52) to regulate the business of executing bonds for compensation in criminal cases and to improve the administration of justice in the District of Columbia, having considered the same, report it back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Your committee, after having studied the situation existing in the District of Columbia, is of the opinion that public interest demands the enactment of legislation destined to regulate the methods of operation of the professional bondsman and that the measure herewith reported would provide necessary safeguards and prove satisfactory.

The following is a brief synopsis of the various provisions of the bill.

The first section defines words and terms.

The second section provides that the business of becoming surety for compensation upon bonds in criminal cases in the District of Columbia is impressed with a public interest.

The third section provides that it shall be unlawful for any person engaged either as principal or agent or representative of a corporation in the business of becoming surety upon bonds for compensation in the District of Columbia, either directly or indirectly, to give, donate, loan, contribute, or to promise so to do, any money, property, or other thing of value whatsoever to any attorney, police officer, deputy United States marshal, jailor, etc., for procuring or assisting in procuring any person to employ said bondsman to execute as surety any bond for compensation in any criminal case in the District of Columbia; and it shall also be unlawful for any attorney or other officer enumerated above to receive or accept from any such person described anything of value for any such purpose.

Section 4 makes it unlawful for any attorney to give, loan, or donate, etc., anything of value, or to split or divide any fee with any bondsman or any representative of a bondsman or with other persons having to do with the execution of such bond.

Section 5 prescribes the maximum fee of $5 per hundred which shall be the charge for executing these bonds. Section 5 further makes it unlawful for any person or corporation engaged in the bonding business, either as principal or representative of another, either directly or indirectly, to accept any sum of money or other thing of value other than the regular fee for bonding, from any person for whom he has executed bond, for any other service whatever performed in connection with any indictment, etc., upon which said person is bailed or held in the District of Columbia. Section 5 also makes it unlawful for any person or corporation engaged either as principal or representative of another in the bonding business to settle or attempt to settle or attempt to procure dismissal of any indictment, etc., against any person in custody or held upon bond in the District of Columbia.

Section 6 requires a typewritten or printed list to be posted in a conspicuous place in each of the police precincts, jail, prisoner's dock, house of detention, etc., of all persons in the business of becoming surety upon bonds.

Section 7 makes it unlawful for any bondsman or representative of any bondsman to enter any police precinct, etc., for the purpose of obtaining employment as a bondsman without having been called by the prisoner for such purpose.

Section 8 makes it the duty of the police court, juvenile court, and the criminal divisions of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to provide the qualifications of persons and corporations applying for authority to engage in the bonding business.

Section 9 makes it unlawful for any police officer or any other public officer in advance of any raid to give any information concerning such proposed raid.

Section 10 provides that the judges of the police court in the District of Columbia shall appoint some official of the Metropolitan police force to act as a clerk of the police court with authority to take bail or collateral in criminal cases.

Section 11 provides penalties for violating any provision of the act, which are a fine of not less than $50 and not more than $100, and by imprisonment of not less than 10 nor more than 60 days in jail, as well as dismissal if the convicted person be an officer, and if a bondsman or representative of a bondsman he be disqualified thereafter to act in the bonding business.

Section 12, which is the last section, makes it the duty of the courts to see that this act is enforced, and makes it the duty of the judge upon the impaneling of each grand jury in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to give it in charge to the jury to investigate the manner in which this act is enforced and all violations thereof.

CONCERNING LIABILITY FOR PARTICIPATION IN BREACHES OF FIDUCIARY OBLIGATIONS

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6844) concerning liability for participation in breaches of fiduciary obligations and to make uniform the law with reference thereto.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

[H. R. 6844, 70th Cong., 1st sess.]

A bill concerning liability for participation in breaches of fiduciary obligations and to make uniform the law with reference thereto

Be it enacted, etc., That the Code of Law of the District of Columbia be amended as follows:

"SECTION 1. Definition of terms: (1) In this act unless the context or subject matter otherwise requires:

"'Bank' includes any person or association of persons, whether incorporated or not, carrying on the business of banking.

"'Fiduciary' includes a trustee under any trust, expressed, implied, resulting or constructive, executor, administrator, guardian, conservator, curator, receiver, trustee in bankruptcy, assignee for the benefit of creditors, partner, agent, officer of a corporation, public or private, public officer, or any other person acting in a fiduciary capacity for any person, trust, or estate.

"'Person' includes a corporation, partnership, or other association, or two or more persons having a joint or common interest.

"'Principal' includes any person to whom a fiduciary as such owes an obligation.

"(2) A thing is done 'in good faith' within the meaning of this act, when it is in fact done honestly, whether it be done negligently or not.

"SEC. 2. Application of payments made to fiduciaries: A person who in good faith pays or transfers to a fiduciary any money or other property which the fiduciary as such is authorized to receive, is not responsible for the proper application thereof by the fiduciary; and any right or title acquired from the fiduciary in consideration of such payment or transfer is not invalid in consequence of a misapplication by the fiduciary.

"SEC. 3. Registration of transfer of securities held by fiduciaries: If a fiduciary in whose name are registered any shares of stock, bonds, or other securities of any corporation, public or private, or company or other association or of any trust, transfers the same, such corporation or company or other association, or any of the managers of the trust, or its or their transfer agent, is not bound to inquire whether the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in making the transfer, or to see to the performance of the fiduciary obligation, and is liable for registering such transfer only where registration of the transfer is made with actual knowledge that the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in making the transfer, or with knowledge of such facts that the action in registering the transfer amounts to bad faith.

"SEC. 4. Transfer of negotiable instrument by fiduciary: If any negotiable instrument payable or indorsed to a fiduciary as such is indorsed by the fiduciary, or if any negotiable instrument payable or indorsed to his principal is indorsed by a fiduciary empowered to indorse such instrument on behalf of his principal, the indorsee is not bound to inquire whether the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in indorsing or delivering the instrument, and is not chargeable with notice that the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary unless he takes the instrument with actual knowledge of such breach or with knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounts to bad faith. If, however, such instrument is transferred by the fiduciary in payment of or as security for a personal debt of the fiduciary to the actual knowledge of the creditor, or is transferred in any transaction known by the transferee to be for the personal benefit of the fiduciary, the creditor or other transferee is liable to the principal if the fiduciary in fact commits a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in transferring the instrument.

"SEC. 5. Check drawn by fiduciary payable to third person: If a check or other bill of exchange is drawn by a fiduciary as such, or in the name of his principal by a fiduciary empowered to draw such instrument in the name of his principal, the payee is not bound to inquire whether the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in drawing or delivering the instrument, and is not chargeable with notice that the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary unless he takes the instrument with actual knowledge of such breach or with knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounts to bad faith. If, however, such instrument is payable to a personal creditor of the fiduciary and delivered to the creditor in payment of or as security for a personal debt of the fiduciary to the actual knowledge of the creditor, or is drawn and delivered in any transaction known by the payee to be for the personal benefit of the fiduciary, the creditor or other payee is liable to the principal if the fiduciary in fact commits a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in drawing or delivering the instrument.

"SEC. 6. Check drawn by and payable to fiduciary: If a check or other bill of exchange is drawn by a fiduciary as such or in the name of his principal by a fiduciary empowered to draw such instrument in the name of his principal, payable to the fiduciary personally, or payable to a third person and by him transferred to the fiduciary, and is thereafter transferred by the fiduciary, whether in payment of a personal debt of the fiduciary or otherwise, the transferee is not bound to inquire whether the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in transferring the instrument, and is not chargeable with notice that the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary unless he takes the instrument with actual knowledge of such breach or with knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounts to bad faith.

"SEC. 7. Deposit in name of fiduciary as such: If a deposit is made in a bank to the credit of a fiduciary as such, the bank is authorized to pay the amount of the deposit or any part thereof upon the check of the fiduciary, signed with the name in which such deposit is entered, without being liable to the principal, unless the bank pays the check with actual knowledge that the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in drawing the check or with knowledge of such facts that its action in paying the check amounts to bad faith. If, however, such a check is payable to the drawee bank and is delivered to it in payment of or as security for a personal debt of the fiduciary to it, the bank is liable to the principal if the fiduciary in fact commits a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in drawing or delivering the check.

"SEC. 8. Deposit in name of principal: If a check is drawn upon the account of his principal in a bank by a fiduciary who is empowered to draw checks upon his principal's account, the bank is authorized to pay such check without being liable to the principal, unless the bank pays the check with actual knowledge that the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in drawing such check, or with knowledge of such facts that its action in paying the check amounts to bad faith. If, however, such a check is payable to the drawee bank and is delivered to it in payment of or as security for a personal debt of the fiduciary to it, the bank is liable to the principal if the fiduciary in fact commits a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in drawing or delivering the check.

"SEC. 9. Deposit in fiduciary's personal account: If a fiduciary makes a deposit in a bank to his personal credit of checks drawn by him upon an account in his own name as fiduciary, or of checks payable to him as fiduciary, or of checks drawn by him upon an account in the name of his principal if he is empowered to draw checks thereon, or of checks payable to his principal and indorsed by him, if he is empowered to indorse such checks, or if he otherwise makes a deposit of funds held by him as fiduciary, the bank receiving such deposit is not bound to inquire whether the fiduciary is committing thereby a breach of his obligation as fiduciary; and the bank is authorized to pay the amount of the deposit or any part thereof upon the personal check of the fiduciary without being liable to the principal, unless the bank receives the deposit or pays the check with actual knowledge that the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in making such deposit or in drawing such check, or with knowledge of such facts that its action in receiving the deposit or paying the check amounts to bad faith.

"SEC. 10. Deposit in names of two or more trustees: When a deposit is made in a bank in the name of two or more persons as trustees and a check is drawn upon the trust account by any trustee or trustees authorized by the other trustee or trustees to draw checks upon the trust account, neither the payee nor other holder nor the bank is bound to inquire whether it is a breach of trust to authorize such trustee or trustees to draw checks upon the trust account, and is not liable unless the circumstances be such that the action of the payee or other holder or the bank amounts to bad faith.

"SEC. 11. Act not retroactive: The provisions of this act shall not apply to transactions taking place prior to the time when it takes effect.

"SEC. 12. Cases not provided for in act: In any case not provided for in this act the rules of law and equity, including the law merchant and those rules of law and equity relating to trusts, agency, negotiable instruments, and banking, shall continue to apply.

"SEC. 13. Uniformity of interpretation: This act shall be so interpreted and construed as to effectuate its general purpose to make uniform the law of those States which enact it.

"SEC. 14. Short title: This act may be cited as the uniform fiduciaries act.

"SEC. 15. Inconsistent laws repealed: All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 16. Time of taking effect: This act shall take effect upon the date of its passage."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out lines 3 and 4, page 1, and substitute therefor the following:

"That the following provisions concerning liability for participation in breaches of fiduciary obligations and to make uniform the law with reference thereto shall be in force in the District of Columbia, namely."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Is this bill identical with statutes now in effect in a good many States?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes. This bill was drawn by a committee of the national conference of commissioners on uniform State laws and is, in effect, the statues which prevail almost verbatim in the States of Alabama, California, Delaware, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Rhode Island, South Dakota, and Wisconsin.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman says "almost verbatim." I understand the changes do not affect the substance of what is proposed.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Let me say that this bill is based largely on the statutes of the States I have named. The States that have this law verbatim are Colorado, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, New Jersey, Indiana, Pennsylvania, Utah, and Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ZIHLMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLEOD] may have permission to extend his remarks by including the report of the committee explaining the purpose of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I hereby insert the following report of the Committee on the District of Columbia reporting the bill H. R. 6844:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill H. R. 6844, concerning liability for participation in breaches of fiduciary obligations and to make uniform the law with reference thereto, recommend that the bill be amended in the particular following, and as amended that it be passed.

The amendment recommended is the following:

Strike out lines 3 and 4, page 1, and substitute therefor the following:

"That the following provisions concerning liability for participation in breaches of fiduciary obligations and to make uniform the law with reference thereto shall be in force in the District of Columbia, namely."

The amendment is to correct a clerical error in the drafting of the bill. As originally drawn the bill appeared to propose a substitute for sections 1 to 16 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, whereas there was no intention to affect these sections of the code, which do not relate to the subject matter of the bill.

The form of the enacting clause proposed by this committee amendment conforms to that used in enacting for the District of Columbia the uniform warehouse receipts act (approved April 15, 1910, 36 Stat. 301), and accomplishes the intention of the framers of the bill.

There are in the District of Columbia no direct or controlling decisions of the courts upon the field of law covered by the bill. In the several States, however, the decisions are so diverse that the result is that it is not clear to what extent persons dealing with fiduciaries are bound to supervise them in the performance of their duties. In practice, in the ordinary course of banking and commercial transactions it is impracticable for banks and other persons dealing with fiduciaries to make effective inquiries into their conduct. Transfers by fiduciaries of property in their charge as such to themselves in their individual capacity are often held to constitute such constructive notice of a breach of the fiduciary's duty as to make third persons who participate in such a transfer liable for the property or funds so transferred if it is in fact a breach of the fiduciary's trust. Yet in actual practice such transfers need frequently to be made by honest fiduciaries, as, for example, in the payment to the fiduciary of his compensation, and rigid inquiry by persons dealing with honest fiduciaries into every such transaction, and hesitation to act without inquiry, would impede and obstruct the ordinary transaction of business, with no substantial benefit.

The several sections of the bill subsequent to the enacting clause are in the precise form drafted to be pressed for enactment in all the States and Territories. The purpose of the bill is to establish uniform and definite rules in the place of the diverse and indefinite rules now prevailing as to "constructive notice" of breaches of fiduciary obligations. Liabilities of fiduciaries are not dealt with nor affected, but only the liabilities of persons dealing with fiduciaries. At present the law in the several States as to the liability of persons dealing with fiduciaries is uncertain. It is not clear under what circumstances such persons are charged with "constructive notice" of breaches of trust by fiduciaries. The usual result if a third person dealing with a fiduciary is charged with constructive notice of a breach of trust by a fiduciary, is that the person so dealing is held liable along with the fiduciary for the breach of trust.

A dishonest fiduciary can easily cover his tracks by transferring property he intends to convert to his own use first to a straw man and afterwards to himself, so that no reasonable inquiry would reveal his dishonesty. As a practical matter, the delay and expense incident to the inquiry which needs to be made under the existing unsettled state of the law by banks and other persons dealing with fiduciaries would fall in the first instance upon the trust estates, the great majority of which are honestly administered, and falls ultimately upon the beneficiaries for whom the fiduciaries are acting.

Much of the proposed act is merely declaratory of existing law as established in many jurisdictions. Which of the diverse rules established in the several States would be followed in the District of Columbia if this branch of the law were left to judicial development can not with certainty be stated; but some of the decisions in the States set up as a test of the liability of a person dealing with a fiduciary, such as the payee or indorsee of a check drawn or indorsed by a fiduciary, the question whether such person was negligent. The proposed act makes such a person liable only if he takes the negotiable instrument with knowledge of such facts as makes his action amount to bad faith.

In the case of banks which are depositaries of fiduciary funds subject to the order of fiduciaries, if a check of the fiduciary is in fact a breach of his obligation, the bank is made by the act liable to the beneficiary if it receives such a check in payment of the personal debt of the fiduciary, or if the check is payable to the bank itself, and in other cases if it has such knowledge of the facts as amount to bad faith on its part in honoring the check. Under other circumstances a claim of negligence on the part of the bank can not be made the basis of liability on its part under the provisions of this act, though in some jurisdictions banks have been held liable as for a participation in the breach of a fiduciary's obligation where the bank acted in good faith and did not profit by nor participate in the breach of the fiduciary's obligations, upon the ground that it was negligent in supervising the fiduciary in the performance of his duties. These are illustrations of the substitution made by the bill of definite rules of liability for the test of "due care" or "negligence" which has produced the diversity of decisions among the States.

The bill was drafted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, which had its origin in the appointment of a special committee by the American Bar Association in 1889 and the authorization in 1890 by an act of the Legislature of the State of New York of the appointment of commissioners for the promotion of uniformity of legislation in the United States. By successive actions in the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Territories all of these jurisdictions are now represented in the national conference by two or three representatives each. These conferences are held during the week immediately preceding the annual meeting of the American Bar Association, and its actions are reviewed by the American Bar Association. Of the uniform acts proposed by this conference, the negotiable instruments act has been adopted in all jurisdictions, including the District of Columbia, excepting Porto Rico, though with modifications in Illinois and Vermont. The warehouse receipts act has been adopted in 48 jurisdictions, including the District of Columbia, uniform sales act adopted in 25 jurisdictions, uniform bills of lading act adopted in 25 jurisdictions, and uniform partnership act adopted in 14 jurisdictions.

Sections 4, 5, and 6 of the present bill are in supplement of and to carry out the intention of the negotiable instruments act, section 56 (sec. 1360, D. C. Code).

The matter of a uniform act covering the liabilities of person dealing with trustees and other fiduciaries was referred to a committee of the conference in 1919, and drafts of the present act were considered by the conference in 1921 and 1922 and were then unanimously approved. Since 1922 it has been adopted verbatim in Colorado, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, New Jersey, Indiana, Pennsylvania, Utah, and Wisconsin. It is being pressed for enactment at the present sessions of the legislatures of other States.

The bill was introduced at the request of the Bar Association of the District of Columbia. At the hearings before your committee it was considered section by section and its passage was advocated by representatives of the Bar Association of the District, of the American Bar Association, of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, of the Clearing House Association of the District of Columbia, of the American Bankers Association, and of the District of Columbia Bankers Association. No opposition to the passage of the bill has been made known to the committee. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia (who appoint the commissioners for the District of Columbia on uniform State laws) have signified their approval by letter addressed to their appointees to the conference and filed with this committee.

The act is compact and can not be well summarized. The topics treated in the several sections are as follows:

Section 1 deals with definitions. The definition of "bank" is identical with that in the negotiable instruments law, section 1 (D. C. Code, sec. 1304). The definition of "person" is a combination of the definitions in the negotiable instruments law and the warehouse receipts act (D. C. Code, sec. 1304; 36 Stat. 301, sec. 58). The definition of "good faith" is identical with that of the warehouse receipts act (36 Stat. 301, sec. 58).

Section 2 deals with the misapplication by the fiduciary of payments and transfers of money and property to the fiduciary which he is authorized to receive. The contrary doctrine and the inconvenience of the common law on this point is often avoided by careful counsel drawing trust instruments by the insertion of an express provision to the effect of this proposed statute. The language of the section is based upon statutes already existing in England and in Alabama, California, Delaware, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Rhode Island, South Dakota, and Wisconsin.

Section 3 deals with the transfer of stock which has been legally registered in the name of fiduciaries. It commends itself to persons having practical experience with the transfer of stock. It is based on a Massachusetts statute (St. 1918, ch. 68, sec. 3), and there are somewhat similar provisions in Delaware (Rev. Code 1915, sec. 3396), Kentucky (Stats. 1909, sec. 4169), and Pennsylvania (Purdon's Dig. 13th ed. 4850, sec. 7). Recently Illinois passed a similar statute. There is a similar statute in England (company's consolidation act (1908), sec. 27).

Sections 4, 5, and 6 deal with holders of negotiable paper drawn or indorsed by fiduciaries. These are the sections which are supplemental to and consistent with section 56 of the negotiable instruments act (D. C. Code 1360), and deal with the question whether such holders get good title to the instrument or are liable for using the proceeds of it if in fact the fiduciary has committed a breach of his trust. Under sections 4 and 5 the liability of such a holder is made definite if he acted in bad faith, or if he took the instrument in payment or in security for a personal debt of the fiduciary, or in a transaction known to be for the personal benefit of the fiduciary. The distinction between cases covered by sections 4 and 5 and that covered by section 6 is in accordance with Massachusetts cases cited in review of the subject in 34 Harvard Law Review 454, note 26.

Sections 7, 8, and 9 deal with the liabilities of banks and other depositaries of fiduciary funds. In the several different cases dealt with in these sections liability of the bank is declared where the bank has knowledge of such facts as amounted to bad faith or knowledge that the fiduciary was committing a breach of his obligation, or in the case of deposits in the name of the principal or in the name of the fiduciary as such where the check in question is payable to the bank itself and in payment or security for a personal debt of the fiduciary.

Section 10 applies ordinary business principles to deposits in the name of two or more persons as trustees. This section is made desirable because of a doctrine that trustees may not delegate their duties, excepting as to merely ministerial acts, and it remains doubtful as to whether the drawing of a check is a ministerial act in the eyes of the law.

FALSE INFORMATION REGARDING COMMISSION OF CRIME IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 8558) relating to giving false information regarding the commission of crime in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons willfully or knowingly to give, or send, or cause to be sent, or to make a false or fictitious report to the police of a commission of any crime within the District of Columbia. Anyone violating the provisions of this act shall be liable to a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $100, or to imprisonment not exceeding 30 days, or to both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I understand the purpose of this bill is to stop the fictitious claims, or reports, being made of crime. For instance that a man has been robbed, to form the basis for a claim against insurance companies. Is that the purpose?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. No. The police department has spent a great deal of time on false information and reports made by some one who may have a grudge against the neighbor or an imaginary grievance against some business firm.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If we pass such a bill as this will it not make it dangerous for a citizen to make a report which he believes to be true—are we not going to the other extreme? If there is a penalty attached to making a report do not you make it extremely hard for that person, and will he not hesitate to make a complaint? Anyone who has had any experience with the enforcement of criminal law knows the danger that this bill might create.

Mr. HAMMER. If the gentleman will yield, the intended purpose of this bill is to punish persons who willfully or knowingly give false reports to the police of the commission of crime in the District of Columbia. While there may be advantage to have a law that will punish persons who falsely claim they have been robbed, or some other alleged criminal offense, in order to direct attention away from some other crime, will we not do a great injury in deterring people from making correct reports for fear they might be prosecuted. Have we not such adequate laws now? It strikes me that the very intended purpose of the bill may be defeated. I do not mean to say that I oppose the legislation. It is plain that this law exists in other States, but my own idea is that while it may to some extent tend to correct the evil that it seeks to correct, we ought to go very slowly in enacting such legislation.

I fear that it will tend to prevent the administration of justice, and instead of defeating the hardened criminals who do make false reports for the purpose of distracting attention away from their crimes it will deter the honest, responsible persons as well as timid persons from making complaints.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In the immigration service we get a great many reports from different people, some of which are anonymous.

It becomes hard in weeding out, and some investigation must be made, but surely, if you are going to impose a penalty for ficticious or false reports, the police are going to have very little information given to them.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill was submitted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and I call attention to a letter from the District Commissioners on page 2 of the report.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What does the police department say about it?

Mr. SCHAFER. That is not a letter from the present Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Inspector Pratt, of the Metropolitan police force, the assistant superintendent of police, urged upon the chairman of the committee the necessity for this legislation, and appeared before the subcommittee urging the passage of the bill.

The bill was submitted to the Citizens Advisory Council, and they recommended the passage of the bill.

Mr. HAMMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. HAMMER. Yet I notice that while Commissioner Rudolph, for whom I have a very high regard, signed a letter as one of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, Mr. Rudolph is not a lawyer and has had no experience in the courts, and there is nothing from the courts or from any judicial officers to support his contention. Also Mr. Jesse C. Suter, who is the chairman of the Citizens Advisory Council, is not a lawyer or a judge or a prosecutor, and so far as I can ascertain there is no one in the District of Columbia or elsewhere who has had any experience in the courts or in investigating matters of this kind who supports the bill. The Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice could have been called upon to give its opinion. In the absence of the opinion of anyone except the Commissioners of the District, who have nothing to do with actual experience in enforcing the criminal laws of the District, and of Mr. Jesse C. Suter, who is a very fine gentleman, but who has never had any experience as a prosecutor and is not even a lawyer, as I understand——

Mr. ZIHLMAN. No.

Mr. HAMMER. He is a very fine gentleman, of course, but in the absence of any experienced person, judge, or prosecutor, association, or of any court or prosecutor giving us any reason other than that they want to deter people who are hardened criminals from making false reports to divert attention in some instances from their own crimes coming into court, I doubt the wisdom of passing this legislation. There have been 18 instances such as they complain of here in a city of more than half a million people within two months. That is not a very large number, when we consider that 96,000 arrests were made in this city last year. From my viewpoint I do not think it will be calculated to be of general benefit in law enforcement and in detecting crime. I fear that it will deter timid women, for instance, widows, with little influence and large families, as well as responsible citizenship, where crimes have been committed from making reports of criminal offenses. The criminal element will simply say, "We will have you up if you report us."

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this bill states that they must give this information willfully and knowingly. They must know it to be false.

Mr. HAMMER. The language is "or," not "and." In committee I wanted to change from "or" to "and."

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I believe that in the consideration of so important a measure as this we should have a quorum, and if this bill is to be considered I think we should have a quorum of the House present.

Mr. BLANTON. It is going to be considered, so get the quorum.

Mr. HAMMER. I do not know whether it is going to be considered or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). It is being considered. The gentleman from Maryland has the floor and is yielding to other gentlemen to debate the bill.

Mr. SCHAFER. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this vote 302 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] has consumed six minutes of his hour. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this bill was sent to the Committee on the District of Columbia by the District Commissioners and by them asked to be passed. I believe our chairman told you that Inspector Pratt, of the police department, asked that it be passed to prevent false information, without warrant, charging people with having committed crime being given to the police. Such acts can not be punished, because not coming within the purview of false swearing or perjury.

I wish you knew how many false affidavits are made against innocent parties here, which force them before the courts, when they are absolutely innocent. For instance, here on the 6th day of March, this month, a policeman got a woman here to make an affidavit against another policeman, charging that he assaulted her sister-in-law in her apartment away back yonder nearly a year ago. As a result the policeman so charged was stripped of his uniform and his pay stopped.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order. The gentleman is out of order. He is not confining himself to the subject of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, I am. I am speaking of false information against people.

Mr. SCHAFER. How about the false information you brought here to the House, which you could not substantiate? If it were not for the privilege of the RECORD, some of your allegations would subject you to the provisions of this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman does not know what he is talking about.

Now, concerning this statement which was filed, I wish to read to you this affidavit which was taken yesterday. This is the woman who it was claimed this policeman assaulted.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I insist on my point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman is not discussing the bill. He is discussing a question which is pending before a trial board of the police department of the District of Columbia. I submit that it is out of order to discuss it on the floor of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas is familiar with the rules of the House, and will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly. I am perfectly familiar with the rules of the House. This is the woman who, this other woman claimed, was assaulted. Listen to what she says. I read:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA:

I, Mrs. Virginia Eberhart Hanley, being duly sworn, upon my oath state:

I am the same person who in the affidavit made by Mrs. Louise E. Hanley on March 6, 1928, before H. M. Luckett, notary, is mentioned therein as "Miss Virginia Eberhart." I married on March 17, 1928, and am now the wife of Mr. I. G. Hanley, and we live at 2121 H Street NW.

On the night of March 6, 1928, Mrs. Louise E. Hanley requested that I come to her apartment, and, accompanied by my present husband, we went there and the said Mrs. Louise E. Hanley then told us of the affidavit she had signed trying to implicate my name with Officer Staples, and she asked me if I would go up against Staples. I told her I did not know Staples and I refused to do it.

The next afternoon the said Mrs. Louise E. Hanley, accompanied by Officer Joe Hunt, came to my apartment and tried to induce me to back up the said Mrs. Louise E. Hanley in making a similar affidavit against Staples. This I refused to do. Officer Joe Hunt told me that it would not make any difference as no one would ever know anything about it, but I refused, as I had never seen Officer Staples and did not know him. Officer Hunt then told me that if I decided to do as they wanted me to to let him know about it later. This was the last I heard of it until I saw my name mentioned in the paper in reporting the said affidavit of Mrs. Louise E. Hanley.

Accompanied by my husband, after being unable to find Mr. Staples by telephone yesterday, we went to his house to-day and for the first time in my life I then saw him, and we told him what we knew about the matter.

I voluntarily accompanied my husband to the office of Congressman THOMAS L. BLANTON, a member of the Gibson investigating committee, to relate these facts to him, and in the presence of my husband I am now voluntarily relating such facts to him in his office that justice may be done.

Mrs. VIRGINIA EBERHART HANLEY.

Witness:

I. G. HANLEY.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who wrote that affidavit? Who drafted it?

Mr. BLANTON. This woman came to my office and it was prepared in my office yesterday. She voluntarily and deliberately came there in company with her husband, after finding out that a lie was being told in her name against an officer, and that another police officer was trying to get her to injure a policeman.

Mr. BOWLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to my friend from Alabama. The gentleman from Wisconsin is always buzzing like an ungovernable cyclone. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I make——

Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield. The gentleman should sit down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order. The gentleman from Texas has the floor.

Mr. SCHAFER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order.

Mr. BOWLING. I want to ask the gentleman if the making of a false affidavit such as he read about in that affidavit is not punishable by law as the law now stands?

Mr. BLANTON. No. Unfortunately it is not, because it was not in a proceeding before a court. That is what we are trying to reach in this bill.

Mr. BOWLING. Instead of reaching that you go so far as to prevent any kind of misinformation that may be imparted in the best of good faith by a good citizen.

Mr. HERSEY. This bill ought to be amended.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Maine is a distinguished lawyer. If he thinks that way about this bill, I would be willing that the bill be laid aside until it could be properly amended.

Mr. HERSEY. It is the most foolish bill I ever saw brought into the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I will say this: I had nothing to do with this bill, Mr. Speaker. It was prepared by the commissioners of this District. It was sent here by the commissioners to be passed.

I have not considered it, even with the subcommittee that reported it. If it is not a proper bill, we ought to make it proper; and since these two active members of the Committee on the Judiciary, Mr. BOWLING and Mr. HERSEY, believe it ought to be amended, I hope the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia will recall the bill and ask that it go back to the committee. I suggest that the bill be not considered further and that we take up another bill; otherwise it will be killed here for this session of Congress.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLEOD], who reported the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I think distinguished lawyers here who have studied the bill, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BOWLING], the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY], and our distinguished friend from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE], who are careful in looking into these matters from the judicial angle, will join me in the suggestion that the bill be recalled.

Mr. McLEOD. Do they say anything about the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. They say it is a ridiculous bill. [Laughter.] I am not prepared to deny it.

Mr. McLEOD. Will the gentleman point out where it is ridiculous? I reported it.

Mr. BLANTON. I admit that it is ridiculous. [Laughter.]

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLEOD].

Mr. HAMMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. Yes.

Mr. HAMMER. I notice that the gentleman from Texas, after having a roll call of 30 minutes, is seeking to do what I tried to do—have the bill withdrawn. I think the purpose of the bill is good, but it seems to me it goes too far, although I may be wrong in my position. I think it will do much to interfere with responsible persons and timid people who do not care to run the risk of being threatened with prosecutions and with prosecutions for cooperating with law-enforcement officials and who will refuse to do that which is now done. It has a bad tendency and will help to prevent the due administration of the criminal law. I am afraid it will prevent timid people as well as responsible persons from giving information which might be of value in the detection of crime and will have no great deterring effect upon hardened criminals. I think the purpose of the bill was intended for good, but I think its good purposes will be more than overbalanced by its evil tendencies and bad influence upon preventing the public from properly cooperating in law enforcement.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I admit this is new legislation as far as I can find out. Assistant Superintendent Pratt, of the local police department, has just informed me that there are two States in the country that have similar legislation. He has told me, since this bill was reported, which was March 10 of this year, that at that time there were 18 false reports pending from the first of the year until that date and since that date the number has increased to 42.

We have in the District of Columbia legislation which makes it a crime to give false information, which is called a false alarm in the fire department. As far as the committee has been able to find out this legislation has the same object in mind; in other words, it attempts to eliminate the giving of false information, because it costs the department and the District of Columbia equally as much to investigate a false report as it does a bona fide report.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. What is the nature of these false reports that this bill deals with?

Mr. McLEOD. Many of them pertain to embezzlement. One case cited by Mr. Pratt was that employees, finding themselves in pretty tight scrapes after having taken money, and in order to cover up, have made complaint to the department that money has been lost or stolen.

Mr. BOWLING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. Yes.

Mr. BOWLING. As this language is written it is very inclusive and would apply to all reports, whether they were made in good faith or not. A man might see something which he believes is a violation of the law but which would be perfectly innocent and only have the earmarks that a crime was to be committed. Now, if he should give what he thought was true information to the police and it afterwards turned out to be false and fictitious, he would be subjecting himself to a fine. Will the gentleman permit me to suggest this: Do you not think you ought to amend your bill by stating that these statements shall be punishable if knowingly made and with intent to deceive; that it is done with malice or done for the purpose of hiding crime? Certainly some phraseology like that should go in the bill, in order that innocent people could in perfect good faith give information to the police in the event of a violation of the law.

Mr. McLEOD. If the gentleman will read the bill carefully he will see that that exact language is contained in the bill.

Mr. BOWLING. There is no language in the bill of that sort. The bill merely provides for false or fictitious reports.

Mr. McLEOD. The bill provides:

That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons willfully or knowingly to give, or send, or cause to be sent, or to make a false or fictitious report.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. While I do not approve of the bill, to answer the suggestion made by the gentleman from Alabama I would suggest—and I have an amendment ready—that we strike out the word "or" and insert the word "and," so as to make it read:

That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons willfully and knowingly to give, or send, or cause to be sent—

And so on. Then I would insert:

With intent to injure another.

Mr. BOWLING. That is my idea.

Mr. McLEOD. But that is not the idea of the legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL].

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] is well able to take care of himself I do not appear as his defender, but as jealously guarding the RECORD I must insist that the gentleman from Texas withdraw the remarks which he made a short time ago with reference to the gentleman from Wisconsin. It does not add to the dignity of this body to have the public read in the RECORD, the official organ of this body, any such remarks as were made by him, and unless the gentleman from Texas voluntarily withdraws those remarks I shall ask that they be stricken from the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. What remarks is the gentleman talking about?

Mr. UNDERHILL. The remarks of the gentleman referring to the gentleman from Wisconsin, which were extremely personal.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts, in so far as that statement is concerned, is correct. It is personal, and while I do not do it under his threat, I do it nevertheless. I ask that they be withdrawn; in fact, I will leave them out of the RECORD when I revise my remarks.

Mr. UNDERHILL I want them withdrawn.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw them. I would have done it in revision without the gentleman's request.

Mr. DEAL. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. DEAL. Does not the gentleman from Massachusetts think the gentleman from Wisconsin ought to have stricken from the RECORD the remarks he made, which are far worse, in my humble opinion, than the remarks made by the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. UNDERHILL. What were they?

Mr. BLANTON. They will not go in my remarks, because I did not yield to him. I expect to cut them out anyway. [Laughter.]

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER]. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I raised the point of no quorum on the pending bill because there were but few Members on the floor at that time, and I thought then, and I think at the present time, that this bill is too far-reaching and will have a tendency to prevent citizens of the District of Columbia from reporting actual violations of the law.

In view of the fact that the gentleman from Texas has withdrawn a part of the remarks which he made, I will not at this time bring to the attention of the House certain remarks that appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of October 27, 1921, but if any Member refers to those remarks he will know the reference which I have made.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman give us the page, so we can find them?

Mr. SCHAFER. Page 6880.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I will turn the gentleman footloose. He can refer to them if he wants to.

Mr. SCHAFER. I do not intend to at this time. They speak for themselves.

Mr. BLANTON. All right; the gentleman understands he is absolutely footloose.

Mr. SCHAFER. I refuse to yield—sit down. [Laughter.] So far as trying to run this House of Congress and trying to run every department of the District of Columbia from the police department down, I do not have to mention the party's name, but will know that the full membership of the House realizes who is attempting to do that very thing.

The other day we had the allegation on the floor of this House practically charging high officers of the police department with accepting protection money from bootleggers because they found in Washington a truck with a secret compartment. At that time the evidence purporting to substantiate the charges consisted of affidavits of law violators—confessed law violators. At that time the affidavit of a confessed law violator was right and proper, according to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], but what do we find later on in the RECORD. We find that one of the members of the Metropolitan police force is before the trial board, a police trial board, acting under the provisions of existing law, a board created to try and hear evidence and hear cross-examination, giving a man a chance to be heard and meet his accusers face to face, and we find a Member of this House, the gentleman from Texas, if newspaper reports are correct, asking the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to nullify the provisions of the law and asking them to step in and take original jurisdiction of the case and not let it go before the trial board, which is provided for trying such offenses in the first instance.

Then we find the gentleman from Texas greatly disturbed because some of the charges upon which his friend, the policeman, Mr. Staples, is being tried under the provisions of law by the trial board were made by law violators. At one time the affidavit of a law violator does not mean anything, but at another time it does.

I believe in the enforcement of all laws, and reserve my constitutional rights under the Constitution to ask for the change of any existing law or any existing provision of the Constitution, but I believe while the laws are on the statute books they should be enforced, and a man who says he is in favor of the enforcement of all laws should not deliberately try to ignore the law creating the police trial board.

It is highly improper for a Member of Congress, I believe, to appear on the floor of the House and give a clean bill of health to any man who is under fire and whose case is before the trial board.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER. If the charges or any part of the charges which have been preferred against this member of the Metropolitan police force are framed up or untrue or unjust and the trial board is unfair and unjust, then the time to condemn the trial board is after they have acted on the case, and not to attempt directly or indirectly to influence the decision of the board.

Under the law, any member of the Metropolitan police force, including Mr. Staples, has the right of trial by the police trial board and has the right to appeal to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and has the further right to appeal to the courts of the land; and it is somewhat remarkable that a gentleman of this House who last week came before the House and cried about violations of law and derelictions in the performance of duties by the members of the Metropolitan police force, telling this House and telling the world that if he was in charge of law enforcement in the District how far he would go, should come before the House a few days later and try to acquit and give a clean bill of health to a member of the police force who has been brought before the trial board on a number of charges. I say this is astonishing.

So far as the gentleman from Texas indicating how he felt toward me is concerned, perhaps I feel the same way toward him [laughter and applause], and perhaps many Members of the House feel the same way toward him; but I can take care of myself on the floor of this House, and I can take care of myself outside the floor of this House; and I fear no man, even if he is the alleged great, big, headline, fiery Texan we read about in the papers. I will not be intimidated by any statements the gentleman may make in this Chamber or without it.

I believe the pending bill goes too far. I believe it will have a tendency to curb law enforcement, and I therefore ask that the Members of this body cast their votes in opposition to the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, for three weeks I have been after the bootleggers in the District of Columbia. I am not surprised that a man who stands on this floor almost daily and advocates a law permitting beer that would be in violation of the Constitution, should come to their rescue [applause], and make an attack upon me.

When my friend from Wisconsin and I meet each other in gymnasiums or otherwise I will even not compel him to weigh in with me. [Laughter.] I will waive my excess(?) in weight. The gentleman makes a brave speech on this floor against his colleague, who is trying to get decent government in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BOWLING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield to my friend.

Mr. BOWLING. I simply want to ask if it is true that the gentleman has been trying to intimidate the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. BLANTON. Why, I have had him intimidated ever since he has been here. [Laughter.] He has been almost afraid to expectorate without coming and asking my permission. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman has a fine opinion of himself and substantiates a certain part of my prior address about egotism.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I did not seek a place on the District Committee; it was thrust upon me. If you ask the Ways and Means Committee that put me there, they will tell you that I never asked to be put on that committee. I would like to have been left off the committee. I have worked from 14 to 16 hours a day ever since I have been on the committee, and my colleagues know it. I have been working because the Constitution says that this Congress shall run the affairs of this District, and the District Committee is the committee of Congress that has within its jurisdiction the affairs of the District.

Mr. PALMISANO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not now. I have been trying to do my best under my oath. I am not ashamed of a single act I have performed since I have been in this Congress. I am not ashamed of one act, public, private, or official that I have performed since I have been a grown man, and I am over 50 years of age. I have filled two important positions in my State, and I have the confidence of the people not only of my district but of my State. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Wisconsin can not destroy it in a speech of pique that he may deliver on this floor.

I got the biggest vote that was given any man in Texas in the last two elections. [Applause.] And when the next election comes off I am going to get another one that is going to put me in the other end of the Capitol as sure as the gentleman sits there. And I am going to be watching affairs of this District, and if the gentleman from Wisconsin—God forbid—is ever able to pass a bill in the House that is against the Constitution I will help kill it when it comes to the Senate. [Applause.]

I am for law enforcement under my oath. My oath says that I will support the laws of this country without evasion, without fear, and I have been doing it. Have I not, I will ask my genial friend from Ohio, since I have been here?

Mr. MURPHY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I have been doing it to the best I know how, and it little behooves the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] because he is in favor of beer and light wines, to get up here in behalf of the bootleggers of the District.

I thank the gentleman from Maryland for giving me the five minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland controls the time.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. In the interest of harmony, Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask permission to make a few observations about aviation. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, while I do not believe in the bill and doubt its wisdom, while the bill is before the House it should be amended in such manner as to make clear the intent, and in pursuance of that I ask that the Clerk read for the information of the House the amendment that I will offer at the present time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will report the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the word "or" after the word "knowingly" and insert the word "and"; and after the word "knowingly" insert "with intent to injure another."

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman from New York is a member of the Judiciary Committee of the House and a very able one. This legislation should have been, of course, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary that is charged with the responsibility for such legislation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. DYER. I trust the gentleman will not insist upon his amendment, but will help to defeat the bill, so that it may be considered by the committee responsible for such legislation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I shall vote against the bill or to strike out the enacting clause or refer it back to the committee, but if it is to pass, it is our duty to put it in proper shape.

Mr. DYER. I have no criticism to make of the District of Columbia Committee, for I recognize it as an able and efficient committee, but our responsibilities are different, and I would ask the committee or its chairman to take such action as will place this legislation where it belongs, and to do what he can in the future so that such legislation may be considered by the Judiciary Committee. Also that he do another thing, and that is to abolish the subcommittee of his committee known as the judiciary committee, because it does create confusion, which ought not to be had in the orderly procedure of legislation in this House.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT].

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, the principles of this legislation are so important and far reaching that we should not consider the bill in a spirit of levity. I concede, as pointed out by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BOWLING], that the bill should be amended. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] has offered an amendment that will cure the defects referred to by the gentleman from Alabama. There is no reason why this bill should go back to the committee when it can be so readily and easily corrected in the House.

This is a new field of legislation. Several of the States, including my own, have passed laws making it a crime to tell a lie to the injury of another person. That was considered revolutionary, because all through the ages a person thus wronged had been left to his civil remedy of slander or libel. That was because the law had always been based upon a property basis. It has always been against the law to steal a man's dollar or to steal his horse. Why should it not be against the law to steal that which is of much greater value to him, his reputation. There is nothing as insidious, nothing as vicious and as devastating as slander. With the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], all that you will be enacting is that if a person gives false information willfully and knowingly, he has committed a crime, he has violated a law. Then that person lays himself open to deserved punishment. I would go further and make it unlawful, not only to give that false and malicious information to the police, but to anybody. If anyone knowingly, willfully, and falsely, with intention to do a person harm, tells another that such person has violated the law, he should be fined. It was Shakespeare who said:

> But he that filches from me my good name,
> Robs me of that which not enriches him,
> And makes me poor indeed.

I am not in favor of this bill simply because it would save a lot of work for a lot of policemen, but I am in favor of it on a much higher ground, one based not on efficiency but on justice. A person who knowingly, willfully, and falsely reports one to have committed a crime should be fined, and more heavily fined because he has done a greater wrong than if he had merely stolen property.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILBERT. Yes.

Mr. DYER. There is a law now punishing perjury in the District of Columbia, is there not?

Mr. GILBERT. But this is not perjury we are discussing. I call up the police and I report that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] has been guilty of some outrageous offense. The police investigate that. That is given publicity. It is found that the report is false. If I do that willfully and with intention to wrong the gentleman from Missouri, I should be severely penalized, because I have done him a much greater offense and from a more contemptible motive than if I had merely stolen his hat or overcoat.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WELSH].

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I want to speak of this bill from the standpoint of practical police work, in order to show what a dangerous piece of legislation this may be to the public welfare. Everyone who is conversant with modern police methods knows that a great deal of very practical and very valuable information comes to the police from people outside of the department. It comes sometimes in the way of anonymous communications and sometimes in the way of signed communications. If you require that every person who carries information to the police officials of a great city must follow that information up by prosecution and conviction, in order to save the informer from subsequent punishment by reason of legislation of this kind, you are going to shut off from the police authorities of the city and country a most valuable source of information. I can speak somewhat from experience along this line. I can see from my practical experience in the years past the danger of enacting a bill such as this is. I am also led by experience to make this observation: If you enact this bill into law and any person does maliciously and knowingly communicate false information to the police, the attitude of mind of that person reporting the information will be this: He will feel that he must follow it up by a conviction in order to be protected from the results of legislation of this kind and will resort to perjury and subornation of perjury to accomplish his purpose.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Oh, yes. In order to determine that the information is true, it must result in a conviction.

Mr. BLANTON. It will have to be determined that it is false as a definite fact.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. And the question of falsity will depend upon the subsequent conviction or acquittal of the person charged.

Mr. BLANTON. Until it was shown that it was deliberately and maliciously and falsely made, the person making it would not be amenable to the law.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. But who is to determine the falsity of the thing? I hope as a matter of public safety that we will not pass legislation of this kind. I would like to have you get the opinion of police officials and district attorneys of the country as to the full effect of legislation of this nature. I think you will find them almost unanimously opposed to this character of legislation.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GILBERT. If I should willfully, knowingly, and maliciously telephone to the police department that some reputable woman was guilty of some immoral offense, should I not be fined and punished?

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Yes; and under the law of slander, if oral, and under the law of libel, if the information were written, you would be liable in every jurisdiction in the United States.

Mr. GILBERT. She would be forced to take the initiative in such a step, and the law should protect her without putting that burden upon her.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to me for a question?

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. ROMJUE. I want to call your attention to line 5. The gentleman who has just finished arguing the question [Mr. GILBERT] called attention to the language "unlawfully or willfully." That does not apply to line 5. It applies to the preceding line; but when you get to line 4 it is a crime to make a false and fictitious report, and there is no connection between that phrase and "willfully and unlawfully."

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this debate has brought out a proposal for legislation, as expounded by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT], which is not in the bill. Of course, his argument was persuasive on the broad lines upon which it was based; but this bill comes to us from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and is designedly for the purpose of reducing the work of the police department of the District. I want to show the authority for it. The Senate committee in the last Congress made this argument in favor of the legislation:

> There have been no less than 18 such false reports to the police within a period of two months, and the proposed law is intended as a deterrent.

Mr. Speaker, if the police department of the District of Columbia, with a population of nearly half a million, has not had more than 18 such cases in a period of two months, there is no necessity for this legislation. [Applause.] Why should we pass a measure here in something of a hurry which is in derogation of the common law, without any precedent under common law, and which has no precedent under statutory law except in two or three States in the Union?

I want to emphasize what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WELSH] has said. If you go to the police department of any one of our big cities and if you pass a law like this, which will be a deterrent upon those who would report rumors of crimes, you will never receive information. The police departments get information from people who do not care to reveal their identity. What is the penalty in this bill? A fine of not less than $5 nor more than $100, or imprisonment not exceeding 30 days, or both such fine and imprisonment. Is that a deterrent on a person who has a real purpose to injure another? Nothing of the sort. But it would deter people who might have valuable information which would lead to the detection and prosecution of a crime.

I say this is legislation of an entirely new character in the administration of criminal law, and it should have more consideration than has been given to it, because it writes into the law an entirely new principle; it is not based upon perjury or a proceeding in court, but is based only upon verbal or written statements not even in the form or with the force of affidavits. Such procedure is foreign to our system of jurisprudence as a basis for a criminal prosecution.

Mr. BOWLING. Mr. Speaker, I think this debate has been informative, and without desiring to repeat anything that has been said I wish to call the attention of the House to what would arise if this bill is passed as it is written. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROMJUE] has pointed out that no defense is possible under this bill if a man makes a false or fictitious information without regard to his purpose or intent or means of knowledge whatever.

Let us suppose that false or fictitious information had gone to the police force, and an arrest made when the information is afterwards found to be false. Would it be necessary to make a prima facie case against the defendant who gave that information? Nothing in the world, except to prove that he had given such information and then to have ascertained that it was false. That is all. Your case is made. What would be his defense? Nothing. As this bill is written he would have no defense. The ground is cut out from under his feet. As the phraseology now stands he could not even offer testimony tending to show that he was acting in good faith.

But let us assume that the judge, through his sense of kindness and justice, would permit him to offer a defense. Where would your burden of proof be? It would be on the man to prove he was acting in good faith. This bill would open the doors to the police force to indulge in a vast amount of petty persecution if so minded. This bill ought to be amended. If passed at all, it ought to be practically rewritten.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Do you think it ought to be passed?

Mr. BOWLING. No; I do not. It certainly should be recast in language that is accurate and which expresses the purpose and intent of the legislative body.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Would it not be better to just vote it down and be through with it?

Mr. BOWLING. Well, I would second a motion to that end.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment which I had read for the information of the House. I have modified it slightly. I would like to have it read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 1, line 4, strike out the words "or knowingly" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and maliciously, with intent to injure another."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Maryland yield to me to offer another perfecting amendment?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I yield to the genteman if I have that power.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. Was not the previous question ordered?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York was adopted, was it not?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. At the end of line 4, after the word "or," insert the following:

> or knowingly and maliciously and with intent to injure another.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Line 4——

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the House has just struck out the word "knowingly," and the gentleman by his amendment seeks to restore that word.

Mr. BLANTON. I make it maliciously and knowingly. Mr. Speaker, I ask to modify my amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment; that after the word "or" and before the word "to," in line 4, insert the following:

or willfully, maliciously, and with intent to injure another.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 1, line 4, after the word "or" and before the word "to," at the end of the line, insert the words "willfully, maliciously, and with intent to injure another."

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman from Maryland yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that this is a penal statute of serious moment, and that we are asked here, in this desultory way, to amend it without due and proper consideration. It is impossible to consider an amendment to a criminal statute unless you can get around a table and talk backward and forward until the whole matter is thoroughly considered and threshed out. You can not do it in this form.

I did not rise for this purpose, but I really think we had better let this legislation go by the board.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 3, noes 41.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the District of Columbia Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a motion, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLANTON moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. No. I am in its present form, unless it is properly amended, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It is too late to amend the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is a member of the committee, and the Chair will recognize him.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 2, noes 75.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall not inflict a roll call on the House, because the House seems to be determined to kill the bill, and not being properly amended, I think it should be killed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER) there were—ayes 5, noes 118.

So the bill was rejected.

On motion of Mr. LAGUARDIA, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was rejected was laid on the table.

THE PROPER REFERENCE OF BILLS

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make an observation to the House. In view of the question raised as to the reference of this bill and the one preceding it, the question being that both should have gone to the Committee on the Judiciary and not to the Committee on the District of Columbia, the Chair will state that when these bills were brought before him he thought the reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia proper under the rules of the House.

Under the rule, matters relating to the District of Columbia are referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and among the list of bills that have been so referred in the past the Chair will read a few:

Bills proposing legislation as to the general municipal affairs of the District, relating to health, sanitary and quarantine regulations, holidays, protection of fish and game, regulation of sale of intoxicating liquors, adulteration of food, drugs, etc.; taxes and tax sales, insurance, bills for preserving public order at times of inauguration, the Government Hospital for the Insane, harbor regulations and the bridge over the Eastern Branch, executors, administrators, wills and divorce, police and juvenile courts, and justices of the peace—

And so forth.

All these bills either change existing law or enact new law, but they apply solely to the affairs of the District of Columbia. If, as has been claimed to-day, any bill which changes existing law or enacts new law affecting only the District were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, plainly the Committee on the Judiciary would become the Committee on the District of Columbia, because most of the jurisdiction of the Committee on the District of Columbia relates to changes of law or enactment of new laws.

The Chair thinks the reference was proper, that it complies with the rules of the House and with all the precedents the Chair knows on the subject.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, may I make a statement?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The reason that prompted me in making the observation was the authority contained in section 4068 of the fourth volume of Hinds' Precedents, which sets out several bills relating to the police court of the District of Columbia, and my main objection and the objection of the committee was that this affected existing penal law, and clearly all penal law is under the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. But the Committee on the District of Columbia has jurisdiction, for instance, of the laws regulating the sale of intoxicating liquor in the District of Columbia. Surely the gentleman would not contend under the precedents that that matter should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and yet according to the gentleman's statement it would have to be so referred. The Chair thinks the proper rule is that, notwithstanding the fact a bill changes existing law or enacts new law, if it relates only to the District of Columbia, it should properly go to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The Chair could conceive of some cases, perhaps, where the matter in fact only related to the District of Columbia but involved changes of basic law which should go to the Judiciary Committee.

So the Chair will continue, unless otherwise ordered by the House, to refer bills like the ones in question to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DETENTION OF FUGITIVES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 8915) to provide for the detention of fugitives apprehended in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any person shall be found within the District of Columbia charged with any offense committed in any State, Territory, or other possession of the United States, and liable by the Constitution and laws of the United States to be delivered over upon the demand of the governor of such State, Territory, or possession, any judge of the police court of the District of Columbia may, upon complaint on oath or affirmation of any credible witness, setting forth the offense, that such person is a fugitive from justice, and such other matters as are necessary to bring the case within the provisions of law, issue a warrant to bring the person so charged before the police court to answer such complaint.

SEC. 2. If, upon the examination of the person charged, it shall appear to the judge of the police court that there is reasonable cause to believe that the complaint is true, and that such person may be lawfully demanded of the chief justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, he shall, if not charged with murder in the first degree, be required to give bond or other obligation, with sufficient sureties, in a reasonable sum, to appear before said judge of the police court at a future date, allowing 30 days to obtain a requisition from the governor of the State, Territory, or possession of the United States from which said person is a fugitive, he to abide the order of such judge of the police court in the premises.

SEC. 3. If such person shall not give bond or other obligation, as herein provided, or if he shall be charged with the crime of murder in the first degree, he shall be committed to the District jail, and there detained until a day fixed by the court, in like manner as if the offense charged had been committed within the District of Columbia; and if the person so giving bond or other obligation shall fail to appear according to the condition of his bond or obligation, he shall be defaulted, and the bond or other obligation entered into by him shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. 4. If the person so giving bond or other obligation, or committed, shall appear before the judge of the police court upon the day ordered, he shall be discharged, unless he shall be demanded by some person authorized by the warrant of the governor to receive him, or unless the judge of the police court shall see cause to commit him for a further time, or to require him to give bond or other obligation for his appearance at some other day, and if, when ordered, he shall not give bond or other obligation he shall be committed and detained as before: Provided, That whether the person so charged shall give bond or other obligation, be committed or discharged, his delivery to any person authorized by the warrant of the governor shall be a discharge of his bond or obligation, if any.

SEC. 5. The major and superintendent of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia shall give notice to the police official or sheriff of the city or county from which such person is a fugitive that the person is so held in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 6. A person committed as herein provided shall not be detained in jail longer than to allow a reasonable time to the person receiving the notice herein required to apply for and obtain a proper requisition for such person according to the circumstances of the case and the distance of the place where the offense is alleged to have been committed.

SEC. 7. Nothing herein contained shall prevent the voluntary return, in the custody of a proper official, of a person to the jurisdiction of the State, Territory, or other possession of the United States from which he is a fugitive. And nothing herein contained shall prevent a judge of the police court of the District of Columbia, in his discretion, accepting bond or other obligation for the appearance of a person before the proper official in the State, Territory, or possession of the United States from which he is a fugitive.

SEC. 8. Nothing herein contained shall repeal, modify, or in any way affect existing law concerning the procedure for the return of any person apprehended in the District of Columbia to a Federal district to answer a Federal charge, or repeal, modify, or affect existing law or treaty concerning the return to a foreign country of a person apprehended in the District of Columbia as a fugitive from justice from a foreign country.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ZIHLMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, was laid on the table.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLEOD] may extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the report accompanying this bill showing the purposes of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I hereby insert the following report of the Committee on the District of Columbia reporting the bill H. R. 8915:

[To accompany H. R. 8915]

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8915) to provide for the detention of fugitives apprehended in the District of Columbia, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

There is appended and made a part of this report the report of this committee in the Sixty-ninth Congress, giving full explanation of the reasons for and purpose of the proposed legislation.

[H. Rept. No. 1977, 69th Cong., 2d sess.]

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15208) to provide for the detention of fugitives apprehended in the District of Columbia, having considered the same, report it to the House of Representatives with the recommendation that the same do pass.

This bill was introduced as the result of the survey being made by the special committee, of which Mr. GIBSON is chairman, and to remedy the lack of proper legislation authorizing the authorities in the District to detain fugitives who have escaped from their States and sought refuge here from apprehension for crime committed in their jurisdiction.

At the present time persons who have committed crimes in their States may come to the District of Columbia, and there is no law which will enable authorities here to hold them pending the issuance of extradition papers. If arrested upon the request of the authorities of the State where the crime is committed, the courts here have decided in habeas corpus proceedings that such fugitives can not be held for want of authority of law here. This bill was prepared at the request of the Gibson committee by the office of the corporation counsel of the District, which earnestly requested and urged its enactment into law.

The rights of the prisoners are amply protected by the provisions of the bill.

THE CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY OF AMERICA

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 2310) supplementary to, and amendatory of, the incorporation of the Catholic University of America, organized under and by virtue of a certificate of incorporation pursuant to class 1, chapter 18, of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporation of the Catholic University of America under chapter 18, Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia, be, and the same is hereby, approved and confirmed.

SEC. 2. That in addition to the rights, duties, and obligations enjoyed and imposed by chapter 18 of the Revised Statutes of the District of Columbia the said university may enter into affiliated agreements with any institutions of learning within or outside of the District of Columbia, for the purpose of giving to students of such institutions the educational facilities of said university, upon such terms as are mutually agreed upon by the said university and the affiliated institutions.

SEC. 3. That said university shall have, and is hereby given, the power to increase the number of its trustees from time to time by a two-thirds vote of the whole number of the trustees at the time such vote is taken to a number not exceeding 50.

In case of the increase of the number of trustees a certificate stating the number of the board and the time when it shall go into effect, and that the action so taken was by a two-thirds vote as required by this act, shall be filed with the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 4. The said board of trustees shall have, and are hereby given, full power and authority, by a vote of two-thirds of its members, to adopt and change by-laws for the conduct of the business and educational work of said university, to fix the time of meetings, regular and special, and the form of notice to be given; they may appoint an executive committee composed of trustees, designate the number and chairman thereof, with such powers and authority as are usually exercised by an executive committee, and which shall be conferred by the board subject always to the control of the board of trustees; they may create and establish schools and departments of learning to be connected with and become a part of said university, and establish such scholastic boards and officers as may be required for academic operation and direction in education; they may receive, invest, and administer endowments and gifts of money and property absolute or subject to payments by way of annuities during the life of the donor, for the maintenance of educational work by said university and by any department or chair thereof, now established or which may hereafter be created or established by said university, and they shall have all of the powers and authority heretofore granted to or invested in the trustees of said university by chapter 18 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia.

SEC. 5. That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to prevent Congress from altering, amending, or repealing the same.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ZIHLMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLEOD] may extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the report on this bill for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I hereby insert the following report of the Committee on the District of Columbia, reporting the bill S. 2310:

[To accompany S. 2310]

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 2310) supplementary to, and amendatory of, the incorporation of the Catholic University of America, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The purposes of this bill are four:

1. To authorize the Catholic University of America, an institution of learning in the District of Columbia, to enter into affiliated agreements with any institutions of learning within or outside of the District of Columbia for the purpose of giving to students of such institutions the educational facilities of said university, upon such terms as are mutually agreed upon by the institutions concerned.

2. To grant power to the above-mentioned Catholic University to increase the number of its trustees in a certain prescribed manner.

3. To grant power to adopt and change by-laws for the conduct of business and educational work of said university.

4. To clarify certain language of the act of incorporation with respect to the right to administer the property of said university.

The Catholic University of America was incorporated not under the District Code, which was enacted in 1901, but was incorporated April 19, 1887, under chapter 18 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia.

Section 676 of said chapter 18 provides that "Congress may, at any time, alter, amend, or repeal this chapter, saving and preserving all rights which may become vested under the same, and may amend or repeal any incorporation formed or created under this chapter"; * * *

The power to increase, as above stated, its trustees, has also been conferred upon the same institution. Section 1 of said act of March 3, 1905, and the power to change its by-laws for the conduct of the business and educational work of the university, to fix time of meetings, regular and special, is also given to the same institution by act of Congress of March 18, 1898 (30 Stats. 328).

The power to establish such scholastic boards and officers as may be required for academic operation and direction in education, and to "receive, invest, and administer endowments and gifts of money and property absolute or subject to payments by way of annuities during the life of the donor," is asked for by the Catholic University in order to clear uncertainties caused by section 523, Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia, which provides that "such corporation shall hold the property of the institution solely for the purposes of education, and not for the benefit of themselves or of any contributor to the endowment thereof."

The great growth and development of the Catholic University and its high standing among the educational institutions of the country require the changes asked for in the conduct of its work and business incident to its development as an institution of learning, and there is no way to obtain these changes except by direct application to Congress required by the sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia above referred to.

CORPORATION COUNSEL FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9782) to amend the Code of Law for the District of Columbia so as to empower the corporation counsel for the District of Columbia and his assistants to administer oaths.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Code of Law for the District of Columbia be, and the same hereby is, amended so as to add a new section thereto, to be known as section 932 (a) and to read as follows:

"SEC. 932 (a) The corporation counsel for the District of Columbia and his assistants are empowered to administer oaths or affirmations to witnesses in criminal cases and in any and all matters and things connected with the performance of their official duties; and if any person to whom such oath or affirmation shall be administered shall willfully and falsely swear or affirm touching any matter or thing material to the point in question whereto he shall be examined he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and upon conviction thereof shall be sentenced to suffer imprisonment at hard labor for the first offense for not less than 2 nor more than 10 years, and for the second offense for not less than 5 nor more than 15 years."

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT].

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, this bill works for efficiency in the office of the corporation counsel, but in my opinion it ought not to pass. In this country we recognize the wisdom of having separate functions of Government. There are also separate functions for the administration of justice. To my mind it is not proper for either side to have the power to swear witnesses. That power is quasi judicial and should be in the hands of a disinterested officer, either the clerk or the judge or some disinterested person to administer oaths. I can see where it might be abused in the sweating process. The corporation counsel under this bill could sit not only as a lawyer but as a quasi judge, swear witnesses, and intimidate the witness through the oath. My remarks need not be extended in opposition to the bill, for I have explained the objections which go to the fundamentals of justice rather than the details.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the district attorney has that authority now under the code, and we want to extend it to the corporation counsel.

Mr. GILBERT. It is wrong for the district attorney's office to have that power. We all understand that the prosecuting attorney is supposed to take care of the defendant as well as the State, but in my experience they get interested in the prosecution, wrought up over it, and become almost as partisan as the attorney for the defense.

It is unwise to bestow such power on the corporation counsel merely because it promotes efficiency.

Mr. McLEOD. The gentleman will recognize that the object is to save time. The fact was brought out that on a Monday morning there are from 100 to 400 informations pending, and for that reason the small staff in the clerk's office are not competent to take care of it.

Mr. GILBERT. I said at the outset that the bill worked for efficiency, but at the sacrifice of fundamental justice that should not be sacrificed.

Mr. McLEOD. We have an amendment that perhaps will obviate the gentleman's objection.

Mr. GILBERT. I can see how a lawyer unduly enthusiastic in the prosecution might browbeat the witness and I think it is fundamentally wrong for either side to be able to swear their own witnesses.

Mr. McLEOD. Would the gentleman have any objection to this amendment: Page 2, line 3, insert "wherever the record of such oath or affirmation is made"?

Mr. GILBERT. That would not cure my objection.

Mr. STOBBS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. Yes.

Mr. STOBBS. Why should the corporation counsel who is, after all, a partisan and a representative of one side of the story—why should he have the power to act in a quasi-judicial capacity and examine under oath witnesses about any crime that comes before the court?

Mr. McLEOD. There is no discrimination.

Mr. STOBBS. You are making the corporation counsel perform the duties of the clerk of a court. The clerk of the court has no interest—he is acting in a quasi-judicial capacity. Here you have a man bound to be counsel on one side or the other representing the District of Columbia, and just as the gentleman from Kentucky has said, taking the testimony of witnesses under oath. It seems to me it is absolutely unfair to the defendant. I would like to hear what the gentleman has to say as to the reason other than that of saving time.

Mr. McLEOD. The opinion came from Mr. Bride, who claimed that the expense to the District of Columbia in the loss of time was great, and that was the main reason for the bill.

Mr. STOBBS. I want to point out that we are dealing with a principle. Before you issue a warrant or information there must be a quasi-judicial officer pass on the question. You can not settle the question of saving time in a bill by violating a fundamental principle.

Mr. McLEOD. That was the reason the Code of Law was changed in order to take care of the district attorney's office.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. If the gentleman from Michigan will permit, I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STOBBS] that for more than 20 years that power has been vested in the district attorney and his assistants. The corporation counsel and his assistants prosecute cases in the minor courts, and it is sought by this bill to extend the same privilege or right or power to the corporation counsel and his assistants in order to expedite the work of the police court and the other minor courts of the District.

Mr. STOBBS. Does not the gentleman realize that when you make a man possibly liable for perjury on some statement he may make to the man who is going to prosecute the case in court, that you are taking away the safeguards with which a defendant ought to be surrounded? The question of whether or not a man is making a wrong oath in those circumstances ought to be confined in a criminal case to the judge himself.

Mr. McLEOD. We intended to confine this only to cases where a record of such oath was made.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the corporation counsel for the District of Columbia, Mr. Bride, opposes the adoption of the proposed amendment. He says:

> With no stenographic service available for the purpose of these hearings, and because it would not be feasible to reduce to writing the testimony given at such preliminary hearings, I am of the opinion that the adoption of the suggested amendment would defeat the particular object of the bill.

Of course, that statement everyone can see is true, but I am curious to know how it is that the District of Columbia must have such extraordinary and unusual legislation for the administration of justice. The authorities of the District send recommendations to the District Committee for all of these unusual things, and I am not finding any fault with the committee; but is there any other jurisdiction in the land where district attorneys who are prosecutors and corporation counsel who are prosecutors take the affidavits of witnesses or of informants, or of applicants for warrants? Does anyone know of the existence of any such practice elsewhere?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. McLEOD. I yield.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Does the gentleman not think it would be a pretty good thing for the rest of the country to get some special legislation for its prosecuting officers, in order that we may stop some of these criminal activities that are going on? There are altogether too many safeguards surrounding the criminal and too little power in the States.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But we have always differentiated as between the clerks of courts and judges of courts and the attorneys who practice before the courts.

Mr. McLEOD. The only reason and the best reason the subcommittee had in making the original report to the full committee was that we were convinced at the time that this is a time saver and a possible money saver, because the same rights are given to the district attorney's office. If it accomplishes that result that was sufficient.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON].

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I ask the chairman of the committee whether or not in the District of Columbia there is any law which will permit John Doe proceedings to be had in the investigation of any kind of criminal cases?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia is not an attorney, and is not familiar with all of the Code of the District of Columbia. I think there is such a thing, but I could not say positively.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. In most States a prosecuting attorney may bring a proceeding before a justice of the peace or other inferior judicial officer, or the county judge, for the purpose of investigating a crime or a supposed crime. In those proceedings the witnesses are put under oath, and examination is had very much after the manner that one proceeds before a grand jury. This bill seems to contemplate that a hearing may be had by the corporation counsel himself sitting in the capacity of a justice of the peace or a county judge in a quasi-judicial capacity.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Or as an examining magistrate.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes; in the capacity of examining magistrate and prosecutor at the same time. It seems to me that a procedure of that kind is wholly unwise. I can see how a law which will permit John Doe proceedings is a good thing because this permits the investigation of alleged crimes in advance of an information being filed, and often results in no information being issued in cases where otherwise an information might be sworn to and filed and an injustice done to a person suspected of some offense. It seems to me that to give this quasi-judicial power to a prosecuting officer is contrary to proper judicial proceedings. A prosecutor should be armed with some method of getting at the facts when crime is charged, but such investigation, when sworn testimony is sought, should be before some competent and impartial official charged with the functions of a committing magistrate.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STOBBS].

Mr. STOBBS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this bill to my mind is very bad legislation. If I am suspected of the commission of a crime at the present time, no one has any right to arrest me unless he can obtain a warrant; and to get that warrant he must go to the clerk of the court or to the judge, neither of whom has any interest in the particular case. In other words, they act in a judicial or a quasi-judicial capacity.

Now, if this bill is passed, it means that if anybody wants to arrest me or get a warrant against me for the commission of a crime, instead of going to court or to the clerk of the court he can go to the corporation counsel, who is going to be the prosecuting attorney to prosecute me in court, who is in the anomalous position of first issuing a warrant for my arrest and then trying me.

The only argument that the committee has to make in behalf of this proposed fundamental change in the principles of our law, taking away that safeguard which is fundamental and which has stood for generations, is simply the saving of time. It is about time, in my judgment, that we did something on the basis of the fundamental principles of government rather than simply to listen to a proposition like this, which is offered to us as a time-saving device.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The judges have recommended this.

Mr. STOBBS. I do not care whether the judges have recommended it or not. It is we who are legislating here—ourselves—and not the courts of the District of Columbia. There is not a legislative body in any State of the country that would let this proposition go into effect. I myself have been a prosecuting attorney, and I think it would have been preposterous for me, acting as such, to issue a warrant when later I was to be the prosecuting officer who would conduct the case.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have five minutes for the purpose of offering amendment.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. BLANTON. The present corporation counsel for this District, Judge Bride, is a splendid lawyer and a fine gentleman. The District ought to be proud of having in its service a man of his high character at the head of that department. But he has a bunch of assistants who ought not to have this power. As I heard a friend say a moment ago, they ought to be preparing their cases instead of swearing witnesses to this or that allegation. There are plenty of notaries scattered all around the District Building. There are plenty of authorities in the District Building who are authorized to swear witnesses. They are accessible at all times. They can be found. They can be used.

I do not think there is any necessity whatever for this legislation. It is dangerous. I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STOBBS]. What is the use of passing it at present? I think the enacting clause ought to be stricken out. That would end it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on my motion to strike out the enacting clause.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Texas to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 5.

So the motion to strike out the enacting clause was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BLANTON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the enacting clause was stricken out was laid on the table.

PERMIT FOR OPENING A GRAVE

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 7722, and consider the same in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to call up House bill 7722, and consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. What is the calendar number?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Private Calendar No. 387.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7722) authorizing the health officer of the District of Columbia to issue a permit for the opening of the grave containing the remains of the late Nellie Richards

Be it enacted, etc., That the health officer of the District of Columbia be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a permit for the opening of the grave of the late Nellie Richards, who was interred in the Congressional Cemetery on October 18, 1897, so that the late Gertrude Richards, a sister of the aforesaid Nellie Richards, may be interred in the same grave.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee to explain why we must pass this legislation here?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Under the District Code of Law the health officer has the power to issue permits for the opening of graves of deceased persons except where such persons died from a contagious disease. The health officer informs me he has no power to permit the opening of a grave in the case of death by contagious disease. This body was interred some 30 years ago, but the records of the health department show that this lady was suffering from diphtheria, a contagious disease, and it is necessary to pass a law for the opening of the grave.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I hereby insert the following report of the Committee on the District of Columbia, reporting the bill H. R. 7722:

[To accompany H. R. 7722]

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7722) to authorize the health officer of the District of Columbia to issue a permit for the opening of the grave containing the remains of the late Nellie Richards, having considered the same, report it back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The purpose of the bill is to permit the interment of the remains of the late Gertrude Richards in the grave of the late Nellie Richards in Congressional Cemetery.

The Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia recommend favorable action on the bill, and state that in the opinion of the health officer the interment can be made with absolute safety and without nuisance.

The Code of the District of Columbia, section 675, provides:

"No dead body of any human being or any part of such body shall in said District be removed from place to place, interred, disinterred, or in any manner disposed of without a permit for such removal, interment, disinterment, or disposal granted by the health officer of said District, nor otherwise than in accordance with the terms of said permit; permits for the removal, interment, or disposal to be issued upon the presentation of a proper death certificate, signed by a physician registered at the health department of said District, who has attended the deceased during his or her last illness, or by the coroner of said District or his deputy, or by the proper municipal, county, or State authorities at the place where the death occurred." * * *

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A WOMAN'S BUREAU IN THE METROPOLITAN POLICE DEPARTMENT

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill H. R 6664, and consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, may we have the bill reported?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6664) to establish a woman's bureau in the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall continue to be a women's bureau in the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia, to consist of one director with the rank of assistant superintendent, who shall be directly responsible to the major and superintendent of police; one assistant director with the rank of captain; one case supervisor; three patrol supervisors; and 61 privates, 6 of whom shall be between the ages of 35 and 45. All officers and members of the women's bureau shall be women, but the major and superintendent of police may, upon the request of the director, detail for service in the women's bureau such number of men from the officers or members of the Metropolitan police force as the major and superintendent of police may deem advisable, and while so detailed such officers or members shall be subject to the direction and control of the director.

SEC. 2. (a) The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall appoint to office and promote all officers and members of the woman's bureau. All officers and members of the woman's bureau, except the director and the assistant director, shall be appointed and promoted in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883, as amended, and the rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof, in the same manner as members of the classified civil service of the United States, except that (1) minimum preliminary requirements for appointment shall be graduation from a standard high school or the completion of at least 14 college entrance units of study, and either not less than two years' responsible experience in systematic social service or educational work or not less than two years' responsible commercial experience involving public contact and tending to qualify the applicant to perform the duties of the position, and (2) promotion shall not be made except upon report of the director that conduct, intelligent attention to duty, and improvement through training in special courses justify such promotion.

(b) The director shall be a trained social worker, as evidenced by a certificate of graduation from a recognized school of social work, or the equivalent of such certificate from a college of the first class, and at least two years' executive responsibility in work with individual delinquents.

(c) Except as otherwise provided in this act, the officers and members of the woman's bureau shall be subject to the same rules and regulations and to the same discipline as other officers and members of the Metropolitan police force in so far as such rules, regulations, and discipline are consistent with the special class of work performed by them and shall be possessed of all the rights, powers, benefits, privileges, and immunities now possessed or which may hereafter be possessed by other officers and members of the Metropolitan police force, it being the intent of this act that the officers and members of the woman's bureau and other officers and members of the Metropolitan police force shall, so far as practicable, and according to the period of service and classification, be upon the same footing.

SEC. 3. The annual salaries of the officers and members of the woman's bureau shall be as follows: The director, the assistant director, and the private shall receive the same salaries as other officers and privates of the Metropolitan police force with the same grade and rank; the case supervisor and the patrol supervisors shall receive salaries at the rate of $2,700 per annum.

SEC. 4. The functions of the woman's bureau shall be to do preventive-protective work and to exercise the functions of the police in the cases of women and children, whether offenders or victims of offenses, subject to the laws and regulations of the District of Columbia. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to limit the authority of any officer or member of the Metropolitan police force, not connected with the woman's bureau, except with respect to women and children who are in the custody of the police.

SEC. 5. The women who are officers and members of the Metropolitan police force at the time of the passage of this act shall be continued in their respective grades as officers and members of the woman's bureau provided for in this act, except that (1) the lieutenant and sergeant in office at the time of the passage of this act shall, as director and assistant director, respectively, of the woman's bureau, hold the rank and receive the pay of an assistant superintendent and a captain, respectively, of the Metropolitan police force, and (2) the privates serving at the time of the passage of this act in the capacity of case supervisor and control supervisor, respectively, shall no longer be known as privates but shall be continued as case supervisor and patrol supervisor, respectively, as herein provided.

SEC. 6. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to appoint for duty in the woman's bureau, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883, as amended, and the rules and regulations made in pursuance theerof, in the same manner as members of the classified civil service of the United States, one office secretary, six stenographers, three typists, and such other assistants as may be provided for by the Congress from time to time. The compensation of such employees shall be fixed in accordance with the classification act of 1923.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "to consist" and insert "in charge."

In the same line strike out the words "with the rank of assistant superintendent."

In line 7 strike out the words "with the rank of captain."

In line 6, after the word "shall," strike out the words "be as follows: The director, the assistant director, and the privates shall."

In line 9 strike out the semicolon after the word "rank" and the remainder of line 9 and all of lines 10 and 11.

Strike out all of section 4, beginning in line 12 and ending in line 20, and insert:

"The purpose and functions of the woman's bureau shall be in accordance with the manual of the Metropolitan police department as adopted by the commissioners' order of October 5, 1923, effective December 1, 1923, with amendments to September 15, 1926."

On page 5, line 5, after the word "act," strike out the comma, the remainder of line 5, and all of lines 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14.

In line 22, after the word "States," strike out the comma, the remainder of line 22, and all of line 23 and insert "such clerical force."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask recognition on the committee amendments. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been before the District Committee, off and on, ever since I have been a member of it. It is merely to make lawful that which already exists by the will of the commissioners and which has existed for years. In addition it gives the Appropriations Committee the power, whenever they think it necessary, to add additional officers. It makes it lawful for Mr. MADDEN'S committee to provide for additional officers whenever a proper showing is made before the Appropriations Committee. There is the bill.

I want to say this: The bill is approved by the Parent-Teachers' Associations in the District of Columbia, it is approved by the Daughters of the American Revolution, it is approved by the Federated Clubs of the District of Columbia, it is approved by practically all of the citizens' associations of the District of Columbia, it is approved by the District Commissioners, and it is approved by various welfare committees.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MAPES. Does the gentleman from Texas approve of it?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. However, I preferred it without any amendments. I will say this to my friend: There were those on the committee, including the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina and the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, who thought it should be materially amended, and the committee agreed to all of their amendments.

Mr. HAMMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. HAMMER. I agreed with the express understanding that it did not in any way change the meaning of the law from the bill as reported at the last session of Congress, and I was assured it did not. I knew nothing whatever about what was in the police manual.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman misunderstood me. I was telling my friend from Michigan that the gentleman from North Carolina insisted on this bill being amended and that we did amend it, both at his suggestion and at the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and the committee then adopted other perfecting amendments offered by Mr. GIBSON.

Mr. HAMMER. It was, as I thought, to be exactly like the bill that was reported favorably last year; and then there was the suggestion that we make one other modification, and that was that the rules of the police manual be observed.

Mr. BLANTON. I wish the gentleman would get his own time.

Mr. HAMMER. I do not want to be misquoted; that is all; and I do not think the gentleman intended to do that.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MAPES. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas another question.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall be glad to answer it.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MAPES. I would like to get the gentleman's construction of section 5 as it is proposed to be amended, which reads this way:

> The women who are officers and members of the Metropolitan police force at the time of the passage of this act shall be continued in their respective grades as officers and members of the woman's bureau provided for in this act.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas if it is his construction of this language that these women are placed in their positions by statutory law for all time, regardless of subsequent behavior?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no; they are subject absolutely to the rules of the manual of the police department and subject to all the regulations applicable to the police bureau, as the gentleman will see from the language of the bill.

Mr. MAPES. Let me ask the gentleman——

Mr. BLANTON. I want first to complete my answer to your question. I want to say with respect to keeping these women in their present positions, subject, of course, to the regulations, your former Commissioner Rudolph told me in his own office that the superintendent of this bureau, Mrs. Mina Van Winkle, had spent $66,000 out of her own money in cleaning up and perfecting the bureau.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Where did she get it?

Mr. BLANTON. She inherited it. It was money out of her own fortune. She is that kind of woman. She was so interested in this work that she spent this amount of her own money, and I have been through her bureau from top to bottom, and it is as clean as it can be all the way through.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to add a few words to what the gentleman from Texas has said. This bill has been before the committee ever since I have been a member, and it has been a thorn in the flesh of every member of the committee. I acknowledge that I have opposed it in season and out. I have fought it to the best of my ability, and for at least three or four sessions have prevented the passage of the bill as introduced in the committee.

Last year the committee amended the bill materially, so that it merely legalized the present status of the policewomen's bureau, which is a recognition of a very efficient arm of the police service. This was reported as being perfectly satisfactory, and when the bill was reintroduced this year it was supposed that that bill as amended would be the bill introduced. Instead of that the old bill became before the committee again with all of its injustices and inequalities and dangers, and the committee sat down and amended the bill and struck out all of those provisions.

It was thought that some of us took a little advantage of our colleagues, and so at a subsequent meeting of the committee this action was reconsidered and the bill again came up for consideration.

Then the suggestion was made that an amendment striking out section 4 be adopted and that we insert four or five lines setting forth that the functions of the woman's bureau should be in accordance with the police manual. Well, at that time it seemed a reasonable proposition, and as no police manual was handy it was accepted by the opponents of the bill—I will call them opponents of the bill—but upon investigation later on, we found that the police manual contained all of the objectionable features that were in the previous bill.

So I shall move, in addition to the committee amendments, that on page 4, lines 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25 be stricken out and that section 4 be reinserted in the bill. In this way it will restore to the bill——

Mr. HAMMER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. HAMMER. I understand that section 4 of the bill is identical with section 4 of the bill reported in the last session of Congress.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Then all we would need to do would be to vote down the committee amendment?

Mr. UNDERHILL. No; let us accept all the committee amendments, but in the meantime, in accepting the committee amendments, unless I can find some parliamentary procedure——

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The gentleman is speaking with reference to section 4 of the bill?

Mr. UNDERHILL. My reference is to all the committee amendments.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will not the committee amendment striking out section 4 be submitted separately?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will ask that that be considered separately and we will strike out lines 21 to 25.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. If I understand the gentleman, his contention is that when the amendment is submitted to carry out his view, the House should vote down the committee amendment striking out section 4 which would leave it as it was in the original bill?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman tell us what kind of police work these women perform?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes; the policewomen are doing a very effective work and they have my hearty commendation.

Mr. GALLIVAN. What is the effective work they are doing?

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Yes; tell us about that. You are providing here for 60 policewomen.

Mr. UNDERHILL. No; not more than 60. This was one of the amendments suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, and it leaves this entirely in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations of this House.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Tell us what police work they are doing?

Mr. UNDERHILL. The women have charge of what we might call the welfare work—if you know what that is—of the District of Columbia, and it is quite necessary with the cosmopolitan population here, and particularly with the colored population, that we should have a corps of welfare workers vested with certain authority which will really give them a standing with a certain proportion of the community.

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. What do they do?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Are there any colored policewomen here?

Mr. UNDERHILL. No.

Mr. GALLIVAN. But they work among the colored population.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. The language on page 3, paragraph (c) of the original bill or paragraph (b) as the committee proposes to amend it, provides that—the officers and members of the woman's bureau shall be subject to the rules, regulations, and discipline prescribed in the manual of the Metropolitan police department as adopted by the commissioners' order of October 5, 1923, effective December 1, 1923, with amendments to September 15, 1926.

It seems to me that the language of the committee amendment presupposes at least that the manual of the department now is perfect and will never need revision or perfecting in the future; is that the gentleman's construction of this language?

Mr. UNDERHILL. No; and there might be some objection to writing any portion of the manual into substantive law. But as a matter of fact it simply places the women on the same basis as the men.

Mr. MAPES. Is that true? It says the officers shall be subject to the rules and regulations and discipline described in this manual of this date. It does not seem to me that there is a particle of exception to that, and that it subjects the woman's bureau at least to the regulations of this manual as already provided.

Mr. UNDERHILL. That is not the language of the speaker. The language which the gentleman addressing the House would be the language that was striken out in lines 16, 17, and 18, rather than those inserted in lines 19, 20, and 21—but that is a matter of little moment.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Does this bill meet with the approbation of the superintendent of police?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes; and the police commissioner.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Did he ask for it or merely approve it?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I think he appeared in behalf of the legislation before the subcommittee.

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. How many women police officers are there in the District?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. In the neighborhood of 25.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I think there are 30 or 32.

Now, in conclusion, let me say that this bill has plagued us in the past and unless we pass it it will continue to plague us in the future. I do not know what will happen to it in another body, but at least the House can go on record this afternoon as in favor of this bill, drawn in this way and manner, and not in favor of a bill which gives extraordiary powers and separate jurisdiction to women engaged largely in the same endeavor as men.

I am absolutely in favor of and would like to see one policewoman in every precinct station in the District of Columbia. I think that is a wise provision, but when you give extraordinary powers to any one member of that force you immediately create dissension and trouble in the whole department. If we can pass this bill we will be relieved of that trouble.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Are these policewomen now recognized by law?

Mr. UNDERHILL. No; they could be fired to-morrow by the chief of police if he saw fit.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I desire to crave your indulgence for a few moments. I do so for the reason that I want to read an address of about two pages, and then ask you to permit me to incorporate in my remarks excerpts from the articles to which they refer, by Garet Garrett and James M. Thomson, in the Saturday Evening Post, whose enormous circulation makes it speak to an audience in homes, in towns, villages, hamlets, crossroads, and in cities big and little over the continent.

I am mindful of the fact that I might have waited until the end of the consideration of these bills and asked for the privilege of addressing the House for 15 or 20 minutes and of extending my remarks; but it has been deemed by gentlemen who have requested me to deliver this address to speak it on the floor now, and then secure the privilege to which I have referred, for the reason that a point of order will be made soon that will lead to an adjournment. In fact, it will be made, I am informed, as soon as I finish unless further consideration of the pending bill is abandoned. Of course, the flood situation in the Mississippi Valley is of the utmost importance to us.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Does the gentleman from Louisiana realize that he is supposed to confine his remarks to the bill under consideration?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. No; I did not realize that. I thought I could discuss other matters on District bills.

Mr. UNDERHILL. That used to be the rule, but it is not now.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Louisiana may proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Louisiana may proceed out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I will tell the gentleman from Massachusetts a story, with another's tongue and another's eloquent pen, which will illustrate forcibly the fact that the Mississippi flood conditions and the solution of that annual problem are of the utmost importance to us of the valley particularly and to the Nation generally.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The gentleman from Massachusetts has been down there and knows all about it.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Then I know you will lend a sympathetic ear to the story my remarks and those of Garet Garrett and James Thomson will tell.

Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I desire to call the attention of the Congress to an article of extraordinary ability and insight written by Garet Garrett, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post of March 10, 1928. The article is captioned "A tale of thirteen billions." It is written primarily for the purpose of discussing the policy of the United States Government as relates to foreign loans. It mentions incidentally the very generous policy which our Government has followed in relieving foreign borrowers of some $7,000,000,000 which they owed us at the end of the war. It mentions outright gifts from our great Nation to the suffering and starving people of other nations. I do not care to go into a discussion of this phase of this article, but I do desire to call the attention of the House to the argument set forth clearly and, to my mind, convincingly by this forceful writer for this great magazine that there is a proper outlet for the vast surplus accumulation of capital in our country on projects of undoubted merit; projects which will add to the wealth of our country; projects which are an investment. In order to avoid taking up your time and the burdening of the RECORD, I have attempted to take from Mr. Garrett's article only those parts which present statistics and arguments along this line. Mr. Garrett mentions six projects of national import, one the Mississippi River system, another the Intercoastal Canal, and another the Nicaraguan Canal. It happens that I have introduced a bill looking forward to an investigation of the Nicaraguan Canal; it happens that I have introduced a bill relating to the development of the Mississippi River system; it also happens that I am identified with the development of the Intercoastal Canal. I desire to call the attention of Congress to the other projects mentioned, not that I or anyone else proposes at this time without due and thorough exhaustive investigation that our Government should enter forthwith on the expenditures involved in these projects, but it is well that we in Congress catch the vision of great national development and of an intelligent selfishness in this development of our Nation and the intelligent utilization of capital which we are sending abroad to stimulate industry in foreign lands while unemployment increases in our own country.

In this connection, I desire to state that while I am not always in agreement with the views set forth in the Saturday Evening Post, I do desire to acknowledge and commend the persistent vision shown by the editor of this magazine, Mr. George Horace Lorimer, and by the magazine itself in the constant presentation of intelligent matter regarding all sections of the United States and more particularly regarding the substantial problems of our country. Too many of the publications of national circulation in the East ignore matters of vast and vital interest to that part of our Nation which lies west of the Allegheny Mountains, in the great Mississippi Valley and in the far West. In the treatment of our own flood problem the Saturday Evening Post, and other publications of the Curtis Publishing Co., have shown an interest in publishing articles of authority on phases of this problem. These have been most helpful in calling these problems to national attention and in aiding in keeping the facts before the country.

This is a vast continent. Problems are many and complex. Congress will shortly consider the flood problem in the Mississippi River. In this connection the House of Representatives may take the credit to itself for having, through its Flood Control Committee, made the most thorough, the most exhaustive, and the most intelligent investigation of this problem during the life of the present Congress that has ever been made on this subject. To the credit of the majority party, it must be stated that its leaders and members have shown every disposition to investigate and treat this flood-control subject on a nonpartisan, nonpolitical, and patriotic basis. The precedent set here regarding the treatment of the flood problem in the lower Mississippi must be followed by the House and by the Senate no matter what changes may come in the political complexion of these bodies in the years to come. We must rise above sectionalism, factionalism, and narrow interest and must consider the Nation's problems for development in times of peace as we considered the Nation's problems for prosecuting the Great War. It is on this basis that we consider the flood problem. Mr. Garrett observes:

One hundred years ago flood control of the Mississippi River was an unimaginable undertaking. We were without the means, the skill, or the capital. To-day the neglect of it is merely a sign of national folly.

While we are lending our wealth in a prodigious manner to other nations, we have in hand of our own no national undertaking at all commensurate with our powers. There has been nothing since the Panama Canal to give us, in time of peace, any sense of putting forth a mighty effort. And this is not for want of works to do.

GREAT NATIONAL NECESSITIES

Imagine seeing this country as a moving photomicrograph, the whole of it in one field of vision. What would appear? Rivers running wild and overflowing, enough power going to waste to absorb all human drudgery, cities fighting for water, not because there isn't plenty but because they have been individually taking it the easiest way, the level of the Great Lakes falling, locomotives struggling over mountains with trainloads of coal that ought to be burned at the mines, commodities moving absurd distances and roundabout because the artificial lines of transportation happen to converge in a few places, terrific congestion in those places, two unexploited empires lying west of the Rio Grande, areas here and there to be reclaimed by irrigation or drainage, each the equivalent of adding another State to our resources.

Knowing what means and tools we had to begin with and how recently it was that all this was wilderness, you would not belittle the wonder of what we have accomplished; but much more you would be struck by the immensity of what we have yet to do. You would realize that our development until now has proceeded along lines of least resistance, one thing upon another, with vicinity vision. That way is at an end. The future will require scientific development under the authority of national vision. That way is opening. We know many things we ought to do and how we ought to do them; we have means in surplus. Yet we procrastinate. Beginnings are involved in disputes between States over prior advantage or between conflicting theories of private and public function. Consider only a few of the great projects that have been definitely visualized.

One is to bring the sea to Chicago and Duluth and make every harbor on the Great Lakes an ocean port. This can be done by raising the level of the Lakes to what it was before they began to shrink, and putting 30-foot shipways in place of the shallow bottleneck connections that now make it impossible for ocean steamships to navigate the most important natural inland transportation system in the world. In this one idea, presenting itself as an engineering problem, complicated by political difficulties, there is endless matter of unmade history, touching the destinies of American agriculture, the migrations of industry westward, and the tides of population; also a by-product of 4,000,000 hydroelectric horsepower.

A second is to make the Mississippi River system a docile carrier, waterer, and turbine slave, by the engineering trick of impounding the wild power of its flood, and then giving it back as tame energy.

"In the great basin of the Mississippi," says Mr. Hoover, "there lies the possibility of a development of the most fundamental economic importance. * * * We have here a drainage upon which, for moderate cost, we can provide a modern transportation system of 9,000 miles of connected waterways, serving 20 States, furnishing a complete north-and-south trunk line across the Nation through the Lakes from Duluth, through Chicago to the Gulf of Mexico, and east and west from Pittsburgh to Kansas City." And of the 3,000,000 hydroelectric horsepower that would be incidentally captured, he adds: "The devotion of a large part of the power to the development of the electrochemical industry is a national necessity for industry, agriculture, and defense."

A third is to develop the natural indications of an intercoastal waterway for barge movements from Boston to Florida, New Orleans, and Galveston. Pieces of such a protected waterway are already made, such as the Cape Cod Canal, but there is no plan for a complete system.

When you read that last year we lent $1,750,000,000 abroad and that this year we may lend $2,000,000,000 more, what do you see? A row of figures. What do you think? Something more or less vague about world trade. Who has ever seen $2,000,000,000? It is a mathematical quantity. How shall one imagine it? With some notion of this difficulty the statistician descends to put his figures through absurd antics. Our loans to foreign countries for a year equal a taxi fare of $4 a mile to the moon and back. So! Well, what of it?

But if you will relate the figures that express our investments abroad to figures that express the estimated cost of such national works as have been enumerated, you will be coming to a sense of value in equivalents. The cost of these works would be $2,500,000,000, distributed as follows:

For the Great Lakes project	$500,000,000
For the Mississippi River system	500,000,000
For the intercoastal canal	250,000,000
For the Colorado River system	250,000,000
For the Columbia River system	300,000,000
For the Nicaraguan Canal	700,000,000
Total	$2,500,000,000

In the year 1927 we increased our foreign investments by $1,750,000,000. In the year 1928 we are expected to increase them by $2,000,000,000 more. Total in two years, $3,750,000,000.

AN INDEFINITE DISTINCTION

This is measurement only. As illustration it would possess a serious fault. A large proportion of the $1,750,000,000 invested abroad last year was in these modern circumstances necessary. That must be said also as to roughly the same proportion of the $2,000,000,000 we are thinking to invest in foreign countries this year. Therefore you can not say literally there is a capital sum of $3,750,000,000 that could be or might have been translated into works of our own.

Take it differently. By the end of this year the total of our private investments in foreign countries will be at least $15,000,000,000. It would be rash to say that as much as two-thirds of this vorticular sum was for what bankers and economists call productive purposes. There is a distinction, theoretically definite but practically indefinite, between uses of capital that are productive and uses that are unproductive.

Capital devoted to the further creation of wealth is called productive. Capital loaned to industry is supposed to have that character generally. Capital loaned to foreign governments may or may not have it. One is never sure. The Government may say it will use the capital to develop electric power, railroads, or waterways, and may, in fact, do so, whereupon the capital is said to have been used for productive purposes. Nevertheless, capital borrowed for those purposes may serve only to release other capital of that Government's own to be spent for unproductive purposes.

WHERE THE MONEY COULD GO

However, suppose two-thirds of all that $15,000,000,000 of American capital invested abroad to represent productive purposes, tending to increase the wealth and trade of the world. Then what of the other third, amounting to $5,000,000,000? It passes through the hands of governments and municipalities, and is spent for all manner of things—in part for subsidies, for doles, in strife, directly and indirectly for armaments, to pay German reparations to the Allies, to build stadiums, to pay old debts, to balance budgets, to restore the value of national currencies, and so on. A great deal of it has been and will be wasted and lost. We shall be very lucky as investors—luckier than we deserve to be—if some of it does not turn out to be unrepayable.

Well, now apply the scale to this $5,000,000,000 loaned abroad for presumably unproductive purposes. Deduct first that $2,500,000,000 worth of works that have been priced, including the Nicaraguan Canal. They are paid for. You have $2,500,000,000 left.

Various housing commissions seek ways and means to provide model tenements for people of small incomes in the cities. Give them the capital necessary to procure this blessing for 100,000 families at $10,000 per family, and still you have $1,500,000,000 left.

The United States Shipping Board, through which we have been trying, with a fumbling, stingy effort, to found a merchant marine, says it needs a lot of big new ships to meet the competition of European ships, not a few of which by our loans we have assisted Europe to build. Give the United States Shipping Board 100 new ships at a cost of $10,000,000 each, or 200 at a cost of $5,000,000 each.

There is still $500,000,000 left. What shall we do with that? With $500,000,000 we might build a motor highway from Texas to Argentina and treat it as a foundation in Pan-American relations. Would it pay? Ask a motor manufacturer, a diplomat, or an exporter if it would pay. Though not one dollar of the capital were ever returned, still it would turn out to be an economic resource of enormous value. For the ultimate reactions upon industry, commerce, and politics we could well afford to build it and then give a quitclaim deed of it to the separate countries.

Mr. Garrett deals entirely with the loans made by our international and other bankers to private enterprise in Europe. He does not mention the approximately $11,000,000,000 loaned to the allied nations of Europe during the course of and immediately after that titanic struggle which caused England's back to go to the wall and sent her cry of agony over the Atlantic Ocean to her powerful kinsmen in the United States to save her from the destruction which threatened. It was that cry as a principal factor, though we were not unmindful of the tender memories that bound us to France—memories that kindled in our soul during the Revolutionary War and which came back like burning stars to light the appalling gloom that hung over desperate, heart-broken, and prostrate France of 1917. It was that cry in our ears largely that marshaled our blood and our billions behind the Allies and brought them out of the black night of defeat to a sunlit and glorious victory. Eleven thousand million dollars was the money that we put up to Europe to save Europe. And the tears of American mothers and the graves of American boys, for many of our young soldiers rest "over there" with nothing but a cross above the ground in which they will rest forever, carrying the simple inscription "Sacred to the memory of an American soldier." In other words, our war-time investment from the national standpoint to the European governments plus our peace-time investment to private enterprise total the stupendous, the almost inconceivable, the incomprehensible sum of $26,000,000,000 plus. No one has complained of our saving of Europe from the Moloch of war, and no one has ever thought of protesting against our efforts to put Europe upon its feet. We only express our surprise and our grief at the thought that our own kinsmen in some quarters do not extend the same aid and comfort and the justice to which we are entitled to that great section known as the Mississippi Valley. With a proper appropriation—that is, one adequate to the results the students of waterways see in the not far distant future—a controlled river and a protected adjacent and contiguous country. From such a new environment will spring a scene of activity which will test and challenge the genius of industry, commerce, and transportation.

The Mississippi River and its great tributaries, reaching out eastward to the Alleghenies and westward to the ramparts of the Rockies, under the direction of scientific engineering would make for a navigation never known before on all of the waters of the world; a power that would move the factory wheels of every plant in the valley and light the cities and villages to the mountain tops; and furnish water for irrigation purposes to the desert, which would then blossom as the rose. And this El Dorado could be produced by Uncle Sam as a magician waving a wand of not more than a billion dollars—one twenty-fifth of the appraised values of our railroads and about one twenty-fifth of the sum that America has spent and invested in Europe in less than 10 years. Some few question the accuracy of this envisionment and call it a dream. Let me dissipate that statement. The great author of the Age of Reason said that when he wished to demonstrate to a doubting Thomas that the universe is illimitable, boundless, endless that he asked, "Where is the end, and after that, what?" And we who believe in the valley, who in the night of despair saw the glories of the coming day, ask, Would not the completion of our waterways have been necessary to achieve such results if railways had not come into existence and temporarily stayed the great development of our rivers and tributaries? Read the following characteristic utterance of a man who has spent his money and given unstintedly of his time since the great disaster came upon us in the hope that such another tragedy may never overtake us again. He has fought for what he thought is the remedy. The cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night, which has led him in his indefatigable efforts in behalf of the people of the valley has been the sublime words of the Great Evangelist, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth will make you free."

THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER SPILLWAYS

By James M. Thompson

If you belong to that aristocracy whose grandfathers owned and used bathtubs, you may know that the old tub was a crude affair. Both the tub and the water were brought into the warm room on Saturday night.

Then, in father's day, the plumber hitched up a tin tub to the new-fangled running-water contrivance—one pipe led to the tub from the cold-water reservoir, another from the hot water. A rubber stopper attached to a chain served to hold the water in the tub. When the stopper was removed the water ran out. But life was complex even in those days, and sometimes father or mother, the nurse or the children left the water running with the stopper left in the drainage hole in the tub, and then the water filled the tub and ran over the top.

This thing happened in many homes and in many hotels, causing sorrow, inconvenience, and loss. Then some wise men evolved the idea of placing an exhaust hole in the bathtub about a quarter of the distance down from the top. And to-day almost all bathtubs are flood-proof and foolproof, for the water can get out through this hole faster than it can run in through both the cold and hot water spigots. Thus the world is safer for bathers, and damaging and destructive floods are avoided in modern homes and hotels.

Now, that last hole which was finally put in the bathtub is, in fact, a spillway. The water in the modern tub is allowed to come up to a certain safe level, then this new safety factor becomes effective. The water is spilled out of the tub so fast that it can not reach a dangerous level. The exhaust pipe takes it away through a safe outlet. Its dangerous tendency to flood is controlled.

Many things are different in Louisiana, and many things about the Mississippi River, particularly the lower part of this great stream, which flows from Arkansas through Louisiana to the Gulf of Mexico, are different from the other parts of the stream, and from other rivers. Accordingly, as people generally do not understand lower Mississippi River conditions, it is not surprising that they do not understand at once how Louisianans propose to control the mighty floods of the Mississippi River by the application of spillways to the levees, or banks, of the river.

THE BEGINNING OF THE RIVER POLICY

In the hearings before Congress regarding the Mississippi River flood problem, in public speeches, and in print, there have been statements to the effect that the adoption of spillways for flood regulations will reverse a river flood-control policy of 50 or 100 years. Others have gone as far as 150 years in their estimate. As a matter of fact, the levee system of Louisiana is more than 200 years old.

The first levee on the Mississippi was begun by the engineer Le Blond de la Tour, who erected a levee a mile long to protect the infant city of New Orleans from overflow.

Levees have been built ever since, so there is historical engineering precedent aplenty for the idea of throwing up a breastwork of earth against Mississippi flood waters. The real trouble with the scheme of Le Blond de la Tour was that it worked. It is probable that his mile-long levee was but 2 or 3 feet high. The eminent father of Mississippi levees is reported to have died in 1725. He doubtless went to his grave confident that he had solved the Mississippi flood problem for all time to come. And who would have believed differently in his day? For, if the floods threatened his little levees, all that was necessary was to build them a little bit higher.

France had to build a city at New Orleans on the banks of the Mississippi. Control of the mouth of the river meant control of the great Mississippi Valley. At New Orleans in the springtime, when the great river went into flood, the river rose 1 or 2 feet. The new city must be protected. What more simple, natural, and logical than to throw up against these floods a continuous mound of dirt 3 or 4 feet high? This first levee stood between the city and the river and protected the city.

The little levee was good and bad. The city was protected and grew, and because the first levee worked other levees were built below the city and for 1,000 miles above the city. They would all have worked if the levees had been built only on the east bank of the river, and the flood waters of the Mississippi had all been allowed to spill over on the west bank. But the trouble was that everybody wanted the water kept off his land; so everybody, east side and west side, built levees. They built them as high as they could and as strong as they could, and they built levees wherever they could build them on the main stem of the Mississippi and on thousands of miles of the 15,000 miles of its navigable tributaries.

The Baron Pontalba was a big man in New Orleans in his day—a century after De la Tour lay high and dry in his levee-protected tomb—and we find the baron writing to France, telling the home folks that he was much discouraged. For after the spring rise of the Mississippi River he finds that he will have to build his levee a foot higher. So, in the centuries which have passed and in the decades which have passed, after each great flood in the Mississippi River, the word has gone back to France, back to Spain, to France again, then to the Governor of Louisiana, and then to Uncle Sam at Washington: "We are much discouraged; we will have to build our levees higher."

But this year, for the first time since De la Tour built the first levee—which worked well for a while—the historic habit and policy of relying on levees alone for flood protection is to be abandoned. The great flood of the spring of 1927 has changed the mind of everyone in the levees-only theory. More levees may be built to hold more flood water in, but great spillways and flood ways are to be built to let more water out.

Building up the sides of the bathtub will no longer do. We don't know how much water may be run into the bathtub from its tributary spigots, but we are going to put holes enough in the sides of the river to let out a great deal more surplus flood water than ever came down the Mississippi River in the spring of 1927. "Will these spillways work?" you may ask. Of course they will work. No engineer and no layman acquainted with the Mississippi River ever has questioned the fact that the spillways will work. The reason for this is that in every great flood of the Mississippi River the levees have broken at some points. The surplus waters of the river have rushed through these breaks, called crevasses, and these crevasses have simply been spillways for the surplus waters of the river.

The only difference between the new spillways which are to be constructed and controlled and the old spillways made by the flooding river at the weakest points in the chain of levees is that the controlled spillways should and will do away with flood danger and flood damage in the lower river.

They will drain the surplus flood waters of the Mississippi out to the Gulf of Mexico as the surplus waters in the bathtub are drained out by the modern plumber's exhaust pipes. They will no longer threaten to break loose where they are not wanted, threatening the lives and property of some millions of American citizens.

TWO ROADS TO THE SEA

Many things regarding the Mississippi River floods in its lower regions in Louisiana are difficult of understanding by those not acquainted with actual conditions there. The waters which contribute to Mississippi River floods come from 31 States, from the Great Lakes, and from Canada. Unprecedented rainfall in Louisiana would have little effect on Mississippi River levels. But Louisiana contains the last four hundred-odd miles of the main stem of the Mississippi. So the river has naturally to handle its greatest volume of flood waters in Louisiana.

About halfway down its course in Louisiana the Mississippi is joined by its main Louisiana tributary, the Red, and just below the point of junction of the Red and the Mississippi the great river splits and empties its waters into the Gulf by two mouths. One of these is named the Atchafalaya. The other—the main stream of the Mississippi—continues by way of Baton Rouge and New Orleans. So there is really about 700 miles of the Mississippi River in Louisiana—500 on the main stream and 160 on the Atchafalaya.

Now, when the great river is in flood in these lowest regions its waters, held in by levees, rise high above the surrounding land. And if its levees break, either along the Atchafalaya or the Mississippi, the water which thus runs out of the river there in its lowest reaches neither can nor does run back into the river.

This water finds its way on easier lines to the Gulf of Mexico. In other words, the levees of the river are the only hills in this lower country. The highest land is next to the river. This land slopes from the river to swamps, lakes, creeks, and bayous and thus finds its way to the Gulf of Mexico. So spillways cut into these levees would spill the waters of the river out into the Gulf. Nearly everyone in America is acquainted with the ordinary formation of the earth around brooks, creeks, and rivers. In Louisiana alone we go up to the river; and when the river is in flood we go way up to the top of the levee and find the swollen Mississippi on top of the levee. In flood time this great river, a mile wide, in some places 200 feet deep, with its current speeded up by flood pressure, is an awe-inspiring and terrifying sight.

We all know the damage to property done by the flood of 1927. Governmental authorities quote estimates of $236,000,000 direct and of $200,000,000 indirect losses—a total of $436,000,000. Yet only two or three lives were lost in this flood in Louisiana, while recently flood waters probably not one-hundredth of the volume of the Mississippi River flood are reported to have killed scores of people in New England. The answer is to be found in the confinement of the New England flood in hills and mountains. I am told that dynamite burns without explosion or damage if it is not confined. The floods in Louisiana spread out over almost flat ground. This lessens their danger to life.

THE SYSTEM BEHIND THE LEVEES

So, to eliminate flood danger in Louisiana, we propose to tap the flood waters and drain them off, and run them into the Gulf. "If it is all so simple, common sense, and easy, why has it not been done before?" you may ask. The reason is partly to be found in the fact that De la Tour's levee worked, that all the other levees have worked after a fashion, and the levees almost always work on one side of the river. For, in flood time, if the levee breaks on the other side of the river, the waters rush out, flood heights are lowered, pressure is relieved, and the man on the safe side blesses the levees and believes in them.

If the levees broke in flood time, it was because they were not high enough and not strong enough. Again, there were rich levee districts which could build powerful levees. These people felt secure in flood time, because they lived behind strong links in the chain, and they felt almost sure that their powerful levees would turn the river floods loose on thin, weaker, and poorer levees across the river a bit downstream.

Then back of the levees there grew up a system. De la Tour was an engineer. He built levees. The next engineer built levees, and the next generation of engineers built them, and so on down. The power of human selfishness, the power of government, the power of money, the power of social interest, and the power of habit and tradition, stood back of the levee system. No one could prove that it would not work, provided the levees were built high enough and strong enough, and, of course, it would have worked if the levees could have been built high enough and strong enough. Undoubtedly it worked in periods of low water in the river, in normal water, and in ordinary high water, and there is unusual or unprecedented high water only once in 10 or 12 years.

Again, levees are the first line of defense in any plan of battle against the floods of the Mississippi River, and as a practical matter, they constitute the only line of defense that could be created against river floods in most sections during the centuries which have elapsed during the fight of the white man against the floods of the river. They are the infantry. No one is yet sufficiently progressive or so fantastic as to suggest the creation of a modern and effective army with the infantry eliminated. The most that anyone urges is that the army be rounded out with cavalry, aircraft, artillery, tanks, and other approved equipment.

De la Tour could throw up dirt embankments along the river, could plan to surround the little military outpost of New Orleans with mud walls, and his scheme did work. Generations had to elapse before men and money enough could be commanded to dig a great ditch, or spillway, along the city from the river to the lakes, and thereby detour the floods away from New Orleans. And if this had been possible then, think of the howl that would have gone up from the gentlemen who owned the lands through which the first spillway was to be built. No one wants a spillway on his property and no one wants a spillway next to his property. Everyone wants the water kept off his property. If it has to be put somewhere else, well and good, but not where it will affect the interests of "me and my wife, and my son John and my daughter Sally."

No one can remember when the first voice of protest was raised against the confinement theory and the confinement practice of fighting these floods. Everyone along the southern reaches of the Mississippi knows that the whole argument was started before his day.

But the fellow with the outlet or spillway theory had only the idea. The men who controlled the Government and the money built the levees.

Values back of the levees were established on the basis of confidence in the levees. To question the levees-only theory was to put yourself in the light of a trouble maker, an opponent of the status quo, a visionary.

You were really questioning the conduct of the war—the war of your own people to protect life and property from Mississippi River floods—and what did you have to offer after all? Only a theory. It is true that it was backed up by the accepted fact that water will run down hill. It was true that the floods mounted higher and higher; that they always broke the levees, flooded the country, creating increasing menace and destruction. It was also true that if the levees had been high enough and strong enough the flood would have been forced on through the river to the Gulf.

THE GOVERNMENT TAKES A HAND

Basically the reason for opposition to spillways and outlets for the river in Louisiana grew out of the limited appropriation of money made by the Federal Government for river control from Cairo down. Take the case of the man at Greenville, Miss., for example. Spillways and outlets in Louisiana would have eaten up a great proportion of the several millions of dollars' appropriation available for Federal purposes for all flood-control work along thousands of miles of levees. If the money went into spillways in Louisiana it would not go into levees at Greenville.

No one then dreamed that spillways and flood ways might relieve Greenville of its flood heights; and to resort to another method of river flood control, in addition to levees, meant an implied reflection on the integrity of levees as a method of flood protection. So up the river Senators, Congressmen, business men, and members of levee boards, and the people generally, fought for the status quo, and fought everyone else who fought for a change.

As a result of the 1912 flood agitation by Louisianians in Washington the House of Representatives took flood control out of the hands of the Rivers and Harbors Committee and constituted a new Committee on Flood Control.

Through the agency of this committee south Louisiana, including New Orleans, finally secured the adoption of a bill by Congress, April 17, 1926, authorizing the appointment by the Secretary of War of a board to survey the lower river sections and report on the construction and maintenance of controlled and regulated spillways in the lower Mississippi. Chief of Engineers Taylor and his successor, General Jadwin, consulted on the naming of this board.

A year from the date of the passage of this act south Louisiana was fighting the greatest recorded flood in her history. The report of this board, popularly known as the spillway board, is now one of the published documents of the Government. The board consisted entirely of Army engineers. Col. William P. Wooten was chairman. It reverses the old confinement or levees-only theory, recommends in one of its projects a vast spillway or flood way down the Atchafalaya Basin of Louisiana, and recommends spillways above and below New Orleans. Thus the spillway and flood-way theory was adopted by an official agency of the Government.

FOR MODERN FLOOD FIGHTING

In the spring of 1927 Gen. Edgar Jadwin, Chief of Army Engineers, authorized the publication of a statement that spillways would be recommended for New Orleans and the lower river. With the opening of the Seventieth Congress President Coolidge submitted to Congress the report of General Jadwin on the flood problem along the Mississippi from Cairo, Ill., to the Gulf of Mexico. That report, like that of the spillway board, is a revolutionary document in its recommendations for Mississippi River flood control, for it provides flood ways and spillways along the greater part of the length of the lower Mississippi. Simultaneously with the report of the Chief of Engineers the Government published the exhaustive studies and recommendations made in the reports of the Mississippi River Commission. That commission comes out for flood ways along the upper river, for a great flood way running through the Atchafalaya Basin in Louisiana, and recommends spillways in the main line of the Mississippi levees above and below New Orleans.

In other words, when the engineering and scientific world determined that it was no longer practicable to control the floods of the Mississippi by levees and confinement alone, it moved over as a practical unit to the theory of fighting floods with flood ways, spillways, and in taking into consideration all modern flood-fighting weapons.

The layman naturally asks whether the new methods will work. The answer of some millions of laymen as well as of the civilian engineers and river experts who lived in the lower valley is practically unanimous that any one of the schemes proposed will absolutely do away with menace from any known or recorded flood and with the menace of a theoretical flood something more than 20 per cent greater than any Mississippi River flood that anyone knows anything about. All the schemes which come with recent governmental approval will work. Any of them, carried out, will provide safety to those who live along the lower river.

Will the spillways work? Of course they will. They always have worked. When the flooding river has broken through the levees in south Louisiana the water has always run out, and has lowered flood heights for distances above and below the crevasse. A crevasse is generally referred to as a natural break; only once in the history of Louisiana is there record of a crevasse or cut in the levees having been made lawfully, and by man's instrumentality.

When the great flood of 1927 was bearing down on New Orleans the leading men of the city decided that they would not wait for nature to take its course. They knew that the levees of New Orleans were stronger than were the levees in the country districts above and below the city. But they did not want to wait for the accident of the inevitable crevasse which would come somewhere, create a natural spillway, and protect everybody else in the neighborhood except those who were overflowed by the crevasse. So, after negotiation with all the authorities, it was determined to create a cut, or spillway, at a point on the east bank of the river known as Caernarvon. This spillway created at Caernarvon worked just as did the Poydras crevasse a few miles distant. This crevasse was a natural spillway created by the river in a flood of 1922. Both lowered flood heights at New Orleans almost 2½ feet.

Somehow, in the flood of 1927, the fact that New Orleans has evidenced her faith in spillways by her deeds seems to have been overlooked. The city, operating through its levee board, went down the river 50 miles, acquired title to thousands of acres of swamp lands and destroyed the levees on the east bank of the river for a distance of 12 miles. There, below Pointe a la Hache, out of its own funds, it created an experimental spillway. This spillway took from a half to three-quarters of a foot off flood heights at New Orleans in the 1927 flood. And in times of flood every inch of flood height is important.

It would seem to any sensible man who knows the flood problem in the lower Mississippi that it should have been solved long ago. This is the great river of the United States, and nothing appeals more to the imagination of the American people than the doing of a great work in a great way. It takes a big river, operating in a big country, to do four or five hundred million dollars' worth of damage when it goes on the rampage in just one of its many great floods. It's easy to write about it, to talk about it, and to evolve theories and opinions on the question of controlling it, but it has not been easy to get something really done about it.

THE PLAN AND THE MONEY

There must be complete Federal control and complete Federal responsibility for the Mississippi River. New Orleans people can express this opinion without being subject to carping or unfair criticism, because New Orleans has always built and maintained her own levees. Neither Federal nor State Governments have contributed anything material to the millions upon millions of dollars which have gone into the giant fortification of earth which New Orleans has thrown up to protect the city from the river. New Orleans has contributed to the building of levees and spillways in other sections of the State. New Orleans has always protested against the piecemeal system of flood control which has grown up, an evolution based on the policy of doing the best one can with the tools in hand.

The floods in the river can be controlled by some such system as that which enabled the Federal Government to take over the Panama Canal and construct it after vast losses and disastrous failures had occurred as a result of previous attempts to design and build the canal. You can't drive a nail with a tack hammer. Canute couldn't sweep back the tides with his broom, and you can't finally solve a vast engineering and economic problem such as is presented by the floods of this river without a great plan, carried out by men of great ability, with resources ample to do the work when and as it needs to be done. Fighting and conquering the floods of the Mississippi is war.

The plan without the money is of no good to the people of the lower river. The people who might have been induced to contribute were practically wiped out of resources by the 1927 flood. Many of their levee districts were taxed to the limit before 1927. Farming has not been too prosperous an occupation anywhere. These poor people in the overflowed region thought that they were making an investment in taxing themselves to the limit in building levees. Will their neighbors on high ground tax themselves by State bond issues to make material contributions to a national flood plan as part of the Nation? Nationally they will. For a local flood plan they will not. Suppose Mississippi and Louisiana agreed, and Arkansas refused. A flood-control system is a chain. If the links are not supplied in Arkansas, Louisiana would be flooded from Arkansas, and so it would go.

PASSING ON THE FLOODS

Perhaps we needed the vast and disastrous flood of 1927 to concentrate the attention of America and the world on this problem. Surely it was an expensive bit of publicity. Some of us who have struggled with this problem, who realize its vast importance and the terrible potentialities of the river for further havoc, appreciate most keenly the many expressions of kindly feeling and sympathy which have come to us. We appreciate the well-meant intent of some of the advice we receive as to the perils which surround us in legislation at Washington. But what we really need is help in passing a sane bill which will provide money and start the dirt to flying.

The condition of the main stem of the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf undoubtedly creates a national emergency. The executive departments of the Government recognize this, and Congress shows a disposition to recognize this. The river itself is unique; its major flood problem is unique among all national flood problems.

Is there not equal argument for emergency legislation on the tributaries of the river? Yes and no. The great floods in the river may come from any single tributary, or from a set of tributaries flooding simultaneously. They may come from Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Ohio, Montana, the Dakotas, or Oklahoma. But wherever they start, they must come into the main stem of the river between Cairo and the Gulf

Unprecedented rainfall in any one of the 31 States of the Union adds to the flood menace to Louisiana. Rainfall in any place in the valley, except in Louisiana, creates flood heights in the Mississippi in Louisiana. If the rain falls in the lower section of the State it drains away from the river and goes directly to the Gulf.

What makes our flood menace in Louisiana? First, the clearing and draining of the lands in the upper Mississippi Valley. Every possible expedient has been adopted up there for passing the bulk of the surplus water of the upper valley on down the river. Lands are tiled, drained, and leveed. Machinery for shooting floods down on us is perfected. Louisiana has pursued a policy of trying, in turn, to pass these ever-swelling waters along to the Gulf through the narrow mouths of the Mississippi and the Atchafalaya. It can not be done.

Now, the facts are that we in Louisiana don't intend to agree to the construction of more works of any kind which will dump greater floods down on us in a greater lump unless necessary works are intelligently created to aid in getting rid of these waters. In other words, the place to begin taking care of the floods of the Mississippi River is at the mouth of the stream, where the floods accumulate. Build us plenty of outlets here and we can safely take care of all of the flood waters the valley passes to us.

Louisiana lost $60,000,000 directly in the 1927 flood. About 200,000 of her citizens were flooded out and rendered homeless. Tens of thousands were impoverished and consequential losses were almost as great as were direct losses.

If the State could have induced the Federal Government to aid in establishing spillways or outlets for this water, not a dollar of damage would have been done in the State of Louisiana by the 1927 flood. No one in America has ever seen a flood volume equal to that of the 1927 flood. Yet with intelligent and relatively simple engineering works constructed along the Mississippi in Louisiana a flood much greater than the 1927 flood could be controlled without the loss of a single life and without damage to a dollar's worth of property.

Our real trouble with the Mississippi River problem has been a lack of ability to make our problem known to the American people, to impress the country with the need of action at Washington.

Leaders in America's politics and national thought and affairs preach to Louisiana from a distance, without either knowing or understanding the State, its people, and its problems.

As the fight for flood-control legislation opens up in Congress the country is bound to be confused as to whether we along the river have done our share and as to whether we are now asking something unfair.

Have we contributed locally to protect ourselves from the floods the Nation's river brings down on us from 43 per cent of the Nation's area?

Within a given period in Louisiana—since the time that the Nation began to contribute at all—local interests have put up $110,000,000, while the Nation has put up $32,000,000.

As for the river States from Cairo to the Gulf, I quote from an analysis of General Jadwin's report made by ex-Senator Leroy Percy, of Mississippi, for Chairman FRANK REID'S House of Representatives Flood Control Committee. Says Senator Percy:

"General Jadwin gives the expenditures by the localities since 1882 at $167,000,000, and the expenditures prior to 1882 at $125,000,000, making $292,000,000. If to this you add the amount which he estimates to have been the direct loss from the 1927 flood—$236,000,000—you have in contributions and flood losses of a single year $528,000,000, against a contribution for levees by the National Government of $71,000,000, an excess contribution by localities up to this time of $457,000,000."

Senator Percy did not add the $200,000,000 of consequential losses to his staggering total of Nation's losses. But this item created additional reason for the investigation and report on Mississippi Valley flood losses by the National Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, it is evident that there is going to be considerable discussion on this bill. A number of amendments are now pending, including some committee amendments. It does not seem practical to finish the bill to-night, unless we run until very late. I wonder if the District Committee would not be willing to let the matter go over as unfinished business until next District day.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of indifference to me whether this goes over as unfinished business until next District day, or whether it is voted upon to-day, or whether it is killed. That is a very frank expression, but I say, let us get it out of the way.

Mr. BLANTON. It would be better to have it go over as unfinished business until next District day, and then we can finish it.

Mr. TILSON. It will go over as unfinished business, and it is for the committee to say what it will call up on the next District day.

Mr. BLANTON. We either ought to finish it this evening or have it go over as unfinished business to be taken up next District day.

Mr. TILSON. Let it go over as unfinished business.

Mr. BLANTON. And the chairman will bring it up as unfinished business on next District day?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Very well, just so long as it holds its place.

TENTH NATIONAL CONVENTION OF THE AMERICAN LEGION

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 3387) to authorize the Secretary of War to lend War Department equipment for use at the Tenth National Convention of the American Legion. An identical bill to this has been favorably reported from the Committee on Military Affairs and is now on the calendar. The Senate bill has just been sent over and is on the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas calls up the bill S. 3387, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to lend, at his discretion, to the Tenth National Convention Bureau, American Legion, for use at the tenth national convention of the American Legion to be held at San Antonio, Tex., in the month of October, 1928, 10,000 cots, 20,000 blankets, 20,000 bed sheets, 10,000 pillows, 10,000 pillowcases, 10,000 mattresses or bed sacks, and such field kitchens, tables, eating and cooking utensils and appurtenances as may be necessary for use in temporary restaurants: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of said property, the same to be delivered at such time prior to the holding of the said convention as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the general director of said tenth national convention bureau, the American Legion, Mr. Philip B. Stapp: Provided further, That the Secretary of War before delivering said property shall take from said Philip B. Stapp a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, and whole without expense to the United States.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this is a House Calendar bill?

The SPEAKER. This is a Senate bill and a similar House bill is reported and is now on the calendar.

Mr. TILSON. It does not require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It does not. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 11465) was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, following the special order, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WURZBACH] be permitted to address the House for 50 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, on what subject?

Mr. TILSON. I think it is probably on the protective tariff or something of that sort. As I understand, it is a political speech.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, our genial colleague from Texas [Mr. WURZBACH] is making that speech on the eve of his leaving for his speaking campaign in Texas.

Mr. TILSON. Possibly that is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. Would the distinguished floor leader mind telling the House whether he and his administration in asking for this time for the gentleman are backing him in his fight down there?

Mr. TILSON. I do not know what his fight is; but I am backing him as a Member of this House, and am asking for him this courtesy as I would for any other Member.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not object.

Mr. TILSON. And I am impartial in that respect, often making similar requests for those on the Democratic side.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like for the Republicans in Texas to know that the gentleman from Connecticut is backing the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WURZBACH].

Mr. TILSON. I am backing him——

Mr. BLANTON. Good!

Mr. TILSON. To this extent at any rate.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 131) entitled "Joint resolution providing for a commission to investigate and report upon the facts connected with the sinking of the submarine S–4, and upon methods and appliances for the protection of submarines," and adheres to its amendments to said joint resolution.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9860. An act to amend the act of April 25, 1922, as amended, entitled "An act authorizing extensions of time for the payment of purchase money due under certain homestead entries and Government-land purchases within the former Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian Reservations, N. Dak. and S. Dak."

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 2317. An act continuing for one year the powers and authority of the Federal Radio Commission under the radio act of 1927, and for other purposes;

S. 3007. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent to the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions for a certain tract of land on the Mescalero Reservation, N. Mex.; and

S. 3355. An act to authorize the cancellation of the balance due on a reimbursable agreement for the sale of cattle to certain Rosebud Indians.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 27, 1928, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. TILSON submitted the following tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Tuesday, March 27, 1928, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

(10.30 a. m.)

Legislative appropriation bill.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

(10 a. m.)

To provide for the eradication or control of the European corn borer (H. R. 10377).

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION—CAUCUS ROOM

(10.30 a. m.)

To permit admission within quota of relatives of declarants who have been admitted into the United States prior to July 1, 1924 (H. J. Res. 234).

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

(10 a. m.)

To establish uniform requirements affecting Government contracts (H. R. 5767).

COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS

(10 a. m.)

To establish the Ouachita national park in the State of Arkansas (H. R. 5720).

COMMITTEE ON ROADS

(10 a. m.)

To authorize and direct the survey, construction, and maintenance of a memorial highway to connect Mount Vernon, in the State of Virginia, with the Arlington Memorial Bridge across the Potomac River at Washington (H. R. 4625).

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

(10.30 a. m.)

To consider a bill proposed by the Secretary of the Navy amending an act of June, 1920.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

418. A letter from the Governor of Federal Reserve Board, transmitting the fourteenth annual report from the Federal Reserve Board, covering operations during the year of 1927 (H. Doc. No. 205); to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

419. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to House Resolution 137, Seventieth Congress, certain information relative to the United States naval ordnance plant, South Charleston, W. Va. (H. Doc. No. 206); to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. MILLER: Committee on Naval Affairs. H. R. 8537. A bill for the relief of retired and transferred members of the Naval Reserve Force, Naval Reserve, and Marine Corps Reserve; with amendment (Rept. No. 1054). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. IRWIN: Committee on Claims. H. R. 2481. A bill for the relief of Oliver C. Macey and Marguerite Macey; with amendment (Rept. No. 1046). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. UNDERHILL: Committee on Claims. H. R. 4839. A bill for the relief of the Press Publishing Co., Marianna, Ark.; without amendment (Rept. No. 1047). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HUDSPETH: Committee on Claims. H. R. 10336. A bill for the relief of Nannie Swearingen; without amendment (Rept. No. 1048). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HALE: Committee on Naval Affairs. H. R. 4111. A bill to correct the naval record of Peter Hansen; with amendment (Rept. No. 1049). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BURDICK: Committee on Naval Affairs. H. R. 4827. A bill providing for the promotion of Chief Pharmacist Laurence Oliphant Schetky, United States Navy, retired, to the rank of lieutenant, Medical Corps, on the retired list of the Navy; without amendment (Rept. No. 1050). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. WOLVERTON: Committee on Claims. H. R. 8358. A bill for the relief of the parents of Wyman Henry Beckstead; with amendment (Rept. No. 1051). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia: Committee on Naval Affairs. H. R. 11978. A bill granting six months' pay to Alexander Gingras, father of Louis W. Gingras, deceased, private, United States Marine Corps, in active service; without amendment (Rept. No. 1052). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. GAMBRILL: Committee on Naval Affairs. H. J. Res. 47. A joint resolution for the relief of Mary M. Tilghman, former widow of Sergt. Frederick Coleman, deceased, United States Marine Corps; without amendment (Rept. No. 1053). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. GUYER: Committee on Claims. S. 19. An act for the relief of Frank Topping and others; without amendment (Rept. No. 1055). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6774) for the relief of Pitt Smith; Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. 7445) for the relief of Sheldon R. Purdy; Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. 9599) for the relief of Jose M. Alcover; Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. 11497) for the relief of Nelson E. Frissell; Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. 12362) for the relief of Hattie Harris; Committee on Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (H. R. 10184) granting an increase of pension to Lillian V. Manger; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 12404) authorizing erection of a memorial to Maj. Gen. Henry A. Greene at Fort Lewis, Wash.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PEAVEY: A bill (H. R. 12405) granting the consent of Congress to the St. Croix Interstate Bridge Co., of Grantsburg, Wis., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the St. Croix River on the Grantsburg Road; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WURZBACH: A bill (H. R. 12406) to readjust the pay of certain commissioned officers of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 12407) to authorize the refund of visa fees in certain cases; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. ELLIOTT: A bill (H. R. 12408) authorizing custodians and acting custodians of Federal buildings to administer oaths of office to employees in the custodian service; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HOGG: A bill (H. R. 12409) to grant to the city of Fort Wayne, Ind., an easement over certain Government property; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. PEAVEY: A bill (H. R. 12410) for securing the uniform grading of fur, preventing of deception in transactions in fur, and regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona: A bill (H. R. 12411) authorizing the Federal Power Commission to issue permits and licenses on Salt River, Ariz.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. MORROW: A bill (H. R. 12412) to amend section 500 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. CRAIL: A bill (H. R. 12413) authorizing the erection of a sanitary, fireproof dormitory and infirmary to be used for the housing, maintenance, and treatment of disabled women veterans only; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SELVIG: A bill (H. R. 12414) authorizing the classification of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. GRIEST: A bill (H. R. 12415) to grant freedom of postage in the United States domestic service to the correspondence of the members of the Diplomatic Corps and consuls of the countries of the Pan American Postal Union stationed in the United States; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. GIBSON: A bill (H. R. 12416) to revise, amend, and renact the provisions of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia relating to the acquisition of land in the said District for the use of the United States; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CARSS: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 249) granting an easement to the city of Duluth, Minn.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 250) to change the name of the Panama Canal; the Gatun Locks, Dam, Spillway, and Lake; and the Pedro Miguel Locks, Dam, Spillway, and Lake; and also the Miraflores Locks, Dam, Spillway, and Lake; and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BERGER: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 251) providing for the severance of treaty relations between the United States and Rumania; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. LINDSAY: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of New York, memorializing Congress to provide a suitable institution in the State of New York in which to confine those charged with or convicted of crimes against the Government of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BOYLAN: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of New York, calling upon Congress to provide a suitable institution in the State of New York in which to confine those charged with or convicted of crimes against the Government of the United States; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLAND: A bill (H. R. 12417) granting a pension to Clara L. Dawson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRITTEN: A bill (H. R. 12418) for the relief of Julius Goldenberg; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BROWNING: A bill (H. R. 12419) granting a pension to Roxie Coughorn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BULWINKLE: A bill (H. R. 12420) granting an increase of pension to Rhoda Sprinkle; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CRAIL: A bill (H. R. 12421) for the relief of Arthur D. Moore; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GARDNER of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 12422) granting an increase of pension to Cornelia Ann Bailey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GREENWOOD: A bill (H. R. 12423) granting a pension to Mary F. Buckles; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRIFFIN: A bill (H. R. 12424) for the relief of William Fisher; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HOGG: A bill (H. R. 12425) granting an increase of pension to Eleanor F. Gillespie; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KIESS: A bill (H. R. 12426) granting an increase of pension to Amy Lampman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mrs. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 12427) for the relief of W. R. Adams; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12428) granting a pension to Henry Stidham; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LONGWORTH: A bill (H. R. 12429) granting an increase of pension to Norah Barry; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LOZIER: A bill (H. R. 12430) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth I. Exceen; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MACGREGOR: A bill (H. R. 12431) for the relief of the Squaw Island Freight Terminal Co. (Inc.), of Buffalo, N. Y.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. OLDFIELD: A bill (H. R. 12432) granting a pension to Alvin L. Hagood; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PRATT: A bill (H. R. 12433) granting an increase of pension to Harriett A. Traynor; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RATHBONE: A bill (H. R. 12434) granting an increase of pension to Charles A. Meese; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SEARS of Florida: A bill (H. R. 12435) for the relief of W. R. McLeod; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SNELL: A bill (H. R. 12436) granting a pension to Louisa De Buke; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TABER: A bill (H. R. 12437) granting a pension to Louise Jones; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TARVER: A bill (H. R. 12438) for the relief of Ada T. Finley; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12439) for the relief of Ambrose R. Tracy; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WINTER: A bill (H. R. 12440) granting an increase of pension to Frances A. Shutts; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

5944. Petition of Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, Pa., expressing its opposition to Senate bill 1482, known as the Shipstead bill; and to House bill 7759, known as the LaGuardia bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5945. By Mr. BERGER: Memorial of the Benjamin Tallmadge Chapter, National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, of Milwaukee, Wis., approving Joint Resolution 11, establishing a flag code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5946. By Mr. BLOOM: Petition of A. W. Pulis, 470 West One hundred and forty-sixth Street, New York City, and hundreds of other citizens of New York, protesting against House bill 78, Lankford Sunday bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5947. By Mr. BOHN: Petition of citizens of Mackinaw City, Mich., not to pass Sunday observance bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5948. By Mr. BOYLAN: Petition of the Maritime Association of the Port of New York, urging upon Congress the desirability of the early enactment of House bill 9195, parcel-post agreement with Cuba; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5949. Also, resolution by Colonel Robert Loghry Post, No. 446, favoring the passage of Senate bill 1896 and House bill 6523; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

5950. By Mr. BULWINKLE: Petition of 38 citizens of Madison County, N. C., urging that immediate steps be taken to bring to a vote a Civil War pension bill carrying the rates proposed by the National Tribune; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE

TUESDAY, March 27, 1928

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Father of all, who art wisdom and beauty and goodness, whose spirit ever strives in the souls of men, we thank Thee that Thou hast made us heirs of Thy creative power throughout the ages and called us to share Thy burden of redemption. Renew in us, we pray, the gift of wonder, the joy of discovery, and the everlasting freshness of experience in every day's most quiet need. Purify our lives and sanctify our homes, that our land may be filled with abundance of peace. Touch with live coals from off the altar of devotion the lips of these Thy servants, that in word and power they may be prophets of the new dawn of righteousness when all mankind shall serve Thee and worship Thee in the beauty of holiness. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. THOMAS. I present a memorial from members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A memorial to the President and the Congress of the United States

A convention of the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations assembled at Ardmore, Okla., on the 23d day of March, 1928, realizing that a crisis in the affairs of their people has been brought about by the expiration of time and the laws of the Congress of the United States placing upon them burdens of citizenship which many of them are ill-prepared to meet, and aware that they have large property rights which are in process of settlement in which their interests are liable to be sacrificed, and realizing the pressing need of so many of their people to receive the money which upon a final just and fair settlement is due them as soon as possible, and in view of the fact that their tribal governments have been abolished and they now have no organized means of taking action to protect their interest nor to defray the expenses of so doing, have this day selected the following members of the Choctaw Nation, Dr. E. N. Wright, T. W. Hunter, Peter J. Hudson, Henry J. Bond, Mrs. Czarina C. Conlan, and the following members of the Chickasaw Nation: Walter Colbert, George W. Burris, Mrs. Estelle Ward, Ruford Bond, Franklin Bourland, as their representatives and delegates to visit the seat of government and the Congress of the United States at such times as they may deem fit and proper, to represent us upon all matters upon which Congress has power to legislate, and we respectfully ask to this end that Congress appropriate sufficient of the funds belonging to us to defray the expenses and provide for a per diem of such delegation, and that said delegation be officially recognized by all departments of the Government of the United States.

We earnestly memorialize Congress to this end and especially urge the Oklahoma delegation to aid us in every way possible to secure this representation and protect our interest.

Witness our hands at Ardmore, Okla., on this 23d day of March, 1928.

(Mrs.) CZARINA C. CONLAN,
Chairman of the Convention.
FRANKLIN BOURLAND,
Secretary of the Convention.

Mr. WATSON presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Indiana, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, STATE OF INDIANA,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, F. E. Schortemeier, secretary of state of the State of Indiana, hereby certify that the following and hereto attached is a full, true, and complete copy of enrolled Senate Joint Resolution 5, chapter 269, acts of seventy-fifth regular session of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana.

Joint resolution requesting Congress to prepare, support, and secure the enactment of legislation limiting and defining the jurisdiction of the United States courts in public utility and rate cases to the consideration after, not before, the courts of various States have considered the issues involved

Whereas Congress in 1816 created Indiana a sovereign and independent State, with full right to control its local affairs, and the corporations it created, and these would include especially utility corporations, furnishing water, light, gas, phone service, and other necessities; and

Whereas the growth and development of the State of Indiana and its public utilities reached such proportions in 1913 that it became necessary that careful and proper consideration of the rights of the public and the adequate protection of the public welfare made it necessary for the General Assembly of the State of Indiana to create a public service commission; and

Whereas certain utilities of this State, to wit, the Indianapolis Water Co., the Indiana Bell Telephone Co., the Citizens Gas Co. of Indianapolis, and the Central States Gas Co., of Vincennes, and the Greensburg Water Co., of Greensburg, petitioned the public service commission of the State of Indiana for increased rates for service to the public; and

Whereas such petitions were heard and valuations thereof determined and rates fixed by the Indiana Public Service Commission, which were, in the judgment of the commission, fair, reasonable, and just; and

Whereas said utilities, to wit, the Indianapolis Water Co., the Indiana Bell Telephone Co., the Citizens Gas Co., the Central States Gas Co., of Vincennes, and the Greensburg Water Co. did, immediately in each case, invoke the jurisdiction of the Federal court of the State of Indiana instead of taking their cases to our State courts, alleging that the valuation determined and rates fixed by the public service commission were confiscatory; and

Whereas the laws of the State of Indiana governing the public service commission provide for and authorize any utility or person interested in any rate order to appeal to the circuit or superior court of any county in this State, from any order of the commission, fixing such rate, or rates, or valuation; and

Whereas such utilities did, in each instance, invoke the jurisdiction of the Federal court without first having pursued the remedy provided by the laws of the State of Indiana giving the right to appeal to the State courts; and

Whereas in each instance the Federal court has fixed a higher valuation and a higher rate than that fixed by the public service commission; and

Whereas the right of the State of Indiana to control its local affairs with reference to such utilities was defeated and prevented; and

Whereas the Public Service Commission of Indiana fixed the valuation of the Indianapolis Water Co. at $16,455,000; the Indiana Bell Telephone Co. at $32,000,000; the Citizens Gas Co. at $12,000,000; the

Central States Gas Co., of Vincennes, at $482,845; and the Greensburg Water Co. at $225,000; and

Whereas thereafter at hearings in the Federal court of the district of Indiana the valuations of these public utilities were fixed at the following figures, to wit, the Indianapolis Water Co. at $19,000,000, resulting in increase of rates; Indiana Bell Telephone Co. at $36,000,000, resulting in increase of rates; Citizens Gas Co. at $16,000,000, increasing the rate for gas from 90 cents to $1.20; Central States Gas Co., of Vincennes, at $739,572; and the Greensburg Water Co. at $340,000, resulting in increase of rates: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Seventy-fifth General Assembly of the State of Indiana, That the United States Senators and Members of Congress, representing the State of Indiana, be, and they are hereby, respectfully petitioned to prepare, support, and their associates enact legislation limiting the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States in all cases that may be filed therein by public utilities seeking relief from orders issued by public service commissions to such utilities as have first exhausted all legal remedies given by the courts of the respective States; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted by the governor and the secretary of state to the Senators and Members of Congress representing the State of Indiana and the Senators and Congressmen of the other States of the United States.

F. HAROLD VAN ORMAN,
President of the Senate.
HARRY G. LESLIE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Filed March 11, 1927—12.02 p. m.

F. E. SCHORTEMEIER,
Secretary of State.

In testimony whereof I hereunto set my hand and affix the great seal of the State of Indiana. Done at my office in the city of Indianapolis this 12th day of March, A. D. 1928.

[SEAL.] F. E. SCHORTEMEIER,
Secretary of State.

Mr. EDGE presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Joint Resolution 4, Laws of 1928

STATE OF NEW JERSEY.

Joint resolution for the approval of the bill introduced in the Senate and House of the United States Federal Congress to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases, and to urge its passage by the Senate and House

Whereas a bill has been introduced in the Senate and House of the United States Federal Congress which has for its purpose granting to the States the power to legislate for self-protection against the products of convict labor from other States; and

Whereas the bill reads as follows:

"A bill to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined, wholly or in part, by convicts or prisoners, except paroled convicts or prisoners, or in any penal and/or reformatory institutions, transported into any State or Territory of the United States and remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage, shall, upon arrival and delivery in such State or Territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory to the same extent and in the same manner as though such goods, wares, and merchandise had been manufactured, produced, or mined in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced in the original package or otherwise."

And

Whereas this bill will empower the States that do not permit the products manufactured in their penal institutions to be placed on the public market, to protect themselves from the products of penal institutions of other States, and to protect free labor which is now and for many years has been suffering from the competition of products made by the inmates of penal institutions: Be it

Resolved by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, The said bill be approved and recommended for enactment into law by the Federal Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Federal Congress and to Representatives of the State of New Jersey in the United States Senate and House of Representatives.

Approved March 15, 1928.

Mr. EDGE also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the Council of Affiliated Crafts of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Navy Yard, praying for the adoption of the so-called Dallinger amendment to the naval building bill, and especially that eight cruisers be built in the navy yards, and that two of them be constructed at the Philadelphia Navy Yard, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas presented a letter from E. F. Stewart, 10 West Sixty-first Street, New York City, N. Y., relative to certain air mail contracts, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a resolution of the Arkansas Bankers' Association, protesting against the passage of measures amending section 5219 of the United States Revised Statutes, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. WARREN presented a resolution adopted by the Lions Club, of Kemmerer, Wyo., favoring amendment of the rural post roads act so as to authorize the appropriation of $15,000,000 for roads and trails in the national forests, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Riverton, Wyo., favoring the passage of legislation providing for aided and directed settlement on Federal reclamation projects, which were referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

Mr. DENEEN presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Illinois, praying for the passage of legislation granting increased pensions to Civil War veterans and their widows, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts presented letters and papers in the nature of petitions numerously signed by sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting war, which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. NORRIS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 3151) to limit the jurisdiction of district courts of the United States, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 626) thereon.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2612) for the relief of Mary Ellen Tiefenthaler, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 627) thereon.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 217) providing for the remission of duties on certain cattle which have crossed the boundary line into foreign countries, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 628) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3095) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Hellenic Republic to the United State of America and of the differences arising out of the tripartite loan agreement of February 10, 1918, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 629) thereon.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2655) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Atlantic Works of Boston, Mass., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 630) thereon.

Mr. WATERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1275) to create an additional judge for the southern district of Florida, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 631) thereon.

Mr. KEYES, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 359) authorizing the presentation of the iron gates in West Executive Avenue between the grounds of the State, War, and Navy Building and the White House to the Ohio State Archeological and Historical Society for the memorial gateways into the Spiegel Grove State Park, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 632) thereon.

He also, from the same committee to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 2004. An act authorizing the paving of the Federal strip known as International Street, adjacent to Nogales, Ariz. (Rept. No. 633); and

H. R. 7472. An act to grant to the town of Cicero, Cook County, Ill., an easement over certain Government property (Rept. No. 634).

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. GREENE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on this day that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 2317. An act continuing for one year the powers and authority of the Federal Radio Commission under the radio act of 1927, and for other purposes;

S. 3007. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent to the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions for a certain tract of land on the Mescalero Reservation, N. Mex.; and

S. 3355. An act to authorize the cancellation of the balance due on a reimbursable agreement for the sale of cattle to certain Rosebud Indians.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 3786) to amend the corrupt practices act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 3787) for the relief of Barney Thompson; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3788) granting a pension to Essie Horton; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 3789) authorizing negotiations and providing for the construction, maintenance, and operation of an interoceanic canal over Nicaraguan territory, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

By Mr. DILL:

A bill (S. 3790) granting a pension to S. G. Leach; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana:

A bill (S. 3791) to aid the Grand Army of the Republic in its Memorial Day services, May 30, 1928; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BLAINE (by request):

A bill (S. 3792) for the relief of Joseph Abel; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3793) authorizing the St. Croix Interstate Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the St. Croix River on the Grantsburg Road; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GOODING:

A bill (S. 3794) for the relief of R. E. Hansen; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. METCALF:

A bill (S. 3795) granting an increase of pension to Corella C. Bowers (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 3796) for the relief of Lieut. Allen Hoar, Civil Engineer Corps, United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 3797) to amend section 2 of the act of Congress approved July 3, 1926, entitled "An act to amend sections 5 and 6 of the act of Congress making appropriations to provide for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, approved July 1, 1902, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 3798) for the incorporation of the United Spanish War Veterans; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MOSES:

A bill (S. 3799) authorizing the appropriation of certain money; and

A bill (S. 3800) to carry out provisions of the Pan American Postal Convention concerning franking privileges for diplomatic officers in Pan American countries and the United States; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. SHORTRIDGE:

A bill (S. 3801) to correct the naval record of Robert Hofman; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. DENEEN:

A bill (S. 3802) granting a pension to Hattie Bell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS:

A bill (S. 3803) granting an increase of pension to Sarah C. Morris; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts:

A bill (S. 3804) granting an increase of pension to Sarah M. Law; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PINE:

A bill (S. 3805) to amend the interstate commerce act affecting electric railways; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

A bill (S. 3806) granting a pension to Maggie Stroud; and

A bill (S. 3807) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Molder; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BROUSSARD:

A bill (S. 3808) to authorize the construction of a temporary railroad bridge across Bogue Chitto River at a point in township 5 south, range 6 east, St. Tammany Parish, La.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 3809) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States or the district courts of the United States to hear, adjudicate, and enter judgment on the claim of Roy A. Knabenshue against the United States for the use or manufacture of an invention of Roy A. Knabenshue, covered by letters patent No. 858875, issued by the Patent Office of the United States under date of July 2, 1907; to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT TO FLOOD CONTROL BILL

Mr. McKELLAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to Senate bill 3740, the flood control bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

LOWER COLORADO RIVER BASIN

Mr. WATERMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 728) to provide for the construction of works for the protection and development of the lower Colorado River Basin, for the approval of the Colorado River compact, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DECORATIONS BY FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS

Mr. TYDINGS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 5898) to authorize certain officers of the United States Navy and Marine Corps to accept such decorations, orders, and medals as have been tendered them by foreign governments in appreciation of services rendered, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

FARMERS' PRODUCE MARKET IN THE DISTRICT

Mr. TYDINGS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8298) authorizing acquisition of a site for the farmers' produce market, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

NEED OF PROTECTION OF PROPERTY IN CHICAGO

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the morning papers contain the startling announcement that the home of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DENEEN] in Chicago was bombed last night. I simply want to express the wish and the hope that Senators who are influential with the President will prevail upon him to withdraw some of the marines from Nicaragua and send them to Chicago. It seems that American property is safer in Nicaragua than it is in Chicago. Of course, we want to use the marines to protect the property of American citizens. I trust, therefore, that instead of sending the entire Army and Navy to Nicaragua we may keep them at home to protect the property of citizens of that great patriotic and windy city on the lake.

FARM RELIEF

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial which appeared in the Chicago Tribune on March 12, 1928, entitled "The farmers simplify the issue."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

THE FARMERS SIMPLIFY THE ISSUE

The new McNary-Haugen bill has been reported to the Senate with the indorsement of its Committee on Agriculture. The bill has the support of most of the organized farmers of the Nation. The changes made in the bill since it was vetoed at the last session of Congress indicate anything but the doctrinaire attitude toward their problems which farmers have been accused of maintaining. They have modified their bill to meet the criticisms of the administration.

The farm leaders have had to face two kinds of opposition. Some of their opponents have thought, though they have not always said it, that nothing should be done by the Federal Government to relieve agricultural depression. It is that viewpoint which has prompted the farmers to suggest from time to time the repeal of the tariffs on manufactured goods. They have said that if the Government can exert itself on behalf of manufacturers it can exert itself on behalf of the farmers, too, without doing violence to constitutional principles. The farmers' position we believe unassailable. More than that, it is to their credit that, though they may have met one rebuff after another, they have continued to press for positive relief rather than negative and vindictive action against the industrial and financial interests which have opposed them. The threats against the tariff on manufactured goods thus far have been made largely for rhetorical effect, but there is a limit to patience. It is hardly conceivable that the farmers will continue to take punishment indefinitely without striking back.

Those who conscientiously wish to do something to improve the position of agriculture in this country have presented two programs. The President and Secretary of Agriculture Jardine believe in cooperative marketing. They think the Government's credit can be loaned to the farmers' cooperatives to enable them to dispose of the crops systematically without severe price depressions at harvest time and without violent fluctuations of price between lean years and fat years.

The organized farmers have maintained that cooperation alone is not enough. They have evolved the plan of equalization fees to enable a Federal farm board to remove the surplus crops from the country and thus permit the rest of the crop to be sold in the United States at a tariff-protected price. The farmers say, with much reason, that the tariff at present does not protect them, because their crops are bought at the world price instead of the tariff-protected price. The successive McNary-Haugen bills have been concerned with setting up the machinery for removing the surpluses.

The new McNary bill departs from the predecessors in this respect: It withholds the operation of the equalization-fee principle until after ordinary cooperative marketing, as recommended by the administration, has been tried without success. Only if cooperation fails in achieving what its friends say it can not fail to accomplish is the other method to be attempted.

With this new bill the farmers have placed themselves in a strong position. Advocates of cooperation can not oppose the bill and continue to state that cooperation is a certain remedy for farm depression; indeed, exactly to the extent they have confidence in cooperation they must lend support to the bill. Opponents of the earlier McNary bills could do so either as friends of cooperation or as opponents of farm relief of any sort. Those who oppose this bill will write themselves down as opponents of all forms of farm relief.

We do not mean to suggest that the bill as drafted is beyond bettering. The farmers will welcome advice from economists, financiers, and others trained in such matters as they have hitherto. They will pay little attention to their so-called friends who have nothing to say but "No".

THE MISSISSIPPI LEVEE SYSTEM

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a very interesting article on the Mississippi levee system written by Hon. Jeff Truly, of Fayette, Miss., a former member of the supreme court of my State and a very able lawyer.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRULY SAYS ALL-LEVEE SYSTEM FAILURE—SPILLWAYS ONLY TRUE SOLUTION RIVER PROBLEM—SUGGESTS NATURAL OUTLETS FORMED ON ST. FRANCIS, ATCHAFALAYA, LA FOURCHE, IBERVILLE, SMALLER STREAMS—RIPARIAN PROPERTY SHOULD BE PROTECTED—SAYS COUNTRY ON EAST BANK OF MISSISSIPPI FROM VICKSBURG TO BATON ROUGE SHOULD BE EITHER PROTECTED OR BOUGHT

The following is an article written by Hon. Jeff Truly, of Fayette, Miss., who during his lifetime has made a study of the river and river conditions and recites his experiences and the knowledge he has obtained. He shows that the all-levee system is a failure, urges a system of spillways and protection for the riparian landowners on the east bank of the Mississippi River, where no levees have been constructed and whose lands are practically yearly overflowed.

The article will be of interest to the people of this section and to authorities throughout the country, as it applies to the territory between Memphis and the mouth of the Mississippi:

ANOTHER SIDE TO THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER LEVEE QUESTION—THE OUTSIDE

In the great waste of words which has flowed by reason of the flood disaster in the Mississippi River will you not allow this communication a deliverance through the channel of your columns? Not because of any hope that it will have a present-day effect or influence; but in after years when the columns of your paper shall be searched some seeker after truth will read this communication and say, "Lo, another Saul stood among the prophets, but they knew him not." Then will come my reward though I be not here to enjoy it.

If this article shall be printed (which is hoped), and if it shall come to the attention of those directly concerned (which is problematical), it will be received with different emotions and produce widely differing reactions. By the river engineers and their satelites it will be dismissed with derision and contempt as being the opinion of a "layman" and hence unworthy of attention. Their mental attitude seems to be: "We are the people and wisdom dies with us." By the levee contractors and the attendant horde of parasites its facts will be disputed and its conclusions bitterly denied. Their slogan being: "We who make our living off the levees must stand by the levees." But it may perchance fall under the observation of the average well-informed taxpayer in the North, East, and West, or that portion of the South which is not the direct beneficiary of the levee so-called system. It may cause such a one to wonder why, after 48 years of governmental trial and supervision, the latter end of the levee system is worse than its beginning. After an admitted expenditure by the Mississippi River Commission (not including the present flood) of $92,783,645.50 for navigation, he may ask himself the question: "What benefit has been received, directly or indirectly, from such a vast outlay of money?" After an expenditure for protection or flood control of $81,686,285.56, the inquiry may occur to him to ascertain to what state of perfection this vaunted "flood control" has reached.

It will be recalled that when the Mississippi River Commission was first established in 1879 it was with the distinct inhibition that "no money should be expended for protecting private property." The purpose of the Mississippi River Commission, its only purpose, was for the "improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River." What has been the effect to this date of this "improvement of navigation"? Let the facts speak for themselves. Not the theories of engineers. Not the statements of levee contractors, but the facts of the record itself in its present visible condition. This stream, the "Father of Waters," upon whose bosom floated a commerce unequaled, a passenger traffic the like of which was never known, in palatial steamers almost beyond compare, has now, since the Mississippi River Commission undertook its improvement, found "all its future course bound to shallows and to miseries." In any ordinary low water there are shallow places in the Mississippi River between Vicksburg and Baton Rouge where the cautious pilot has trouble crossing with a light-draft steamer. One such point may be found in front of what is known as Buena Vista or Spit Head Island, just south of Kemp Bend Levee, the breaking of which at this writing is momentarily feared. Another point is approximately 3 miles below Natchez. These two places are specifically mentioned so that any investigating committee of Congress, can, by inquiring of any river pilot, ascertain the accuracy of the assertion. What says the engineers? Is it a mere fallacy, the opinion of a layman, that the bed of the Mississippi River has been raised by the deposit of sediment? The atrocious crime of being a "layman," I shall neither deny, nor attempt to palliate, but shall content myself with the hope that I am one of those who, after a personal experience and knowledge of river conditions for a half century, possess human intelligence sufficient to know that if the stream, upon which at one time the navies of the world could float in safety, has now become so shallow that it can almost be waded, one of two things has happened: Either the bottom of the stream has raised, or the top of the water has lowered. In either event the result is the same.

The river is now, in average low water, not navigable throughout its entire length except for vessels of different kinds of very shallow draft. This, however, of itself, is not important; for while the navigation has not been improved, the traffic on the river has itself become practically abolished. Consult, if you please, the maritime column of any daily paper—your own—dealing with vessels on the Mississippi River, and you will find at this writing that between Cairo and New Orleans, a distance of practically 1,700 miles, there are, exclusive of boats now engaged in rescue work, only 12 barges or tugs transporting freight, and two stern-wheel boats carrying local freight and passengers, if any! What a sorry spectacle this is as the result of the "improvement of navigation" and the increase of transportation to the citizens who, living on the banks of the Mississippi, can remember the stately Lee, the swift Natchez, the beautiful Pargoud, and other steamboats of that class and kind! "But," says the engineers, "this is a layman's opinion, and not only has navigation been improved, but the railroads have destroyed the transportation." We note that even now many beautiful steamers, filled with passengers, ply upon the Hudson, though railroads are far more numerous in that prosperous section. But, enough. What has caused the decrease in transportation or, properly speaking, traffic is immaterial. The fact is that the navigation of the river has been made more difficult by either the lowering of the water level or the raising of the river bed. In 1913 the river commission reported that the idea of the river bed being raised was the outcome of a similar error with reference to the river Po, in Italy, an error which the Mississippi River Commission proclaimed had been dissipated for several hundred years. With due deference we would refer to the last edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica, to the articles on the rivers Po, Hwang Ho, Piave, and Mississippi, where the statement is expressly made that the beds of these streams are being raised above the level of the surrounding country by the construction and attempted maintenance of levees. We cite this not that we have the temerity to dispute the conclusion of the engineers of the Mississippi River Commission, but so that the public generally may understand what an inaccurate and unauthoritative work the great Encyclopedia Britannica is, so that it may no longer be accepted as the final word upon questions of information generally.

Having successfully (?), by the levee system, improved the navigation of the Mississippi River until there is very little traffic and still less navigation, the idea upon which was based the necessity for the existence and continuance of the levee system was suddenly shifted from "improvement of navigation" to "protection from flood," a deliberate and direct about face. At the outset, prohibited from building levees for the protection of private property, now, basing their claim to continued existence and operations upon the necessity of protecting private property from flood damage. Consistency is a long-famed jewel, but it, like the Encyclopedia Britannica, must be cast aside should it run counter to the decisions or purpose of the engineers and the beneficiaries of the levee system.

Having decided, and persuaded the Congress to decide, that "flood control" should take the place of "improvement of navigation," forthwith the slogan became "More levees and bigger levees," and this we still hear from every engineer connected with the river service, repeated o'er and o'er again amid the thunder of breaking levees and the rush of flooding waters.

Even before the vaunted levees have ceased to crumble, without definite knowledge of the extent of damage, without investigation of changed conditions, a pronouncement of the future policy is stated, "More levees and bigger levees." The syllables sonorously sound and every little "Blanche and Tray and Sweetheart" barks in unison.

If the further prosecution of the work along the Mississippi River be left to the engineers alone, then year by year the taxpayers will see a continuing effort in this direction, and in this direction alone. "More levees and bigger levees." How many more levees? How much bigger levees? Remember that the standard grade of levees tentatively declared by the Mississippi River Commission prior to 1893 was 48 feet on the gauge at Vicksburg. About 1912, after that flood, the standard was raised to 52 feet. The flood in 1927, despite the ruinous crevasses, went above 58 feet. The Mississippi River Commission has not, and we dare assert will not, venture to fix a minimum to which it may be necessary to raise the levees unless other means be also adopted.

"More levees and bigger levees" is the united slogan of the engineers and levee contractors. "More levees and bigger levees" means more contracts, more money to be paid to contractors, more money to be spent by taxpayers, more burdens to be imposed upon landowners and citizens generally, and no more protection. However, this slogan is no longer received with unanimity even by those who have been the chief beneficiaries of the levee system (not including the engineers and contractors). Already there is a discord in the harmony. Some of the more thoughtful leaders who live behind the levees, being neither engineers, contractors, nor politicians, view the future with alarm by reason of the experience of the past and fear that "More levees and bigger levees" of themselves mean simply more taxes, more backwater, more impoverishment of soil, and heavier burdens to bear. So they are groping for some other either complete or supplemental solution of the problem.

The thoughtful taxpayers understand that the building of "More levees and bigger levees" means heavy additional expenditures of money, and they wonder where the necessary funds are to be procured, not from the individual landowners, because already the ad valorem and levee taxes in every levee district are burdensome to the highest figure. Not by bond issues, because the fiscal records show that every levee district is already bonded almost, if not quite, to the point of saturation. The cost of building and maintaining levees has imposed burdens not only upon the living but upon generations yet unborn. No source, therefore, remains from which funds can be secured except the National Government. It is safe to say that if the suggested project of setting the levees farther back from the river banks so as to give a wider channel be adopted, thus necessitating a new line of levees that neither the States nor the levee districts will be able to assume the financial obligation. With the question of whether the National Government will now take over the construction and maintenance of the leeves for the protection of individual property, those people living on the east bank of the river are concerned no further than the bare expectation of also receiving similar protection.

Therefore, if there be discord among those who live behind the levees as to the ultimate benefit of a system of levees alone, what must be the mental attitude of those who live and own lands on the river front, but in a section which has borne the burdens of the levee system with none of even its transitory benefits?

Even to the well-informed citizen living any distance from the levees in States not adjacent to the Mississippi River the term "levee" conjures up the idea of a ridge of dirt paralleling the banks of the Mississippi River on each side. Such is far from the truth. From Sloughs Landing, above Memphis, on the east bank of the Mississippi River, to approximately the Tennessee-Mississippi State line, a distance of 200 miles, and from Vicksburg to Baton Rouge, also on the east side of the Mississippi River, through the States of Mississippi and Louisiana, a distance of approximately 250 miles, the engineers have adopted the foothills of Tennessee, Mississippi, and Louisiana as the levees on the east bank of the river. Speaking solely for that territory lying between Natchez and Vicksburg let us be pardoned if we briefly recite the condition to which the ill-fated levee system has brought us.

Before any governmental levees were built the land on the Mississippi side, from Vicksburg south, was from 7 to 14 feet higher than the land on the Louisiana side. Before the levees were built this entire section was fertile plantations, prosperous settlements, happy homes, and thriving towns. Here the adventurous English, the Spanish, and pioneers from the Colonies found an asylum. Here virile Americans from the forests primeval carved their homes. Here stately mansions reigned over fertile fields. Here civilization in the great Southwest found its first abiding place. Here floods were unknown save in epochal years such as 1797, 1844, 1884, and 1893. But now, under the ruinous levee system, what is the condition? Where the city of Grand Gulf was once located is now on the opposite side of the Mississippi River. The town of Rodney, which once nestled on the very bank of the river, is now 6 miles inland. Where plantations were, caving banks are found, and at other places long and barren sand bars jut out into the stream and impede and almost prevent navigation. Here in this naturally favored section floods now are of almost yearly occurrence, and no man can be sure at the commencement of a crop season that even the land itself may not be caved into the river before the fruits of his toil are harvested. Here fertile plantations have gone back, not to the primeval forests, but to briars and brambles and jungle and undergrowth, and here upon the sites where stately mansions once stood is but the débris from the ravages of floods.

But let their own records publish the truth of the vast changes in the river bed and banks. Contrast chart No. 53 of the Mississippi River Commission, made in 1878–1880, with the current "field sheets" covering the same stretch of river, and see "what wonders" the levee system "hath wrought."

When it was the theory of the Mississippi River Commission that the levees would "improve the navigation of the stream," this section from Vicksburgh to Baton Rouge vainly appeared before the appropriate committees in the United States Congress and vainly plead that if the navigation was to be improved it should be improved throughout the length of the stream, and that no stream would be navigable if 258 miles of its front were left unimproved and unnavigable. The Mississippi River Commission, when the beloved Judge Taylor adorned that body, recognized justice of the claim and prepared a memorial which set forth the injustice, the damage, which was inflicted upon the rightful owners and the devastation which had been dealt by a governmental agency itself by appropriating these lands as a part of the levee system. Vain, all in vain. The soi-distant statesmen whose electorate lived behind the levees, the engineers themselves, knew the maintenance of the levee system an impossibility, turned deaf ears to all appeals for protection or compensation.

While, therefore, the levee system to this date has been a failure in "improving navigation" of the stream, has been a failure in assisting traffic upon the stream, has been a failure in protecting people behind the levee, it has been an absolute success in bringing want and ruin to the landowners on a frontage of 258 miles of the river. We dare affirm that there is no well-informed man who will to-day assert that the levee system is a success. Of course, if this were but the expression of opinion of a poor and ignorant layman, such as the writer, it would receive no attention, even did it merit consideration. But fortunately, there is other foundation than that. We quote from Col. John R. Fordyce, of the United States Army, an engineer of eminence, who was a major in the Engineer Corps during the World War and was the builder of Camp Pike and other places.

This engineer says: "It must be evident to the dumbest human being that the levee system has failed." We believe that this language, so exactly quoted, is sufficiently broad to include even the engineers and the levee contractors and their parasites. Other engineers, well-informed journalists, men of standing and observation, have now practically agreed that a system of levees alone is not sufficient.

"More levees and bigger levees" is the slogan of the river engineers. How many more levees? The entire river front of the Mississippi River (with slight exceptions rendered necessary by large inflowing streams) is leveed from Cairo for 1,800 miles south on both sides of the river save where the foothills on the eastern bank of the stream have been adopted as the only immutable levees yet built, and they by Divine skill.

How much bigger levees? Not long since, speaking on the subject of bigger levees, a writer in the New York Herald Tribune said: "After the floods in 1922 the citizens of New Orleans 'awakened,' as one of their Congressmen put it, to the most appalling situation that has presented itself in a long while, declared that they had already built their levees to the maximum height admitted by the character of the foundation soil, and yet felt they had no assurance against the river's overtopping them in another big rise." An apprehension which was well founded, for in five years thereafter, after the Mississippi River Commission had again established a grade, the city of New Orleans at this moment is trembling with anxiety although the strong hand of law has been invoked to make an "artificial crevasse" in what appears to be one of the few sound levees on the river. The engineers having built a levee must now destroy it to save New Orleans from the effect of their own engineering skill.

"The King of France with twice ten thousand men Marched up the hill, and then marched down again."

Alice in Wonderland could scarcely rival this.

Again says the writer quoted: "It is impossible accurately to calculate the height which would be necessary at time of maximum high water to restrain the river, supposing that it and its tributaries were completely leveed and that there were no breaks. The engineers can not be certain that when all the levees are built up to the present 'standard grade,' a rise may not come along which will 'overtop' them." These words written just before the disastrous crevasse occurred are most prophetic of the wisdom and foresight of the writer, Mr. Walter Millis.

So the question recurs, if "more levees and bigger levees" be the ultimate of the engineering skill, where can you build any "more" levees, and how much larger are the "bigger" levees to be? In the territory of New Orleans, so this Congressman has said, the burden upon the soft "made-land" is already as much as it will stand without sinking of its own weight. Hence in that locality at least "bigger levees" can not be built and "more levees" are not needed. Nor can "more levees" be built in the Mississippi Delta. There were levees which immediately before this flood were proudly boasted to be 4 to 6 feet "above standard," and yet broke in their supposedly soundest part. What "more levees" can be built than one which extends from the high ground at Memphis to the mouth of the Yazoo River? Assuming, however, that "more levees" could be built and that "bigger levees" could be maintained, what must be the ultimate result unless this levee system extends to the tributaries and to the tributaries of the tributaries? Take the Mississippi Delta and look at one of the soil maps issued by the Department of Agriculture of the State of Mississippi in 1924. See how the Yazoo River runs practically north and south, starting with its confluent tributaries near the top of the Mississippi Delta, skirting the foothills to its confluence with the Mississippi River above Vicksburg. Look at the innumerable tributaries of that stream upon which clusters the little towns and the fertile plantations, all subject to overflow either from the backwater of the Mississippi River or from the rain water and surface water of the territory drained by its tributaries. To levee the Mississippi River carries with it either the flooding of the lands through the tributaries by the backwater from the main stream, or the leveeing also of the tributaries themselves, and so on ad libitum, ad infinitum.

While vociferously protestinug their adherence to an implicit confidence in the "more levees and bigger levees" theory, in point of truth have not the levee engineers themselves acknowledged the levee plan alone to be a failure? If levees alone were a success, there would be no necessity for artificial outlets to be made below New Orleans or elsewhere. The acknowledgement of the levee engineers that it was necessary for the protection of New Orleans to destroy their own handiwork by creating spillways speaks more loudly than their verbal protestations. Can not the matter be fairly stated in this form? Is any outlet necessary? The engineers themselves answer, "Yes," and themselves create an outlet. If one outlet be beneficial, would not two outlets be more beneficial? The answer is "Yes," and the engineers themselves have created three separate outlets below New Orleans. If outlets be necessary to relieve the pressure on the levee and two outlets be better than one outlet, would not a sufficient number of outlets properly located relieve all pressure of the flood? There can be but one answer to the last inquiry, but that answer the engineers refuse to give.

After 30 years, like the sinner in the hymn, the people on the east bank of the Mississippi River in the territory mentioned, "as on through the darkness they wandered, not a ray of light could they see," until in the last few days the president of the Mississippi River Commission is quoted as saying that "Levees stronger, higher, and farther back from the river banks to give the river more space will be recommended to Congress"; and "It might be necessary to make a new mouth for the Mississippi below New Orleans to let the water out faster into the Gulf of Mexico." This announcement, if the president of the commission be accurately quoted, gives a gleam of hope like the rainbow which shone upon the Biblical flood to those who live behind the levees as well as those whose cause is here presented and who have been destroyed by the levees.

"Build the levees farther back from the stream so as to give more space for the water." Bear in mind again that the levees upon the Mississippi River are not built on the bank of the stream. In many instances they are already some distance back, and in several instances, such as the levee at Millikens Bend, Villa Clara, and other points, there has within recent years been built and rebuilt each time farther back from the river not less than three separate lines of levees. The levees are built back from the river, and the river caves back to the levee. The levee is built back farther, fertile plowed lands are thrown out, and these dissolve like the foundation of the house built upon sand. Build the levees farther back from the river, and what becomes of Friars Point, Rosedale, Greenville, and of the other fair cities which are now almost lapped by the waters of the stream? Also remember how much space the waters of the Mississippi River now have between the foothills on the Mississippi side and the levees on the Louisiana side. Take the break at Winter Quarters or Hard Times. What width of channel had the river at that place? How many miles was there covered level with the surface of the stream extending from the levee which crumbled to the everlasting hills of God? Over land and property which the Government has, without compensation, appropriated as a part of the levee system? From Vicksburg south, in time of flood such as the present, even where the levees stand, the Mississippi River has unimpeded sweep for a width rarely less than 3 miles and in many places more than 20! At this writing, in this county, there are fertile lands, which were in cultivation, now under 14 feet of water, covered by the direct stream from the Mississippi River not less than 15 to 20 miles from the real bank of the stream. So that on the east bank of the river the levees can not be put back; and if they be moved on the opposite side, the towns will themselves be left out to the mercy of the waters.

This being true, and every statement herein can be demonstrated by any impartial "layman" of average human intelligence who will make a personal inspection of the river, its beds, and its banks—this being true, what then is the remedy, if any? Upon this territory the writer ventures with fear and trembling. Fools rush in where even some engineers fear to tread. Of course, the ideal solution would be abolition of levees, save only now, as a sop to Cerberus, because of established conditions, levees to protect the towns which are already built. Then, if this were possible, the annual inundation could come and go, leaving its fertilizing sediment upon the lands, renewing their verdure and strength with each spring. Coming as gently as does the dew from heaven upon the place beneath. Bringing no ruin, no want, no waste, no desolation. Coming and going in time for planting, and each crop raised by the fertilizing effect of the soil deposited on the lands. The annual overflow being complete before February 1 and leaving before May 1. Whereas cotton can be safely planted until June 1, and corn some weeks later. Then, indeed, would the lands of the Mississippi River rival and exceed the boasted Nile, and the annual inundation of the river would be welcomed with thanksgiving instead of being dreaded as an avenging power. We recognize that so absolute a remedy is now, under existing conditions, impossible. Because of the investment of property, houses and residences now built upon the faith of the levees. Another and more insuperable objection is that if you build no levees the engineers and contractors would have no jobs. Therefore levees are inevitable and will be continued.

What, then, is even a partial remedy? Undoubtedly that which was established by nature itself, or by nature's god: That of outlets or spillways. So that when the river reaches a certain stage the water flows off through already prepared outlets for that purpose.

But where should the outlets, spillways, "new mouths" be located? What engineering skill could choose the best location? They have already been chosen by the Supreme Architect and the only All-Wise Engineer of the world. (No reflection is intended upon the levee engineers by this statement.) "The Lord sitteth upon the flood; yea, the Lord sitteth a king forever." Where are these outlets? This article does not attempt to deal with conditions above Memphis. South of Memphis the outlets or natural reservoirs are well known and were established and operative with beneficial effect in reducing or preventing floods before the United States had control of this territory. The first outlet or reservoir was the St. Francis Basin in Arkansas. The second outlet is the Atchafalaya. The third outlet is the Iberville River on the east bank below Baton Rouge. The fourth outlet is the La Fourche, and then an innumerable number of shoal streams below New Orleans, too shallow to be of any great benefit. Of course, the higher up the stream the spillway, the greater the benefit. Four "new mouths" for the Mississippi "to let the water out faster into the Gulf."

It will be of interest to know that as long as the St. Francis Basin was open as a reservoir or spillway the strain upon the levees then existing was small. Notwithstanding levees elsewhere, even the flood upon the outlying land subsided in time generally for the crops to be planted. Taking ancient history as our guide, the most available (may we say God-made?) outlet south of Baton Rouge is that of the Iberville River into Lake Maurepas, thence through Lake Pontchartrain into the Gulf. This was a navigable stream during the British occupancy, and through it was transported much of the freight of the earlier days to Mobile, and thus diverted from New Orleans. The provincial records of this section will show that by an expenditure of less than £2,000, represented by the labor of 50 slaves for six months, the Iberville River was cleared of débris and all accumulations and became a stream capable of navigation both to and from the Mississippi Sound and the Gulf of Mexico.

As the result of the opening of this stream, on one occasion, the British records show, "the water fell 26 feet in three days." The Atchafalaya carried off an even greater volume. The records further show that the Iberville was used as a route for travel by small vessels until many years after the United States acquired Louisiana.

So much for the effect of outlets when given a fair chance to operate. And these outlets were not leveed and, having a more rapid flow, did not silt up as badly as does the Mississippi River itself at its mouth and at other points along its course.

We submit, therefore, that the all-levee system is predestined to failure, and incident to failure is bankruptcy to those who live behind the levee and ruin and desolation to those who live outside of the levees.

We living on the east bank of the Mississippi River are not combating any movement which may be determined upon for the best interests of the country at large. We only ask for even-handed justice. If the levees-alone system be continued and the foothills which bound our lands be adopted as a part of the levee system, we ask that the property so appropriated for public use be condemned and paid for. If the outlet system be adopted, we ask that an equal immunity from overflows shall be accorded to our lands, or that they shall be paid for if appropriated by the Government. If the National Government assumes the construction and maintenance of the levee system throughout the entire Mississippi Valley, we ask that our lands either be protected or, if used for public purposes, be paid for at a fair value. We seek no alms. We ask no exorbitant price. We share in no graft. We want justice. Nothing more. We do say, and we earnestly insist, however, that if our lands are to be appropriated as a part of the river bed, so as to render possible the even remote chance of maintaining the levee system intact, that a great and paternal Government should not take our lands, our property, and appropriate it for the public good without making due compensation therefor. We ask only calm consideration of our cause and its adjudication at the bar of public justice; for an announcement that we as well as all other citizens of our great Government are entitled to equal rights and equal protection, and that no private property should be taken for public use without due compensation made. We appeal to the conscience of public opinion, knowing full well no help will come from the river engineers. If left to their sole and uncontrolled decision, their esprit de corps will dictate "More levees and bigger levees," and the public be d———. "Ephraim is joined to his idols. Let him alone."

But hope springs eternal. While the waters designed to be a helpful servant have by improper handling been changed into a destroying monster, and while over the wastes of desolation the pronouncement of the engineers, the chorus of the levee contractors, and the orotund echoes of near-statemen with cavernous vacuity of original ideas, still proclaim that "more levees and bigger levees" is the only solution, yet the still small voice of common sense is being broadcast through the editorial columns of the great newspapers and is making an impress upon the reason of the people at large. That voice utters a truth not to be disputed in the light of experience and the present catastrophe. The solution is "fewer levees and bigger spillways."

It may be that this article has a tinge of bitterness. If so, we pray you pardon it. It is not so intended. Certainly, not toward the burdened taxpayers or the suffering tenantry, whose joint misery we also share. Although it would be excusable if slight resentment be felt toward some politicians and officeholders who, "clothed with a little brief authority," have upon occasion thoroughly justified the Shakespearean statement: "Still, naught has been set down in malice." Remember, that our lands by nature are higher and safer from flood than those which have been protected.

Remember, that for 30 years through organized committees the residents and landowners on the east bank of the river vainly protested against building levees elsewhere which were destroying their lands and property. Remember, that for the last 15 years and more this same people have appeared on divers and sundry occasions before the Mississippi River Commission and before the proper committees in both Houses of Congress and asked for either protection or compensation for the lands which the Government has appropriated to public use. Complaints and pleas alike proved unavailing. So now we make this final plea to the bar of public conscience. If it be found necessary to take our private property and devote it to the general welfare, we shall not complain and ask only for its value. We do, however, protest against being sacrificed to make a Delta holiday.

Prepared on behalf of the riparian landowners on the east of the Mississippi River.

JEFF TRULY, Fayette, Miss.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order for the consideration of unobjected bills.

NAMING OF HIGHWAYS

The bill (S. 1182) to provide for the naming of certain highways through State and Federal cooperation, and for other purposes, was announced as first in order.

Mr. BLAINE. Let that bill go over.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that bill has been on the calendar for about five weeks. I am just curious enough to know at this time who made the objection to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] made the objection.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I would be very glad to take the matter up with the Senator from Oregon at any time at his convenience.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill will go over.

DEVELOPMENT OF AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK

The bill (S. 1285) to provide for the further development of agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of the act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862, and all acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the last time the bill was called on the calendar I asked the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], who introduced the measure, whether he had received certain information as to the bill, and he then asked that it go over in order, as I understand, that the information might be obtained.

Mr. CAPPER. I again ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in discussing the matter with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] this morning we agreed that a meeting of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry should be called for to-morrow to consider a certain amendment to the bill to be offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD], and pending the execution of that understanding I think the bill should go over without prejudice for to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

FALSE INFORMATION REGARDING CRIMES IN THE DISTRICT

The bill (S. 2277) relating to giving false information regarding the commission of crime in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I notice that on yesterday by an overwhelming vote the House of Representatives defeated a bill similar to this, and I move that this bill be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF NEWTON, MASS.

The bill (S. 2447) for the relief of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Newton, Mass., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of this bill.

Mr. GILLETT rose.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, if the Senator from Massachusetts desires to explain the bill, I shall be glad to have him do so.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] made the report on the bill, and I suggest that he explain it.

Mr. KING. Until we can have more time for the consideration of the bill, I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over under objection.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1476) for the relief of Porter Bros. & Biffle and certain other citizens, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2524) for the relief of Josephine Doxey was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 61) granting an increase of pension to Louise A. Wood was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1271) to more effectively meet the obligations of the United States under the migratory bird treaty with Great Britain by lessening the dangers threatening migratory game birds from drainage and other causes, by the acquisition of areas of land and of water to furnish in perpetuity reservations for the adequate protection of such birds, and by providing funds for the establishment of such areas, their maintenance and improvement, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. That bill is the unfinished business. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CITY OF NEW YORK

The bill (S. 459) for the relief of the city of New York was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the city of New York $764,143.75, expended by that city in enrolling, subsisting, clothing, supplying, arming, equipping, paying, and transporting troops employed in aiding to suppress the insurrection against the United States in 1861 to 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2720) for the relief of David McD. Shearer was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of that bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, as I understand, the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] objects to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill will go over.

The resolution (S. Res. 109) creating a committee of the Senate to investigate the sinking of the submarine S–4 was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1939) granting pensions and increase of pensions to widows and former widows of certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it will take some time to discuss that bill and under the five-minute rule we should not be able to complete it. I suggest that the bill ought to be passed over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 781) requiring separate accommodations for white and colored passengers on street cars in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLEASE. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 132) to authorize the President to appoint Le Roy K. Pemberton a first lieutenant, Officers' Reserve Corps, United States Army, was announced as next in order. The bill had been reported adversely from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I ask that Orders of Business 175, 176, 184, and 268 being, respectively, Senate bills 132, 2053, 141, and 133, go over, promising that at the next call of the calendar I shall undertake the perhaps impossible task of securing the passage of these bills notwithstanding the adverse reports. It may be an impossible task, but I shall undertake to perform it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. These bills will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2053) to establish a military record for Daniel P. Tafe was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1736) for the relief of Charles Caudwell was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 141) for the relief of Felix Medler was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2787) providing for the appointment of governors of the non-Christian Provinces in the Philippine Islands by the Governor General without the consent of the Philippine Senate was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I have promised a number of Senators that that bill and the measure accompanying it relating to the same subject further along on the calendar will be considered some day when all the Senators can be present. Obviously these bills can not be considered satisfactorily under the five-minute rule; so I think, with that explanation, the bill should go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 3315) for the relief of Charles A. Black, alias Angus Black, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

WALTER W. JOHNSTON

The bill (S. 2711) for the relief of Walter W. Johnston was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I should be glad to have the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], who made the report on that bill, state the facts about it.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over under objection.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. I should not want the bill to be passed carrying an appropriation of $15,000 without some explanation. I find nothing in the report to justify paying the sum of $15,000 for the purposes for which the bill was introduced. I desire to have more information than I now have before I am willing to vote to make an appropriation of this kind at all, I will say to the Senator from Mississippi, and therefore I ask that it go over.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Utah, if he will withhold the objection for just a moment, that I have before me a letter dated January 6, 1928, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives signed by E. C. Plummer, chairman of the standing committee on claims of the Shipping Board, and in that letter Mr. Plummer says:

> Mr. Johnston claims compensation for certain ship-launching devices which admittedly were used for the benefit of certain ships being built by the Government.

The only reason why he was not paid was because there was no written contract. The matter was referred to the Committee on Claims of the Senate in order to adjudicate the equity in this matter. It is the testimony that Mr. Johnston was really promised the sum of $50,000. Various estimates have been placed upon the value of his work ranging from $20,000 to $50,000. Various estimates also have been placed upon the value of his services if he had been employed by the year ranging from $12,000 to $15,000 a year. It is stated that he saved as much as $5,000 per ship by the use of the device which he had invented and also by giving his personal services. The committee went into this question very carefully at the last session of Congress and again at this session.

Mr. SMOOT. Can the Senator tell me why there is not any report here from the Shipping Board on it?

Mr. STEPHENS. There is a report here—at least it is said that the matter came before the Shipping Board. Chairman Hurley sent this man down to do this work; that is unquestioned and undenied. Then it was suggested to Mr. Johnston later that an attorney be employed and the matter be presented. The matter was finally presented to the Shipping Board, and, as I said a moment ago, because of the fact that a written contract had not been entered into, the board very properly held that it could not authorize the payment and could not compensate this man for his services and for the value of his device used in connection with the launching of ships. Mr. Plummer, as I said a moment ago, says that this device was admittedly used for the benefit of the Government in connection with the launching of certain ships. As a matter of fact, there was sufficient testimony before the committee to justify the granting of a larger amount than is provided in the bill; but some placed the amount lower than others, and for that reason the committee decided that $15,000 should be allowed. There were several members of the committee, however, who wanted to grant Mr. Johnston a larger sum. I think it is a very meritorious claim, and every member of the committee felt that way about it. There was not a dissenting voice.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can not understand why the committee did not send to the Shipping Board and request a report upon this bill. I will say to the Senator that I myself will write to the Shipping Board and ascertain what they have to say in relation to the claim. If their answer shall be favorable, I will have nothing whatsoever to say in opposition to the passage of the bill hereafter, but I do want the bill to go over at this time.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, regular order.

Mr. FLETCHER. My understanding is that when the bill was last called on the calendar it went over because it was desired to secure a report from the Shipping Board, and that such a report has since been received.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill went over because of the absence of a report from the Shipping Board. Now, it seems that we have such a report. It is not in the written report filed by the committee on the bill, but the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] has referred to a communication from Mr. Plummer, who is chairman of the claims committee of the Shipping Board, and which he has before him.

Mr. SMOOT. I will assure the Senator that to-day I will write a letter to the Shipping Board in regard to the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will be glad if the Senator will do so, because if the claimant is entitled to the money he ought to be paid, whether the amount involved is $15,000 or $5,000.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to page 2 of the report, where there is a reference to the report from the standing committee on claims of the Shipping Board. It is stated there that it is not a legal claim, because of the fact that a written contract was not entered into and, perhaps, that the agent of the Government had no right to enter into such a contract. But Mr. Johnston was sent by the chairman of the Shipping Board, Mr. Hurley, to do the work and he did do it; there is no question of that.

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps I did not explain myself in sufficient detail. If the Senator wants to refer to that report, the board states that it is not a valid claim.

Mr. STEPHENS. I agree to that.

Mr. SMOOT. And the board does not recommend its payment. However, what I wanted to find out from the Shipping Board was whether there was a moral claim on the part of this claimant. If there is a moral claim for the amount, then I shall have no further objection. For the present I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION—PROHIBITION OF WAR

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting war was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I ask that the joint resolution go over.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution has already been objected to by the Senator from California and will go over.

KENNETH B. TURNER

The bill (S. 133) for the relief of Kenneth B. Turner was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, that is one of the bills that the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] requested to go over.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That is one of the measures which I requested to have passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over under objection of the Senator from California.

NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT, OKLAHOMA

The bill (H. R. 7011) to detach Okfuskee County from the northern judicial district of the State of Oklahoma and attach the same to the eastern judicial district of the said State was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEFLIN addressed the Senate. After having spoken for five minutes—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Alabama has expired.

[Mr. HEFLIN'S remarks appear elsewhere in to-day's RECORD.]

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, is House bill 7011 under consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. WILLIS. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

STANDARDS FOR HAMPERS, BASKETS, ETC.

The bill (S. 2148) to fix standards for hampers, round-stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the standard hampers and round-stave baskets for fruits and vegetables shall be of the following capacities: One-eighth bushel, one-fourth bushel, one-half bushel, three-fourths bushel, 1 bushel, 1¼ bushels, 1½ bushels, and 2 bushels, which, respectively, shall be of the cubic content set forth in this section. For the purposes of this act a bushel, standard dry measure, has a capacity of 2,150.42 cubic inches.

(a) The standard ⅛-bushel hamper or round-stave basket shall contain 268.8 cubic inches.

(b) The standard ¼-bushel hamper or round-stave basket shall contain 537.6 cubic inches.

(c) The standard ½-bushel hamper or round-stave basket shall contain 1,075.21 cubic inches.

(d) The standard ¾-bushel hamper or round-stave basket shall contain 1,612.8 cubic inches.

(e) The standard 1-bushel hamper or round-stave basket shall contain 2,150.42 cubic inches.

(f) The standard 1¼-bushel hamper or round-stave basket shall contain 2,688 cubic inches.

(g) The standard 1½-bushel hamper or round-stave basket shall contain 3,225.63 cubic inches.

(h) The standard 2-bushel hamper or round-stave basket shall contain 4,300.84 cubic inches.

SEC. 2. That the standard splint baskets for fruits and vegetables shall be the 4-quart basket, 8-quart basket, 12-quart basket, 16-quart basket, 24-quart basket, and 32-quart basket, standard dry measure. For the purposes of this act a quart-standard dry measure has a capacity of 67.2 cubic inches.

(a) The 4-quart splint basket shall contain 268.8 cubic inches.

(b) The 8-quart splint basket shall contain 537.6 cubic inches.

(c) The 12-quart splint basket shall contain 806.4 cubic inches.

(d) The 16-quart splint basket shall contain 1,075.21 cubic inches.

(e) The 24-quart splint basket shall contain 1,612.8 cubic inches.

(f) The 32-quart splint basket shall contain 2,150.42 cubic inches.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall in his regulations under this act prescribe such tolerances as he may find necessary to allow in the capacities for hampers, round-stave baskets, and splint baskets set forth in sections 1 and 2 of this act in order to provide for reasonable variations occurring in the course of manufacturing and handling. If a cover be used upon any hamper or basket mentioned in this act, it shall be securely fastened or attached in such a manner, subject to the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, as not to reduce the capacity of such hamper or basket below that prescribed therefor.

SEC. 4. That no manufacturer shall manufacture hampers, round-stave baskets, or splint baskets for fruits and vegetables unless the dimension specifications for such hampers, round-stave baskets, or splint baskets shall have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, who is hereby directed to approve such specifications if he finds that hampers, round-stave baskets, or splint baskets for fruits and vegetables made in accordance therewith would not be deceptive in appearance and would comply with the provisions of sections 1 and 2 of this act.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful to manufacture for sale or shipment, to offer for sale, to sell, to offer for shipment, or to ship, hampers, round-stave baskets, or splint baskets for fruits or vegetables, either filled or unfilled, or parts of such hampers, round-stave baskets, or splint baskets that do not comply with this act: Provided, That this act shall not apply to Climax baskets, berry boxes, and till baskets which comply with the provisions of the act approved August 31, 1916, entitled "An act to fix standards for Climax baskets for grapes and other fruits and vegetables, and to fix standards for baskets and other containers for small fruits, berries, and vegetables, and for other purposes" (39 U. S. Stat. L. 673), and the regulations thereunder. Any individual, partnership, association, or corporation that violates this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500: Provided further, That no person shall be prosecuted under the provisions of this act when he can establish a guaranty signed by the manufacturer, wholesaler, shipper, or other party residing within the United States from whom the hampers, round-stave baskets, or splint baskets, as defined in this act, were purchased, to the effect that said hampers, round-stave baskets, or splint baskets are correct, within the meaning of this act. Said guaranty, to afford protection, shall contain the name and address of the party or parties making the sale of the hampers, round-stave baskets, or splint baskets to such person, and in such case such party or parties making such sale shall be amenable to the prosecution, fines, and other penalties which would attach in due course under the provisions of this act to the person who made the purchase.

SEC. 6. That any hamper, round-stave basket, or splint basket for fruits or vegetables, whether filled or unfilled, or parts of such hampers, round-stave baskets, or splint baskets not complying with this act, which shall be manufactured for sale or shipment, offered for sale, sold, or shipped, may be proceeded against in any district court of the United States within the district where the same shall be found and may be seized for confiscation by a process of libel for condemnation. Upon request the person entitled shall be permitted to retain or take possession of the contents of such hampers or baskets, but in the absence of such request, or when the perishable nature of such contents makes such action immediately necessary, the same shall be disposed of by destruction or sale, as the court or a judge thereof may direct. If such hampers, round-stave baskets, splint baskets, or parts thereof be found in such proceeding to be contrary to this act, the same shall be disposed of by destruction, except that the court may by order direct that such hampers, baskets, or parts thereof be returned to the owner thereof or sold upon the payment of the costs of such proceedings and the execution and delivery of a good and sufficient bond to the effect that such hampers, baskets, or parts thereof shall not be sold or used contrary to law. The proceeds of any sale under this section, less legal costs and charges, shall be paid over to the person entitled thereto. The proceedings in such seizure cases shall conform as near as may be to the proceedings in admiralty, except that either party may demand trial by jury of any issue of fact joined in such case, and all such proceedings shall be at the suit and in the name of the United States.

SEC. 7. That this act shall not prohibit the manufacture for sale or shipment, offer for sale, sale, or shipment of hampers, round-stave baskets, splint baskets, or parts thereof, to any foreign country in accordance with the specifications of a foreign consignee or customer not contrary to the law of such foreign country; nor shall this act prevent the manufacture or use of banana hampers of the shape and character now in commercial use as shipping containers for bananas.

SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of each United States district attorney to whom satisfactory evidence of any violation of this act is presented to cause appropriate proceedings to be commenced and prosecuted in the proper courts of the United States in his district for the enforcement of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe such regulations as he may find necessary for carrying into effect the provisions of this act, and shall cause such examinations and tests to be made as may be necessary in order to determine whether hampers, round-stave baskets, and splint baskets, or parts thereof, subject to this act, meet its requirements, and may take samples of such hampers, baskets, or parts thereof, the cost of which samples, upon request, shall be paid to the person entitled.

SEC. 10. That for carrying out the purposes of this act the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with State, county, and municipal authorities, manufacturers, dealers, and shippers, to employ such persons and means, and to pay such expenses, including rent, printing publications, and the purchase of supplies and equipment in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as he shall find to be necessary, and there are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for such purposes.

SEC. 11. That sections 5 and 6 of this act shall become effective at but not before the expiration of one year following the 1st day of November, next, succeeding the passage of this act.

Mr. McNARY obtained the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon has been recognized.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this bill has been reported favorably from the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry at this session and at the last session of the Congress. It developed earlier in the session that there was objection to one provision from the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], because it attempted to abolish the five-eighths hamper. After considering the matter very carefully, I have come to the conclusion that it would be wrong to confiscate a container which for many years has shown its adaptability to the States so well represented by the Senators whose names I have just mentioned; and, as chairman of the committee, as far as I can, I am going to accept an amendment which will be proposed by the Senator from New Jersey which I hope will be acceptable to the other objectors.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. I suggest an amendment to Senate bill 2148, on page 1, line 5, after the words "one-half bushel," to insert the words "five-eighths bushel." The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] has just advised me that he has an amendment carrying out exactly the same purpose. It makes absolutely no difference who offers the amendment, so I will let the amendment stand.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, my two amendments are on the desk.

Mr. EDGE. The other amendment I propose to suggest might be compared with the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. It is, after subparagraph c, on page 2, to insert the words "the standard ⅝-bushel hamper or round-stave basket shall contain 1,344.1 cubic inches."

Mr. BAYARD. I will say to the Senator that I make the cubic contents a little different from that. It is an evident error on the part of the department that has been checked up, so that my amendment differs from the Senator's amendment about the cubic contents. That is not a correct calculation, as the Senator will find if he chooses to work it out. Otherwise, our amendments are exactly the same.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest, in order to determine accurately the language to be used, that the clerk state the amendment now to be proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Delaware offers the following amendment:

On page 1, line 5, after the words "one-half bushel," insert the words "five-eighths bushel"; on page 2, after line 11, insert the following: "(cc) The standard ⅝-bushel hamper or round-stave basket shall contain 1,344 cubic inches."

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, the difference is so slight, and the Senator from Delaware and also the Senator from Maryland advise me that they have had it worked out very carefully, that I must admit that I can not question the accuracy of the statement; and I will accept the figures presented by the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I should like unanimous consent to include in the RECORD at this point, before the passage of the bill, a letter from the Campbell Soup Co. of New Jersey supporting this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

CAMDEN, N. J., March 14, 1928.

Senator WALTER E. EDGE,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are inclosing the McNary bill (S. 2148) to fix standards for hampers and round-stave baskets. We have made what we consider the proper changes to include the five-eighths basket. These changes or amendments occur on page 1, in line 5, and on page 2, directly after line 11.

The ⅝-bushel hamper is the standard local market and farm basket of New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, and eastern Pennsylvania. In New Jersey it is used almost exclusively by general farmers and vegetable growers south of New Brunswick. In Delaware and Maryland it is used exclusively in handling canning crops and is largely used for the delivering of vegetables to many of the local markets in these States. It is never used as a covered package for long-distance shipments. Canners in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, New York, as well as some of the other canning States of the West and Middle West, are using this container quite extensively, and its use is becoming more general each year. Records show that this container has been in constant use in the tri-State district for over 40 years. During this time it has been tested by the canners and growers in comparison with the ½-bushel and ¾-bushel hampers, and has so proven its superiority over the other containers that they are no longer used in the movement of vegetables and fruits for canning purposes. It was found that the ¾-bushel container was undesirable for the handling of highly perishable and sofe produce such as tomatoes, and we know of no place in the country where the ¾-bushel hamper is now being used for the movement of vegetables and fruits to the domestic markets or to the canners. The ½-bushel basket is too small to meet the needs of the vegetable grower.

We are unable to understand the attitude of the Department of Agriculture in attempting to force upon the farmers and canners in the districts mentioned a container of undesirable size to take the place of one that has proven its utility over a long period of years.

As the largest buyer of vegetables in this country we should, and do, realize the importance of standardizing vegetable containers, provided it is done along common-sense lines. We also realize that great loss and inconvenience will follow such impractical rulings as contemplated in the McNary container bill.

The officials of the Department of Agriculture have stated that this move was important from the standpoint of protection to the consumer. This point, in our judgment, is being entirely overworked when applied to a container of this size. We understand the present law is that all packages of this type must be plainly marked on the outside with standard-sized letters or figures to indicate the contents. This, in our opinion, is ample protection for the buyer who, in practically all cases, is experienced in this work and needs no protection. The average housewife or consumer very seldom buys in quantities as great as the five-eighths or a bushel, and even if in rare cases this occurs she is not likely to be deceived, as the five-eighths basket is better known than any other package in the districts where it is used.

We can understand the desirability of eliminating the ⅞-bushel hamper, which is now being used by a few of the Southern States in shipping vegetables north, and is classed as a deceptive package. We doubt, however, if the southern shippers are gaining by this practice, as we are familiar with the customs in the large northern markets and therefore know that the buyers operating for the various wholesale and retail stores are very clever and not easily deceived. Please note that the ⅝-bushel container is in no sense an undersized or deceptive package, and can not possibly be mistaken for any larger container now used in marketing vegetables or fruits, and the only container used at the present time over which there could be any possible confusion with the five-eighths basket is the one-half bushel, which is a distinct fruit package and not used in the movement of vegetables.

In our opinion the agricultural and canning interests in the districts where the ⅝-bushel container is now being used favor the S. 2148 bill if the ⅝-bushel container is added or named in place of the ¾-bushel hamper.

Yours very truly,

CAMPBELL SOUP CO.,
H. F. HALL, Purchasing Agent.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to section 5. It seems to me that this provision is rather harsh. Perhaps it may be unconstitutional. It provides that it shall be unlawful to manufacture for sale any of the articles therein referred to.

Mr. McNARY. That refers to articles that find their way into interstate commerce that are placed in containers calculated to mislead the purchasing public. It only applies, of course, to interstate commerce.

Mr. KING. The point I was making was that it seemed to me the language was too broad, and would make it a crime for a man to manufacture something for sale in his own State, purely intrastate, unless it measured up to the requirements of this bill.

Mr. McNARY. But it could not become a subject to be considered by the courts until an infraction had occurred as a result of its moving in interstate commerce. Consequently, it could not affect the manufacture in a State if the two provisions are considered together, and the purposes of the act.

Mr. KING. I shall assume that the statement of the Senator is correct, that the subsequent language makes it clearly applicable only to interstate commerce, and I shall not object to the consideration of the bill. I shall vote against it, however. It seems to me that this is too great an intrusion upon the rights of individuals, and too great an assumption; but I shall not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HEFLIN obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon will state it.

Mr. McNARY. What is the status of the bill? Has it passed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is about to be passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama was recognized. Does he yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. McNARY. I think I had the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was of the opinion that the Senator had lost it.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. I simply want to follow the matter up until it reaches its final passage; and if the Senator from Alabama will bear with me, I hope we will conclude this matter before we go to another subject.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the Senator if the President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognized the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think he asked for the floor; and, if the Chair will recognize me, I want to ask the Senator from Oregon a question about this bill. What is the purpose of the bill, anyway?

Mr. McNARY. The purpose of the bill is to prevent deception in containers carrying fruits and vegetables. There are so many containers of certain characteristics that the buyer is unable to determine the net weight or content.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not familiar with the proposed legislation; but all the letters I have received about it have been in protest against the passage of the bill. I am wondering if the Senator will not let it go over for another week, until I can go into the matter, or until the next day when the calendar is considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can interpose an objection at any time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course I can, but I do not want to do so arbitrarily. I am just asking the Senator to let the bill go over until next time.

Mr. McNARY. If the Senator will look into the matter——

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be glad to.

Mr. McNARY. And read the report that has been filed, he will find that very few objections can be raised to the measure; but if he is not advised at this time, and desires a further opportunity to consider the proposed legislation, I shall ask that it go over without prejudice. I hope that the Senator at the next call of the calendar will be able to join with me in asking for its passage.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be glad to look into it between now and then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2149) authorizing and directing the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate all phases of crop insurance was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that bill involves a very important and extensive form of legislation. After considering the matter with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], in order to do him a courtesy, I shall ask that it go over also, without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The bill will be passed over.

HORTICULTURAL EXPERIMENT WORK

The bill (S. 2832) providing for horticultural experiment and demonstration work in the southern Great Plains area, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEFLIN addressed the Senate. After having spoken for five minutes—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

[Mr. HEFLIN's remarks appear elsewhere in to-day's RECORD.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of Senate bill 2832?

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

FOREIGN DECORATIONS

The bill (H. R. 5898) to authorize certain officers of the United States Navy and Marine Corps to accept such decorations, orders, and medals as have been tendered them by foreign governments in appreciation of services rendered, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I would like to offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is at this time one amendment pending, proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED].

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over, but the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland will be printed, and it will lie on the table.

RURAL POST ROADS

The bill (S. 2327) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill was considered on March 2, and there is pending an amendment offered by the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

Mr. HEFLIN addressed the Senate. After having spoken for five minutes—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator has expired.

[Mr. HEFLIN's remarks appear elsewhere in to-day's RECORD.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of Senate bill 2327?

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

TRANSACTIONS IN COTTONSEED OIL

The bill (S. 1414) for the prevention and removal of obstructions and burdens upon interstate commerce in cottonseed oil by regulating transactions on future exchanges, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEFLIN addressed the Senate for five minutes. His remarks entire follow:

AMERICAN MARINES IN NICARAGUA

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I wanted to say just a few words when the joint resolution of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] to prevent war was before the Senate. I will avail myself of the opportunity presented to say just a few words now; and I ask the clerk to read the resolution which I send to the desk, which was unanimously adopted last Saturday night in Chicago, where I addressed 5,000 citizens of Illinois.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Constitution of the United States provides that Congress and Congress alone can declare war; and

Whereas American marines have been in Nicaragua, under the direction of the President, for more than a year, and according to press reports have engaged in war with natives of Nicaragua on several occasions, killing citizens of that Republic and having some of their own number killed by Nicaraguan natives; and

Whereas the taking of an American soldier's life is inexcusable and indefensible, save and except when the cause justifies it, and the war in which he loses his life has been duly declared by the Congress of the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved by the people of the State of Illinois here assembled, That we most earnestly request President Coolidge to either withdraw from Nicaragua the armed forces of the United States or obtain from Congress authority to keep them there.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I merely rise to inquire whether the Senator has the right under the rules to proceed at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama, in the understanding of the Chair, is reserving his right to object, and is speaking under the five-minute rule.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. But I have objected to the consideration of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. House bill 7011?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No; Senate Joint Resolution 1.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate Joint Resolution 1 has been passed over. House bill 7011 is the bill now under consideration. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, if all these advocates of war will just hold themselves in patience, they will have an opportunity to present their defense of using the armed forces of the United States in a foreign country for more than a year without the consent of Congress.

The Constitution allows the President to use the marines in an emergency. That authority was granted purely and wholly for the purpose of meeting a sudden or precipitate attack, before Congress could be called to take action to provide for immediate defense. It was never intended by the founders of this Government that any President, be he Democrat or Republican, should use the armed forces of this Nation on the soil of a foreign nation for the purpose of carrying on a war.

Some strange things have occurred in this Nicaraguan affair. We had about 175 marines down there looking after American interests and they were doing it admirably. Nobody there objected to their presence. For some strange reason they were withdrawn, and then a local riot occurred. I do not know why they were withdrawn. The people of the United States have not been told why they were withdrawn. Congress does not know, so far as I have been apprised; but they were withdrawn temporarily, and then what did we do? We swooped down upon Nicaragua with 2,500 marines; and how many times, Senators, have you read in the daily papers since that time that we have sent another and still another thousand since then? I dare-say there is not a Senator here who knows just how many marines we have in Nicaragua now. How many marines have we in Nicaragua to-day? How much money is being expended without the consent of Congress to carry on this foreign war to protect Diaz and his soldiers? Where are Diaz and his soldiers? They are back in pleasant places far from the battle line. Where are our boys? Out on the firing line losing their lives fighting the battles of Diaz and his soldiers, who are sitting back enjoying themselves in places of safety.

Mr. President, this issue is going to be one of importance in the national campaign. Somebody ought to be a candidate for President who is American enough to say: "We are going to bring this Government back to the Constitution. We are going to define the powers of the President. We are going to say in what instances he can use the marines, and how long he can use them without consulting Congress.

(At this point Mr. HEFLIN was reminded by the President pro tempore that he had spoken for five minutes on the pending bill.)

A subsequent bill having been reached on the calendar—

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate much longer, but I am going to continue to talk to the Senate about this Nicaraguan matter until some action is taken. I do not intend that another boy shall be killed in that unauthorized war down there if I can prevent it, without Congress having an opportunity to say something on this very grave and serious matter.

I have never before heard of such a procedure. I think it is without a parallel in the history of this Government. I know of no instance where a President has sent the marines into a foreign country, where they have engaged in battle after battle for a year, as has been the case in Nicaragua, without consulting Congress. There is no just cause or good excuse in this instance for the President's failure to consult Congress about this important matter. Congress is in session now and has been in session for more than three months.

What are we doing in Nicaragua? Are we protecting Diaz, this impostor and usurper? Is the Congress of Nicaragua in sympathy with us? It is not. That Congress has failed and refused to sanction our presence in Nicaragua. Then what are we doing there? The Congress is supposed to speak for the people. We are backing a bastard government. Diaz is not President; he has never been elected to that office. He is an impostor and usurper, and it is rumored that some of the Liberal leaders were paid by our Government to lay down their arms.

Sandino was not for sale. His followers rallied around him in his native mountains and are fighting to repel a foreign foe. He has our example of 1776 to inspire and lead him on. The American colonists took the same position in the War of the Revolution. They told Great Britain to get out, that she could not run this country, that we were going to run it ourselves. We drove out the invader, and we declared that we were going to be one government that would never have any entangling alliances with foreign countries or interfere with the internal affairs of foreign governments. But now in this morning of the twentieth century we are out on this high road of imperialism, encouraged by the international bankers of the United States, who are reaching out for new fields in foreign countries. They are taking money out of the channels of business in the United States that ought to remain here. Are we to have our Army and Navy follow them on their trail across the world in this new venture of imperialism on the part of the United States Government?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HEFLIN. Not just now. Quite a number of boys have been killed in Nicaragua. No Senator here knows how many boys have been killed there.

Senators, this is a serious situation that confronts us. Have we become imbued with this imperialistic spirit and materialistic spirit? Will we turn a deaf ear to the appeal of the parents of these American boys who are being murdered in Nicaragua? Have Senators forgotten the letter written just a few days ago by Mr. Ferguson, of Missouri, to the President, telling him about his boy's honorable record in the World War, how he won the distinguished-service cross upon the firing line in France fighting to preserve the life of this Nation and the liberty of the world? Have Senators forgotten that that man told the President that he felt that the Government had murdered his boy in Nicaragua?

Mr. MAYFIELD. And still they insist that they must see that they have good and pure elections down there.

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, yes, Mr. President; seeing that they have clean elections.

Are we going to permit the slaughter of our boys to continue in Nicaragua in the absence of a declaration of war by Congress?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not yield just now.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I want to ask just a simple question. Has the Senator from Alabama forgotten that Sandino, his hero, robbed an American citizen, a citizen of California, of his property? Has he forgotten that?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; and I have not forgotten that a bunch of crooks and criminals bombed the house of Senator DENEEN last night in Chicago, and I have not heard the Senator from California say a word in protest, and this occurred right here in the United States.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. If the Senator from Alabama will ever cease, some day I may say something concerning Nicaragua, and his hero, Sandino, whom he has crowned again and again.

(At this point Mr. HEFLIN was reminded by the Presiding Officer that he had spoken five minutes on the pending bill.)

A subsequent bill having been reached on the calendar—

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, in reply to the distinguished Senator from California about Sandino robbing somebody who lives in California, robberies are taking place in the United States constantly, and the Federal Government, so far as I know, is taking no steps to stop them. But it tries to put down a native of Nicaragua taking up arms in defense of what he believes is his inherent right, what he believes is his right as a native of Nicaragua, to repel force from a foreign government that has set up business in his nation by a military power. In his operations around, it seems that he robbed some American who owns property over there.

I suggest to the Senator from California that we can have a settlement of that. When stable government is restored and when this impostor and usurper Diaz is put out of the office of President and Nicaragua takes her place again in the family of nations, as she has a right to do, we will take up these matters with that Government and we will say to them, in substance, "You or your citizens destroyed the property of an American citizen. It amounts to so many dollars. You must settle for it." They will settle it without a murmur.

I want to say to the Senator from California that I am not in favor of pouring out the blood of brave American boys on the soil of Nicaragua following reckless adventurers of the United States who go away from home and make their investments in hazardous surroundings and then when they get in trouble cry that they are Americans and hoist the flag. Let them take their medicine for the time being, until this Government can exert its orderly processes, rather than rush boys out of the homes of America into a foreign country for unlawful purposes and pursue the natives who resent the presence of invaders. I think that would be a better plan for bringing about these settlements.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. May I inquire of the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Does the Senator take the position that when an American citizen goes lawfully into a foreign country and lawfully acquires property there, and he is robbed of that property our country should pay no heed to him, should not reach out its hand to protect him, or do anything necessary to protect him in his life and in the possession of his legally acquired property? Does the Senator take that position?

Mr. HEFLIN. I would protect him——

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. If so, I say that the Senator's doctrine is not the Jacksonian doctrine.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I will be the judge as to whether it is the Jacksonian doctrine. It is good American doctrine.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I claim that it is the duty of this Government to protect its citizens wherever they may be traveling on the earth, and that to protect them we should put forth the necessary power.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then the Senator would swap the precious lives of American boys to protect the dollars of the imperialistic international bankers of the United States.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Oh, I am not concerned with international bankers. I am concerned with American citizens, and the honor of this Republic, the rights of an American citizen, and I want it to be——

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not yield further now.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Pardon me for just a sentence. I want it to be as perhaps it was long ago respecting a Roman citizen, that an American citizen must be protected wherever he travels.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator is unfortunate in referring to Rome. Rome lost her life. Rome fell. Rome perished in doing the same things we are doing now, sending an army here and an army yonder meddling with things she had no business to meddle with. The Senator at this particular time is trying to protect an American who has a gold mine in Nicaragua.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That is right.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to protect these boys who are taken out of the American home, and I am going to do it if it is in my power to do so.

(At this point Mr. HEFLIN was reminded by the President pro tempore that he had spoken five minutes on the pending bill.)

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I want to remind the genial Senator from California that there was a time a year or two ago when some of us were begging that the hands of the American Government be stretched out to help Americans in the Isle of Pines, but the Senator from California was not thinking then about the rights of American citizens. He was willing to have the flag hauled down from over that little island down in the Antilles.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Because under the treaty with Spain it belonged to Cuba; we conceded her right to the Isle of Pines.

Moreover, permit me to add, if it were not for the United States of America there would be no such independent country as Nicaragua. We protected and now protect her independence.

A subsequent bill having been reached on the calendar—

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I regret to have to make this speech piecemeal, but it is the only chance, it seems, that we are going to have to say a word in behalf of the rights of the American citizen. This Government was created for the citizen. He is the end and aim of constitutional government. It was not created for a king, for a monarch, it was created for the welfare of the citizen, and here we are taking the citizen, for whom the government was created, and sending him into a foreign country to police a foreign nation to hold an election in a foreign nation. Think of it! What are we coming to in this country, Senators?

The Senator from California says that I am referring to my hero, Sandino. I hang my head in shame when I see this great, strong, Government using its power to beat down and kill the last of the old heroic stock, it seems, of Nicaragua, a man who announced that he would never yield to a foreign power to come in and control his native land.

Why, Mr. President, time was when the Senator from California would have thrilled at the recital of Sandino's heroic deeds. Time was when the Senator from California would have cheered Sandino as he fought and backed back into his mountain fastnesses, fighting for the principle of self-government, fighting for the right to say who should be his President, fighting for the right to say who should control his country. Is that a sin? Is that a wrong? Let our Government say to those people, "Run your own affairs. Look after our citizens and their property, and if you fail to do it you will have to pay us for the property you destroy and you will have to deal with us directly then."

But what are we doing? The marines are not encamped there about our property guarding it. They are the aggressors in a war. They are pursuing natives who are retreating into their mountain fastnesses. We are hunting them down and killing them, and they are killing our boys by the score. I wish I knew how many Americans have been killed down there. I wish I knew how many Nicaraguans we have killed. I saw a statement in some paper where they were taking this Government to task and where it was said that with its field guns and machine guns this Government had murdered a whole village of men, women, and children. Let us have the truth. Let the Congress know what is going on in Nicaragua.

I am going to ask Congress to vote on my resolution requesting that the President shall either withdraw our armed forces or shall come to Congress and ask the consent of Congress to keep them there. Is there any Senator here who will say that is unfair? I wish Senators could have seen that audience Saturday night, 5,000 patriotic men and women in the State of Illinois, the home State of Lincoln. They cheered the reading of that resolution. I said, "All of you who favor its adoption stand up," and they got up like they were receiving the benediction at church. The vote was unanimous. That is how the American people feel. They are not for this monopolistic program.

I am going to say this in conclusion: God help the Senate to wake up. God help the representatives of the sovereign States in this body to turn their attention for a little while and give their hearts' attention for a little while to the boys who are being butchered in this unholy undertaking in Nicaragua.

TRANSACTIONS IN COTTONSEED OIL

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1414) for the prevention and removal of obstructions and burdens upon interstate commerce in cottonseed oil by regulating transactions on future exchanges, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendments of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 2, strike out the word "cottonseed" and insert the words "cotton seed"; in line 7, strike out the word "or" and insert the word "of"; in line 9, strike out "or" and insert "on"; on page 4, line 1, strike out the word "cottonseed" and insert the words "cotton seed"; in line 5, strike out the word "cottonseed" and insert the words "cotton seed"; in line 14, strike out the word "cottonseed" and insert the words "cotton seed"; in line 17, strike out the word "cottonseed" and insert the words "cotton seed"; on page 8, line 16, strike out the word "cottonseed" and insert the words "cotton seed"; on page 12, line 23, strike out the word "same" and insert the word "said"; on page 13, line 6, strike out the word "does" and insert the word "shall"; on page 14, after the words "authorized to," in line 22, insert the words "make economic investigations of future trading in cottonseed oil, to"; in line 24, strike out the word "cottonseed" and insert the words "cotton seed"; on page 16, line 12, strike out the word "of" and insert the word "or"; and on page 17, after line 20, insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 13. To effectuate the purpose of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall have authority to prescribe the manner and form in which accounts, records, and memoranda relating to contracts of sale of cottonseed oil for future delivery shall be kept, and he may require all persons who act in the capacity of a clearing house, clearing association, or similar institution, for the purpose of clearing, settling, or adjusting any such transactions to keep such records and to make such returns as will fully and clearly disclose all facts in their possession relating thereto, and thereafter any person who fails to keep such accounts, records, and memoranda in the manner and form prescribed or approved by the Secretary of Agriculture shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be known by the short title of "The cottonseed oil futures act."

SEC. 2. (a) For the purposes of this act "contract of sale" shall be held to include sales, agreements of sales, and agreements to sell. The word "person" shall be construed to import the plural or singular and shall include individuals, associations, partnerships, corporations, and trusts. The words "cottonseed oil" shall be construed to mean the oil extracted from cotton seed by pressure or otherwise, either crude or refined. The term "future delivery" as used herein shall not include any cash or spot sale of cottonseed oil for deferred shipment or delivery. The word "exchange" shall be held to include and mean any exchange or association, whether incorporated or unincorporated, of persons who shall be engaged in the business of buying or selling cottonseed oil or receiving the same for sale on consignment. The act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other person acting for any individual, association, partnership, corporation, or trust within the scope of his employment or office shall be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such individual, association, partnership, corporation, or trust, as well as of such official, agent, or other person. The words "interstate commerce" shall be construed to mean commerce between any State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, and any place outside thereof; or between points within the same State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, but through any place outside thereof, or within any Territory or possession, or the District of Columbia.

(b) For the purposes of this act (but not in any wise limiting the foregoing definition of interstate commerce) a transaction in respect to any cottonseed oil shall be considered to be in interstate commerce if such cottonseed oil is part of that current of commerce usual in the trade whereby cottonseed oil is sent from one State with the expectation that it will end its transit, after purchase, in another, including, in addition to the cases within the above general description, all cases where purchase or sale is either for shipment to another State or for manufacture within the State and the shipment outside the State of the products resulting from such manufacture. Cottonseed oil normally in such current of commerce shall not be considered out of such commerce through resort being had to any means or device intended to remove transactions in respect thereto from the provisions of this act. For the purpose of this paragraph the word "State" includes Territory, the District of Columbia, possessions of the United States, and foreign nation.

SEC. 3. Transactions in cottonseed oil involving sale thereof for future delivery as commonly conducted on exchanges and known as "futures" are affected with a national public interest in that such transactions are carried on in large volume by persons engaged in the business of buying and selling cottonseed oil and the products and by-products thereof in interstate commerce, and others; that the prices involved in such transactions are generally quoted and disseminated throughout the United States and in foreign countries as a basis for determining prices and values of cotton seed, cottonseed oil, and the products and by-products thereof, and to facilitate the movement thereof in interstate commerce; that such transactions are utilized by dealers, manufacturers, and others engaged in handling cotton seed, cottonseed oil, and the products and by-products thereof in interstate commerce as a means of hedging themselves against possible loss through fluctuations in price; that the transactions and prices of cottonseed oil on such exchanges are susceptible to speculation, manipulation, and control, and unreasonable fluctuations in the prices thereof occur as a result of such speculation, manipulation, or control, which are detrimental to the producer or the consumer and the persons handling cotton seed, cottonseed oil, and the products and by-products thereof in interstate commerce, and that such fluctuations in prices are an obstruction to and a burden upon interstate commerce in cotton seed, cottonseed oil, and the products and by-products thereof and render regulation imperative for the protection of such commerce and the national public interest therein.

SEC. 4. It shall be unlawful for any person to deliver for transmission through the mails, or in interstate commerce, by telegraph, telephone, wireless, or other means of communication, any offer to make or execute, or any confirmation of the execution of, or any quotation or report of the price of, any contract of sale of cottonseed oil for future delivery on or subject to the rules of any exchange in the United States, or for any person to make or execute such contract of sale, which is or may be used for (a) hedging any transaction in interstate commerce, or (b) determining the price basis of any such transaction in interstate commerce, or (c) delivering cottonseed oil sold, shipped, or received in interstate commerce for the fulfillment thereof, except—

(a) Where the seller is at the time of the making of such contract the owner of the actual physical property covered thereby; or

(b) Where such contract is made by or through a member of an exchange which has been designated by the Secretary of Agriculture as a "contract exchange," as hereinafter provided, and if such contract is evidenced by a record in writing which shows the date, the parties to such contract, and their addresses, the property covered and its price, and the terms of delivery: Provided, (1) That each exchange member shall keep such record for a period of three years from the date thereof, or for a longer period if the Secretary of Agriculture shall so direct, which record shall at all times be open to the inspection of any representative of the United States Department of Agriculture or the United States Department of Justice; (2) that the Secretary of Agriculture may fix and prescribe grades, classes, and other qualities of cottonseed oil, to be known as the official standards of the United States for cottonseed oil, one of which said official standards, when established, shall be made the basis grade of all such contracts, and the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe the means and methods and agencies by which cottonseed oil may be classified or graded for delivery on or in settlement of any such contract, and the form of certificate or memorandum by which such classification shall be evidenced, and no cottonseed oil shall be delivered on or in settlement of any such contract unless it be of or within said official standards; and (3) that in case any cottonseed oil of grade, class, or quality other than the basis grade, class, or quality specified in such contract be tendered or delivered in settlement thereof, the difference above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for such grades, classes, or qualities other than the basis, grade, class, or quality shall be the actual commercial differences determined under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture and in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by him.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to designate any exchange as a "contract exchange" when, and only when, such exchange complies with and carries out the following conditions and requirements:

(a) When the governing board thereof provides for the making and filing by the exchange or any member thereof, as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, of reports in accordance with the regulations, and in such manner and form and at such times as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, showing the details and terms of all transactions entered into by the exchange or the members thereof, either in cash or spot transactions consummated at, on, or in an exchange, or transactions for future delivery, and when such governing board provides, in accordance with such regulations, for the keeping of a record by the exchange or the members thereof, as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, showing the details and terms of all cash or spot and future transactions entered into by them, consummated at, on, or in an exchange, such record to be in permanent form, showing the parties to all such transactions, including the persons for whom made, any assignments or transfers thereof, with the parties thereto, and the manner in which such transactions are fulfilled, discharged, or terminated. Such record shall be required to be kept for a period of three years from the date thereof, or for a longer period if the Secretary of Agriculture shall so direct, and shall at all times be open to the inspection of any representative of the United States Department of Agriculture or the United States Department of Justice.

(b) When the governing board thereof provides for the prevention of dissemination by the exchange, or any member thereof, of false or misleading or knowingly inaccurate reports concerning crop or market information or conditions that affect or tend to affect the price of cottonseed oil in interstate commerce.

(c) When the governing board thereof provides for the prevention of manipulation of prices or the cornering of any cottonseed oil by the dealers or operators upon such exchange.

(d) When the governing board thereof does not exclude from membership in, and all privileges on, such exchange any duly authorized representative of any lawfully formed and conducted cooperative association having adequate financial responsibility, which is engaged in the production or handling of cottonseed, cottonseed oil, or the products and by-products thereof, if such association has complied, and agrees to comply, with such terms and conditions as are or may be imposed lawfully on other members of such exchange, and when membership in the exchange is open to all persons who agree to and do comply with such terms and conditions as may be lawfully imposed on members: Provided, That no rule of a contract exchange shall forbid, or be construed to forbid, the return on a patronage basis by such cooperative association to its bona fide members of moneys collected in excess of the expenses of conducting the business of such association.

(e) When the governing board provides for making effective the final orders or decisions entered pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (b) of section 7 of this act.

SEC. 6. Any exchange desiring to be designated a "contract exchange" shall make application to the Secretary of Agriculture for such designation and accompany the same with a showing that it complies with the above conditions, and with a sufficient assurance that it will continue to comply with the above requirements.

SEC. 7. (a) A commission composed of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Attorney General is authorized to suspend for a period not to exceed six months or to revoke the designation of any exchange as a "contract exchange" upon a showing that such exchange has failed or is failing to comply with any of the above requirements or is not enforcing its rules of government made a condition of its designation as set forth in section 5. Such suspension or revocation shall only be after a notice to the officers of the exchange affected and upon a hearing, and such suspension shall not be effective until after the expiration of the farthest month which has already been traded in on the market but during which time no new contract shall be entered into, the purpose of this being to permit the liquidation of contracts already in force: Provided, That such suspension or revocation shall be final and conclusive unless within 15 days after such suspension or revocation by the said commission such exchange appeals to the circuit court of appeals for the circuit in which it has its principal place of business by filing with the clerk of such court a written petition praying that the order of the said commission be set aside or modified in the manner stated in the petition, together with a bond in such sum as the court may determine, conditioned that such exchange will pay the costs of the proceedings if the court so directs. In which event the exchange shall continue to function until it has been decreed guilty, at which time the suspension shall go into effect as provided above. The clerk of the court in which such a petition is filed shall immediately cause a copy thereof to be delivered to the Secretary of Agriculture, chairman of said commission, or any member thereof, and the said commission shall forthwith prepare, certify, and file in the court a full and accurate transcript of the record in such proceedings including the notice to the exchange, a copy of the charges, the evidence, and the report and order. The testimony and evidence, taken or submitted before the said commission duly certified and filed as aforesaid as a part of the record, shall be considered by the court as the evidence in the case, but this shall not be construed as denying to the exchange its privilege of appearing before the court in its own behalf or of submitting additional evidence or testimony. The proceedings in such cases in the circuit court of appeals shall be made a preferred cause and shall be expedited in every way. Such a court may affirm or set aside the order of the said commission or may direct it to modify its order. No such order of the said commission shall be modified or set aside by the circuit court of appeals unless it is shown by the exchange that the order is unsupported by the weight of the evidence or was issued without due notice and a reasonable opportunity having been afforded to such exchange for a hearing, or infringes the Constitution of the United States, or is beyond the jurisdiction of said commission: Provided, That if the Secretary of Agriculture shall refuse to designate as a contract exchange any exchange that has made application therefor, then such exchange may appeal from such refusal to the commission described therein, consisting of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Attorney General of the United States, with the right to appeal as provided for in other cases in this section, the decision on such appeal to be final and binding on all parties interested.

(b) If the Secretary of Agriculture has reason to believe that any person is violating any of the provisions of this act, or is attempting to manipulate the market price of cottonseed oil in violation of the provisions of section 5 hereof, or of any of the regulations made pursuant to its requirements, he may serve upon such person a complaint stating his charge in that respect, to which complaint shall be attached or contained therein a notice of hearing, specifying a day and place, not less than three days after the service thereof, requiring such person to show cause why an order should not be made directing that all contract exchanges until further notice of the said commission refuse all trading privileges thereon to such person. Said hearing may be held in Washington, D. C., or elsewhere, before the said commission, or before a referee designated by the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall cause all evidence to be reduced to writing and forthwith transmit the same to the Secretary of Agriculture as chairman of the said commission. That for the purpose of securing effective enforcement of the provisions of this act the provisions, including penalties, of section 12 of the interstate commerce act, as amended, relating to the attendance and testimony of witnesses, the production of documentary evidence, and the immunity of witnesses, are made applicable to the power, jurisdiction, and authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, the said commission, or said referee in proceedings under this act, and to persons subject to its provisions. Upon evidence received the said commission may require all contract exchanges to refuse such person all trading privileges thereon for such period as may be specified in said order. Notice of such order shall be sent forthwith by registered mail or delivered to the offending person and to the governing boards of said contract exchanges: Provided, That such order shall not stop or prohibit the liquidation of contracts of purchase or sale already made by the offending person. After the issuance of the order by the commission, as aforesaid, the person against whom it is issued may obtain a review of such order or such other equitable relief as to the court may seem just by filing in the United States circuit court of appeals of the circuit in which the petitioner is doing business a written petition praying that the order of the commission be set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the commission by delivering such copy to its chairman or to any member thereof, and thereupon the commission shall forthwith certify and file in the court a transcript of the record theretofore made, including evidence received. Upon the filing of the transcript the court shall have jurisdiction to affirm, to set aside, or modify the order of the commission, and the findings of the commission as to the facts, if supported by the weight of evidence, shall in like manner be conclusive. In proceedings under paragraphs (a) and (b) the judgment and decree of the court shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court upon certiorari, as provided in section 240 of the Judicial Code.

(c) Any exchange that has been designated a contract exchange in the manner herein provided may have such designation vacated and set aside by giving notice in writing to the Secretary of Agriculture requesting that its designation as a contract exchange be vacated, which notice shall be served at least 90 days prior to the date named therein as the date when the vacation of designation shall take effect. Upon receipt of such notice the Secretary of Agriculture shall forthwith order the vacation of the designation of such exchange as a contract exchange, effective upon the day named in the notice, and shall forthwith send a copy of the notice and his order to all other contract exchanges. From and after the date upon which the vacation became effective, the said exchange can thereafter be designated again a contract exchange by making application to the Secretary of Agriculture in the manner herein provided for an original application.

SEC. 8. That in order to effectuate the purposes of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make economic investigations of future trading in cottonseed oil, to investigate the handling, grading, and transportation of cotton seed, cottonseed oil, and the products and by-products thereof, and to make public from time to time, in his discretion, the result of such investigation and such statistical information gathered therefrom as he may deem of interest to the public, except data and information which would separately disclose the business transactions of any person and trade secrets of customers: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit the Secretary of Agriculture from making or issuing such reports as he may deem necessary relative to the conduct of any exchange or of the transactions of any person found guilty of violating the provisions of this act under the proceedings prescribed in section 7 of this act: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture in any report may include the facts as to any actual transaction. It shall be the duty of any person engaged in the business of dealing in cottonseed oil or the products or by-products thereof, when requested by the Secretary of Agriculture or any agent acting under his instructions, to answer correctly according to the best of his knowledge, under oath or otherwise, all questions touching upon his knowledge of the details and terms of any cash or spot or future transaction participated in by him involving any cottonseed oil or the products or by-products thereof, or to produce all books, letters, papers, or documents in his possession or under his control relating to such matter. Any such person who shall, within a reasonable time prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture or such agent, willfully fail or refuse to answer such questions or to produce such books, letters, papers, or documents, or who shall willfully give any answer that is false or misleading, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000.

SEC. 9. Any person who shall violate the provisions of section 4 of this act, or who shall fail to evidence any contract mentioned in said section by a record in writing as therein required, or who shall knowingly or carelessly deliver for transmission through the mails or in interstate commerce by telegraph, telephone, wireless, or other means of communication, false or misleading or knowingly inaccurate reports concerning crop or market information or conditions that affect or tend to affect the price of cottonseed oil in interstate commerce, or who shall forcibly assault, resist, impede, interfere with, improperly influence, or attempt to improperly influence any person employed by the Secretary of Agriculture in carrying out any of the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both, together with the costs of prosecution.

SEC. 10. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and of the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 11. No fine or imprisonment shall be imposed for any violation of this act occurring before the first day of the sixth month following its passage.

SEC. 12. The Secretary of Agriculture may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, any State, Territory, District, or possession, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or any person; and shall have the power to appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, not in conflict with existing law, and make such expenditures for rent outside the District of Columbia, printing, telegrams, telephones, law books, books of reference, periodicals, furniture, stationery, office equipment, travel, and other supplies and expenses as shall be necessary to the administration of this act in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and there are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for such purposes.

SEC. 13. To effectuate the purpose of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall have authority to prescribe the manner and form in which accounts, records, and memoranda relating to contracts of sale of cottonseed oil for future delivery shall be kept, and he may require all persons who act in the capacity of a clearing house, clearing association, or similar institution, for the purpose of clearing, settling, or adjusting any such transactions to keep such records and to make such returns as will fully and clearly disclose all facts in their possession relating thereto, and thereafter any person who fails to keep such accounts, records, and memoranda in the manner and form prescribed or approved by the Secretary of Agriculture shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, may I ask with reference to the amendments——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those are all committee amendments, the Chair will state to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. My only purpose in rising was to ask the Senator from Texas at the appropriate time to explain the bill.

Mr. MAYFIELD. I shall be glad to do so. I have explained the bill two or three times. These are only committee amendments that have been agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not the only Senator who did not happen to be present when the Senator explained the bill on a previous occasion.

AMERICAN MARINES IN NICARAGUA

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to offer a few remarks apropos of the question submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]. The latter Senator has condemned the policy of the administration in sending military forces to Nicaragua for the purpose of carrying on military operations against the inhabitants of that country. The Senator from California claims that an American citizen who was engaged in business in Nicaragua has suffered property losses; and, as I interpret his position, he believes that the United States should send troops to that country and that war should be waged against the people of Nicaragua. He stated, in substance, that Andrew Jackson would have acted as the present administration is acting in Nicaragua.

Senators will recall that when Andrew Jackson was President of the United States American citizens lawfully in Mexico were despoiled of their property, and some were killed. Andrew Jackson did not, however, send troops into Mexico and carry on war against the people of that country. He was unwilling to invade Mexico because some Americans had been wronged and some had been killed. He protested with great vigor against the conduct of Mexico and the delinquencies of her nationals. Relations between the two countries were strained, and finally President Jackson withdrew our diplomatic representatives. Later diplomatic relations were resumed; and, as I remember, claims were presented to Mexico and demands made for the indemnification of American citizens. The courage and patriotism of Andrew Jackson are conceded by all. No one was more scrupulous in preserving the honor of our country and vindicating the rights of American citizens than that intrepid, heroic President. He was unwilling, however, to plunge his country into war because some American citizen had suffered wrongs in a neighboring country.

In every administration from Jackson until the present American citizens have received injuries at the hands of Mexico. Many Americans have been killed upon Mexican soil, and property owned by American citizens in Mexico of the value of hundreds of millions of dollars has been confiscated or destroyed. Wrongs have been inflicted, both by the Mexican Government and by Mexican nationals. Americans have suffered damages and have been killed at times when there were no internal convulsions and no civil war. But wrongs have been sustained by many Americans during guerrilla warfare or revolutionary outbreaks. I am not mentioning these historic matters for the purpose of indicting Mexico, but am alluding to them in view of the statement of the Senator from California.

Mr. President, American citizens have met their death through violence in other lands, and many have been despoiled of their property. We have not gone to war because of these wrongs and indignities inflicted upon American citizens. I am not contending that the United States should never send military forces to foreign lands for the protection of American citizens. Indeed, conditions have arisen and hereafter may arise when such a course was and will be not only justifiable but required.

But it is a grave matter to send our battleships into foreign ports and to land our marines and soldiers on foreign shores for the purpose of conducting military operations, and conditions must exist which demand war before war should be entered upon. There is no doubt that the United States is engaged in military operations in Nicaragua. Thousands of marines have been landed upon the soil of that country. Our naval vessels have anchored in the harbors of Nicaragua, and American troops have been landed upon Nicaraguan territory for the purpose of meeting and conquering the military forces of that country.

In my opinion we are not justified in the course we have pursued. We are not justified in spending millions of dollars to send our war vessels and soldiers to wage war upon a de jure or de facto government in Nicaragua or upon guerilla bands or military factions. Our American marines are not there to protect American lives or American property. The claim is now made that they are there for the purpose of supervising an election, pursuant to an agreement entered into between the United States and some person or persons claiming to represent Nicaragua. No treaty was entered into obligating the United States to supervise elections in Nicaragua, and I submit that no agreement by the President of the United States or by the Secretary of State would have the effect of a treaty or impose upon the United States the duty of sending warships and marines to Nicaragua and to there wage war for the purpose of enforcing such an agreement.

The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] contends that Mr. Charles Butters, an American, has been wronged and his property injured. The inference is that it is the duty of the President to carry on war in Nicaragua because the forces of Sandino injured the property of Mr. Butters.

American citizens have killed foreigners who were lawfully in the United States. These wrongs inflicted upon aliens did not bring war or lead to an attempt to invade the shores of our country. If any American has suffered in Nicaragua that country would have made complete reparation. As a matter of fact, for many years Nicaragua has been more or less dependent upon financial interests in the United States for pecuniary assistance.

For a number of years American marines have performed police service in Nicaragua. If Mr. Butters or any American citizen lost property at the hands of the Government of Nicaragua or of the nationals of that country, the United States could have obtained reparation and complete indemnification through diplomatic channels.

Mr. President, I regret the course which we are pursuing in Nicaragua. I protest against any form of imperialism upon the part of our Government and attempts to control by military force the peoples of other countries. Our military forces have no right to be in Nicaragua or in Haiti. They should be withdrawn, and the peoples of those countries permitted to establish such government as they desire. Nicaragua belongs to the Nicaraguans and Haiti to the Haitian people, and the inhabitants of those countries must work out their own economic and political destinies. They can not learn the lessons of democracy in a day or perhaps in a century. Have we learned those results yet? Political progress is a plant of slow growth, and the peoples of other lands may require many years in order to attain the political standards which the American people believe have been reached by themselves. Let us look to our own country first and put into force those principles of justice and liberty and morality that are essential for genuine progress and the attainment of that goal which Christian principles and noble ideals have projected. Our attitude toward other countries, and particularly our attitude toward other peoples, should be one of sympathy and helpfulness. We will not gain friends in Latin America if we follow the paths which have led us into Nicaragua and Haiti and Santo Domingo, and if we insist upon holding indefinitely against their will the peoples of far-off Philippine Islands.

Mr. COPELAND obtained the floor.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The review of historical facts as made by the Senator from Utah is very interesting. I was waiting in anticipation that he would have something to say about Andrew Jackson and what he did in Florida. In order to protect the rights of America, Andrew Jackson, the Democrat, not a modern one, but Andrew Jackson, the Democrat, went over into Florida and hanged a couple of Englishmen because of their conduct inimical to the citizens and the people of the United States. He was not afraid of Great Britain. I shall be very glad if the Senator will differentiate and point out wherein Andrew Jackson failed to carry out the theory or the thought which I took the liberty of expressing a moment ago, that wherever American interests are or American citizens are there should be this country to protect them.

On another occasion, not now taking advantage of the privilege accorded under Rule VIII, I shall then make answer in my own way to some of the observations made by the Senator from Alabama, and also perhaps make an attempt to answer some reflections of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. COPELAND. Is this coming out of my time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Oh, yes! [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. Very well; I yield reluctantly.

Mr. FESS. Did the Senator from California refer to Ambrister and Arbuthnot, the two British subjects?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I did. That is a fact with which I assumed everyone is familiar.

TRANSACTIONS IN COTTONSEED OIL

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1414) for the prevention and removal of obstructions and burdens upon interstate commerce in cottonseed oil by regulating transactions on future exchanges, and for other purposes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I want to speak on the pending bill if there is no rule against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There having been several parliamentary questions which have been passed on in considering the bill now pending before the Senate, the Senator from New York is now recognized for five minutes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAYFIELD] might be induced to consent to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The New York Produce Exchange and representatives of the cottonseed-oil market feel that they have been imposed upon. There was no hearing permitted where those men could be present. In 1926 a bill identical with this was presented to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and the produce exchange people of New York had a hearing, and as a result of it the bill never was reported out. It is not right that the bill, which imposes new conditions upon this industry, should be dealt with in this casual manner.

I hope the Senator from Texas will be courteous and kind about it and let the bill go back to the committee in order that persons who are interested on the other side of the question may be heard, as they have not been heard. It is not fair to ask one of us who is not familiar with all the technicalities of the matter to attempt to debate it or discuss it and raise objections. There are serious objections, as the telegrams and letters which I hold in my hand indicate. The bill should go back to the committee.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I have had some correspondence with Cincinnati citizens asking that the bill be referred back to the committee in order that they may be given a chance for hearings. I second the request of the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York move to recommit the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. I do not like to be discourteous to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. SACKETT. I have had many requests from my own State for hearings to be had on the bill. It affects my people very much. I think the bill ought to go back to the committee.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. I move——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from New York, before he makes his motion, will allow the Senator from Texas to have a moment to explain the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly. I am glad to allow that to be done.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, I have not the slightest objection to the Senator from New York making a motion to recommit the bill. I am opposed to such a motion; but after I have explained to the Senate the exact procedure that was taken with reference to the bill, if the Senate sees fit to recommit it, then I shall have nothing further to say.

This is a measure which seeks to place under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture future exchanges dealing in cottonseed-oil option contracts. The measure was introduced by me in the Senate toward the close of the last session of the Congress and extended hearings were had on the bill by the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate. Representatives of the New York Produce Exchange came here and presented their views on the measure.

Witnesses from New Orleans and from various points in Texas presented their views on the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Texas a question?

Mr. MAYFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. As the result of the hearings, however, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry did not report the bill. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. MAYFIELD. Your statement is correct, but no report on the measure was made; but it was because we were right at the close of the session of Congress, and there would have been no opportunity to have considered the bill had it been reported. That was the only reason why I did not insist upon the committee reporting the measure to the Senate.

Mr. President, this bill simply proposes to do with exchanges that deal in cottonseed-oil option contracts what the Smith-Lever law does with cotton exchanges that deal in cotton future contracts and what the Capper-Tincher law does with exchanges that deal in grain future contracts. The measure has been unanimously indorsed by the cottonseed oil crushers association of the South; it has the unanimous support of the Senators from the States that produce cotton and cottonseed.

Talk to me not, sir, about sending American marines to Nicaragua to protect the interests of American investors when the Senate of the United States refuses to consider a bill that proposes to protect the cotton farmers of the South! Why should this bill be recommitted to the committee when extensive hearings have been had upon it? We know, Mr. President, that such a course would impose a tremendous expense upon the people who live in the far-distant Southern States. Those who are opposed to this measure, living in New York, Kentucky, and Ohio, are financially able to send their representatives here and prolong the hearings of the committee. The people of the South alone are affected by the terms of this measure. The Southern States produce the cottonseed of the country. Why should Senators from the Northern and Eastern States be so tremendously interested in this measure? Their constituents will not be affected by its terms should it become a law, but the producers of the cottonseed in the country will be vitally affected by it. They have requested consideration of the bill by the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Texas a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. MAYFIELD. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is there any substantial opposition to the bill in the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. MAYFIELD. There is none whatever except from the representatives of the New York Produce Exchange. The members of that exchange impose an unfair and unconscionable contract; they are trying to preserve it, so that they can continue to rob the cotton farmers of the South of millions and millions of dollars. Now, Mr. President, if the Senate wishes to recommit the bill it is up to the Senate to do it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Texas has expired.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Texas a question in my own time. Unfortunately I was called from the Chamber and did not have the opportunity of hearing all of his remarks. Next to the last sentence uttered by the Senator from Texas was that an unconscionable contract now existed between certain exchange brokers and the producers of cotton and cottonseed oil. I want to ask the Senator whether this proposed legislation would abrogate contracts?

Mr. MAYFIELD. It would not.

Mr. KING. I was going to suggest that even though the contract to which the Senator refers may, perhaps, be subject to criticism, if it should be attempted retroactively to affect contractual relations there might be some question as to the validity of such a statute.

Mr. MAYFIELD. If this bill should become a law, it would not affect the contractual relations at all. It simply proposes to give the Secretary of Agriculture the right to supervise such contracts.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York what exactly is his view respecting the point made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAYFIELD]?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have no view on the point raised by the Senator from Texas, but I do know that the Produce Exchange of New York is very much agitated about this matter because the representatives of the exchange have had no opportunity to appear before the newly organized Committee on Agriculture to present their cause. The time may come when I shall be glad to vote with the Senator from Texas, but on a project which would affect the New York Produce Exchange market, which has been in operation in this very industry for a period of 30 years, and the New Orleans exchange, which has been engaged in it for a number of years, it is not fair that there should be this hasty action. That is the reason why I am begging the Senator from Texas voluntarily to ask that the bill be recommitted to the committee, in order that the gentlemen to whom I refer may be heard.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, ordinarily I should be glad to grant any request that my friend the Senator from New York might make, but I feel that it is my duty to the people who are most deeply interested in this measure to resist his motion, because I know that the recommittal of the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry would absolutely mean its death during the present session of Congress.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there may be a great deal of merit in this bill and there probably is. I am not ready, I will frankly say, to vote affirmatively, and I am not ready to vote against the bill. It is a measure of very great importance. I have felt for some time that if we shall legislate on the subject of future contracts we ought to deal with it in a comprehensive way. I introduced a bill two or three sessions ago, proposing to forbid the banks under the Federal reserve system loaning money for speculative purposes and for dealing in futures; I would gladly vote for a measure that would interdict gambling in futures; but I think that such a measure ought to be comprehensive and not deal with cotton or cottonseed oil alone or any one subject. I think that the pending bill ought to receive further consideration, with a view to formulating a comprehensive measure that would cure an evil that I know exists and about which the Senator from Texas has very great reason for complaining.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York ask that the bill may be passed over?

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAYFIELD] that if this bill shall be recommitted to the committee probably the present Congress will not act upon it. If it is meritorious I should like to see action; if not, it should not be passed. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has given as much study to subjects of this character as has any other Senator. The Senator from Texas has stated in answer to what the Senator from Utah has just said that cottonseed oil is the only commodity affected by future contracts in regard to which we have not already acted. The Senator from South Carolina is, so to speak, my mentor in matters pertaining to cotton and cottonseed—I do not mean to say that he knows more about the subject than does the Senator from Texas, for I think the Senator from Texas is very well supplied with information and understands the question—and I should like to have the views of the Senator from South Carolina, because I know he was once chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and has been a member of the committee for a long time.

Mr. McNARY and Mr. SMITH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon is recognized.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to say a word in reply to what the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has said.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not care to yield my time for a speech. I have the floor, but I will be glad to yield for a question.

Mr. SMITH. I merely wanted to reply to the question which has been asked me. As a matter of course, if the Senator from Oregon has the floor, I will not interfere; but I will not let him interfere with me when I get the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I had the floor and yielded the remainder of my time to the Senator from South Carolina, because I really wanted to hear from him.

Mr. McNARY. Very well, I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to state that this bill in reference to a by-product of cotton known as cottonseed and its products is in line with legislation that we have applied to grain and cotton itself. I think that its purposes and, perhaps, the terms of the bill are such that it would be of great benefit to those who produce the raw material.

I desire to call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to the fact that this bill pertains particularly to cottonseed oil. There are 58 standardized commercial by-products made from cottonseed alone; yet, strangely enough, the oil is the controlling factor in fixing the price of the seed. The Senator is acquainted with the fact that there is not a finer cattle food in the world than cottonseed meal; there is not a finer fertilizer than cottonseed meal; there is not a finer filler for cattle than the hulls. Numerous articles of household use are made from compressed hulls. Yet the oil determines in the market the value of the various by-products.

It is interesting to note that cottonseed oil is not a substitute for but is the equivalent of animal fat. It makes as good butter as can be produced from the milk of the cow; it makes as good lard as can be refined from hog fat; it makes as good packing oil as can be extracted from olives, and yet when the price of hog products and animal products was soaring to the sky by virtue of their alleged scarcity, this article, equal in value, edible, digestible, was depressed in price because it came from cottonseed and the seed came from cotton. I took occasion to call the attention of some of the department executives to that fact, and asked why the edible fat taken from cotton should follow the price of the lint rather than the price of the market in which it was sold, namely, the market for edible fat.

I think the bill which the Senator from Texas has introduced, which will put under the administrative power of the Agricultural Department the control of this subject is along proper lines, and we hope that it will affect beneficially the grower of the product.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND The Senator, however, sees no reason, does he, why the persons who are in opposition to this particular measure should not be heard? It must be remembered that the present Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is a different committee, is presided over by a different chairman, it is a different organization entirely than the one which listened to the arguments two or three years ago. Certainly, in the interest of fairness and justice and ordinary decency, this bill should be recommitted in order that those other persons may be heard.

I have taken no positive stand on the bill and have refrained from objecting to it this morning, because I do not pretend to know the ins and outs of it, as the Senator from South Carolina does, but there are many persons who are in opposition, and is it not fair that they should be heard before this measure shall be acted upon?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMITH. In reply to the suggestion I will say that I do not know; I have not been advised, nor have I taken the trouble to acquaint myself with the parties that desire to be heard. The only thing I had in view was my own judgment in reference to the benefits that might accrue to those who produce the raw material.

Mr. FESS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FESS. The Senator will recall that three or four——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I feel no responsibility with respect to the present situation, except this:

Before I took the chairmanship of the committee, the New York Produce Exchange wrote a letter to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who was then the chairman, requesting hearings. For some reason that message was not dispatched to the office which I now occupy as chairman of the committee. The bill was brought before the committee in executive session and unanimously reported out favorably and is on the calendar. I feel that the produce people wanted a hearing, and if I had received that letter of request I certainly would have suggested that they have an opportunity to be heard.

I want to offer this as a compromise:

The statement has been made by the Senator from Texas and the Senator from North Carolina that if this bill is recommitted or referred by consent to the committee, it is buried for this year. I want to state that that is not the way we do business in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. If the bill is recommitted, I will promise early action; but I suggest, Mr. President, a way out of this whole situation:

If the Senator from Texas will consent that the bill may be referred to the committee, maintaining its status on the calendar, he will have lost nothing whatsoever, and it will give an opportunity for those who are opposing the bill to be heard and get into the record and supply information upon which an argument can be made against the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that that may not be done. The bill is either before the Senate or in the committee.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. McNARY. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand that order can not be made, I should like to suggest instead of it that the bill be passed over with the understanding that it will be passed over from time to time on a call of the calendar until the committee has had a chance to give these people an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. McNARY. The suggestion may not meet with the approval of the Senator; but, Mr. President, the same thing was done with respect to the migratory bird bill. When the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] felt that they had not had a full opportunity to be heard, it was agreed as among gentlemen and Senators that we would not take up the migratory bird bill until opportunity had been given to these gentlemen to be heard. That compact was carried out. These able Senators appeared before the committee. The hearings there written into the record furnish the basis of the opposition to the bill to-day; and having seen that work successfully, in order to meet a situation here which is unfortunate, I make this suggestion.

Mr. MAYFIELD. I shall be very glad to accept the suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

Mr. McNARY. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. I simply desire to suggest that the hearings should be held within two weeks.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; I was going to say, further than that, if I may have the attention of the distinguished Senator from New York——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York has no intention of pressing his motion?

Mr. McNARY. Inasmuch as we have composed our differences by the suggestion I have made, I should like to take up this bill and have the Senator's constituents come here at as early a date as possible. I suggest Saturday of this week. Will that give sufficient time? Or Monday of next week?

Mr. COPELAND. Monday of next week would be better.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he takes his seat?

Mr. McNARY. I shall be glad to.

Mr. FESS. That will include the Cincinnati users of oil?

Mr. McNARY. Oh, everyone.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York withdraws his motion for recommitment?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the Agricultural Committee a question? The parties interested in this bill may be notified that on Monday this question will be open for them to make such suggestions as they desire?

Mr. McNARY. Yes. I assume that the Senator from New York, leading the opposition, and the author of the bill, from Texas, can perhaps come to a common understanding, so that all parties may be fully represented.

Mr. SMITH. The reason why I asked that question is that I have been advised that in case the bill was to be reinvestigated, if I may use that term, they wanted to be present; and I will notify them in order that they may be here Monday.

Mr. McNARY. They will be given the opportunity.

Mr. COPELAND. Will 11 o'clock on Monday suit the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. McNARY. Yes. Perhaps it would be well to go over until 10 o'clock on Tuesday, Monday being a day when the mail is congested from Sunday. Will 10 o'clock on Tuesday be better?

Mr. COPELAND. I suggest 11 o'clock on Tuesday.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1728) placing service postmasters in the classified service was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLEASE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PRISON-MADE GOODS

The bill (S. 1940) to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLEASE. Let that go over.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator who objected—I did not note who it was—withhold his objection for a moment, until I make an inquiry? I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES], if I may have his attention. What is the intention of the Senator regarding Senate bill 1940?

Mr. BLEASE. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. It has been objected to a number of times. Does the Senator from Missouri intend to move to take it up at any time?

Mr. HAWES. I do. That is my intention.

Mr. WILLIS. I am glad to be assured of that. I think this is a very important measure. I have been appealed to by——

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I object to a speech on the bill. I have objected to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is passed over.

Mr. WILLIS. All right.

The bill (S. 1462) for the adoption of the Columbia Basin reclamation project, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator does not have to reserve the right to object. He can object at any time, and he is now speaking on Senate bill 1462.

Mr. WILLIS. Exactly; and I begin just where I left off when I was cut off by the courtesy of my friend from South Carolina.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that we want to debate this bill, and I do not think it is fair for him, after the bill is objected to, to make a speech in favor of it, and then cut off somebody else from making a speech. If he wants to debate the bill, we will go at it right now.

Mr. WILLIS. I certainly have not endeavored to cut anybody off. I simply wanted to make an inquiry of the Senator from Missouri, and to state, as I now have a right to state, the reason why I hope he will later on insist upon his motion to take up this bill.

I have had numerous requests from people in Ohio representing the blind with reference to this bill. We have a school for the blind in our State, and a very special effort is made so to educate those people that they will be able to take care of themselves. It has been found that one of the best lines of activity in which they can be educated is in the manufacture of brooms; and, although we have in Ohio a law prohibiting the sale of convict-made goods, yet we find being shipped into the State from other States brooms in enormous quantities that are putting these poor blind people who are engaged in the manufacture of brooms entirely out of business.

I think that is unfair. I think some law of this character ought to be passed. It has the support of the labor interests of the country, of the manufacturers, of the organizations of women's clubs, and is, withal, a very meritorious measure.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BLEASE. I do.

Mr. McNARY. Is the Senator going to object, or not?

Mr. BLEASE. To this bill?

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

Mr. BLEASE. I say I reserve the right to object. I want to take the same privilege that the present candidate for President from Ohio took in presenting my views. I did not want to take up the time of the Senate.

Mr. President, there are some of us who are very much opposed to the passage of this bill; and those of us who oppose it love the blind and will go just as far to help them as anybody on this floor.

The State of South Carolina has in her penitentiary a chair factory. If this bill is passed, it will force that State to feed and clothe prisoners without their having anything to do except to sit around in the yard, and we will have to pay somebody to watch them to see that they do not leave.

We do not object to certain amendments or certain restrictions. We had a hosiery mill in that penitentiary once, and it was abolished after a hard three years' fight, and a pardoning of 1,700 people who had been made to work in it and contract tuberculosis. It was a hell trap if there ever was one on this earth.

I do not want to speak of myself, but I was the cause of its being abolished. I was the governor of the State at the time. The work that is going on there now, however, does not injure any prisoner, nor does it injure anybody, or take a cent out of the pocket of anybody. If the bill comes up for discussion, we hope to be able to present our side of the matter.

I would not have taken this much time except that I may be a candidate for President myself before this thing is over, and I did not want any advantage taken of me.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, answering the inquiry of the Senator from Ohio, I have not called up this bill, because there has been so much misrepresentation as to its character and its objects that I desired Senators to secure through their own methods information as to the real objects of the bill.

The bill is supported by union labor. It is supported by the Federation of Women's Clubs of the United States. It is supported by free capital. It does not interfere with the right of the State of the Senator from South Carolina to do as it pleases, but it denies him the right to send his prison-made goods into a State that prohibits their sale. That is all it does do.

The bill has passed the House three times, has been twice reported favorably to the Senate, and I certainly expect to bring it up and pass it under a roll call.

Mr. McNARY. I object at this time to the consideration of Senate bill 1940, because I have an amendment pending. I want to consult the files and some other records. At the present time I ask that it go over.

COLUMBIA BASIN RECLAMATION PROJECT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been passed over. Senate bill 1462, the Columbia Basin bill, is before the Senate for the moment. This bill was amended on the last call of the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1266) to create in the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor a division of safety was announced as next in order.

Mr. BAYARD. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3023) to revise the boundary of a portion of the Hawaii National Park, on the island of Hawaii, in the Territory of Hawaii, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no objection to the consideration of this bill; but I think the Senator from Wisconsin raised some point about it the other day, and I was wondering if the matter had been adjusted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Which Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. KING. The senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I have a memorandum asking that the bill go over unless there is a fairly intelligent expression of the purpose of the bill from the chairman of the committee. The chairman of the committee is absent, and therefore I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator who introduced the bill and the Senator who reported the bill, being the same Senator, is absent; and the bill will be passed over.

LEVI R. WHITTED

The bill (S. 1956) for the relief of Levi R. Whitted was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments. The first amendment was, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$3,630.92" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2292) providing for the employment of certain civilian assistants in the office of the Governor General of the Philippine Islands and fixing salaries of certain officials was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, that is the bill to which I referred when we had reached Calendar No. 226. It ought to go over for discussion when we take up the other bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1831) to authorize the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to class as secret certain material, apparatus, or equipment for military and naval use, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1838) to amend section 110 of the national defense act by repealing and striking therefrom certain provisions prescribing additional qualifications for National Guard State staff officers, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLAINE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3092) to enable the George Washington Bicentennial Commission to carry out and give effect to certain approved plans was announced as next in order.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 759) to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to make and publish rules in common-law actions was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLAINE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 59) authorizing the President to ascertain, adjust, and pay certain claims of grain elevators and grain firms to cover insurance and interest on wheat during the years 1919 and 1920, as per a certain contract authorized by the President, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1377) for the relief of Lieut. Robert Stanley Robertson, jr., United States Navy, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, my attention was directed to this bill this morning, but not in time to enable me to examine it to see whether it would constitute a precedent that would govern in other cases. I shall be glad at the next call of the calendar to consent that it be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 151) for the relief of Charles R. Sies was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I make the same announcement as to that bill as to the previous one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3434) for the control of floods on the Mississippi River from the Head of Passes to Cairo, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1731) to provide for the more complete development of vocational education in the several States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 8926) granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Arkansas to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Red River at or near Garland, Ark., was announced as next in order.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, we have agreed on some additional language for that bill, and I believe I shall just ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2859) for the relief of Francis J. Young was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2864) to establish the standard of weights and measures for the following wheat-mill, rye-mill, and corn-mill products, namely, flours, semolina, hominy, grits, and meals, and all commercial feeding stuffs, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, several Senators have called up about that bill, so I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1970) for the relief of Karim Joseph Mery was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

COTTON AND GRAIN SALES IN FUTURE MARKETS

The bill (S. 1093) to prevent the sale of cotton and grain in future markets was announced as next in order.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I shall want to debate the bill, and it will take several hours.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can not be done under the five-minute rule.

Mr. RANSDELL. I simply wanted to make that statement. I am entirely willing to have the bill taken up now.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. RANSDELL. No; I do not object to its consideration. Some one else will have to object.

Mr. CURTIS. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to having the bill taken up, but the Senator from Louisiana announced that it would take hours.

Mr. CARAWAY. I myself think it is rather a large proposition. I particularly want to get the attention of the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. SACKETT]. This bill is of very great importance, and I hope that the steering committee will give us a place on the program for the consideration of it. If the Senator will do that for us——

Mr. SACKETT. I shall be very glad to have the Senator come before the committee. It meets every Monday at 2 o'clock.

Mr. CARAWAY. What I want is to have the bill placed on the program.

Mr. SACKETT. We would like to see whether it is a proper bill to be given a special order.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is it the purpose of the committee to determine that every bill of which they do not approve shall not have any consideration?

Mr. SACKETT. No; we are trying to work in an orderly way in the Senate, and to get through the best legislation we can.

Mr. CARAWAY. This bill is of very great importance, and very far-reaching, and it is the consensus of all I know that it ought to have consideration. Whether it ought to pass or not is what everyone must decide for himself, but there should be chance for consideration.

Mr. SACKETT. I suggest that the Senator come before the committee at its next meeting and we will talk it over.

Mr. CARAWAY. Very well. I feel certain that the Senator will give the bill a status.

MARINES IN NICARAGUA

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 57) requesting the President to immediately withdraw the armed forces of the United States from Nicaragua, was announced as next in order, the clerk also stating that it had been reported adversely from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3555) to establish a Federal farm board to aid in the orderly marketing and in the control and disposition of the surplus of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, my resolution (S. J. Res. 57) to withdraw the armed forces from Nicaragua was just passed over at the request of the Republican floor leader, Senator CURTIS. The resolution has been adversely reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I was very anxious to get a vote on my resolution, but since the receipt of the resolution passed at Chicago last Saturday night, to which I referred this morning, I am going to be led to amend my resolution when it is reached again, so as to give the Congress an opportunity to say whether or not the President shall withdraw our armed forces, or whether or not he shall come to Congress and obtain consent to keep them in Nicaragua.

Mr. CURTIS. I asked that the joint resolution go over, because I was told by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations that it would take some little time, and I knew it could not be disposed of before 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of Senate bill 3555?

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

RATES AND CHARGES IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) to amend joint resolution directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to take action relative to adjustments in the rate structure of common carriers subject to the interstate commerce act, and the fixing of rates and charges, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Virginia, I ask that this joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

INDEBTEDNESS OF THE SERBS, CROATS, AND SLOVENES

The bill (H. R. 367) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes to the United States of America made by the World War Foreign Debt Commission and approved by the President upon the terms and conditions as set forth in Senate Document No. 106, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, is hereby approved in general terms as follows:

SEC. 2. The amount of the indebtedness to be funded after allowing for certain cash payments made by the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes is $62,850,000, which has been computed as follows:

Principal of obligations acquired for cash advanced under Liberty bond acts	$26,126,574.59
Accrued and unpaid interest at 4¼ per cent per annum to Dec. 15, 1922	4,073,423.14
		$30,199,997.73
Principal of obligations acquired by Secretary of War for surplus war supplies sold on credit	24,978,020.99
Accrued and unpaid interest at 4¼ per cent per annum to Dec. 15, 1922	3,358,790.45
		28,336,811.44
		58,536,809.17
Accrued interest at 3 per cent per annum from Dec. 15, 1922, to June 15, 1925		4,390,260.69
		62,927,069.86
Credits:
Payments on account of principal since Dec. 15, 1922	$66,709.19
Interest thereon at 3 per cent to June 15, 1925	3,248.28
		69,957.47
Total net indebtedness as of June 15, 1925		62,857,112.39
To be paid in cash upon execution of agreement		7,112.39
Total indebtedness to be funded into bonds		62,850,000.00

SEC. 3. The principal of the bonds shall be paid in annual installments on June 15 of each year up to and including June 15, 1987, on a fixed schedule subject to the right of the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes to postpone such payments falling due after June 15, 1937, for two years, such postponed payment to bear interest at the rate of 4¼ per cent per annum. The amount of the annual principal installments during the first five years shall be $200,000. Commencing with the sixth year the annual principal installment shall increase $25,000 a year for the succeeding seven years. Commencing with the thirteenth year the annual principal installment will be $400,000, the subsequent annual principal installments increasing until in the sixty-second year of the debt-funding period the final principal installments shall be $2,406,000, the aggregate principal installments being equal to the total principal of the indebtedness to be funded into bonds.

SEC. 4. The Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes shall have the right to pay off additional amounts of principal of the bonds on June 15 and December 15 in any year.

SEC. 5. The bonds to be issued shall bear no interest until June 15, 1937, and thereafter shall bear interest at the rate of one-eighth of 1 per cent per annum from June 15, 1937, to June 15, 1940; at the rate of one-half of 1 per cent per annum from June 15, 1940, to June 15, 1954; at the rate of 1 per cent per annum from June 15, 1954, to June 15, 1957; at the rate of 2 per cent per annum from June 15, 1957, to June 15, 1960, and at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum after June 15, 1960, all payable semiannually on June 15 and December 15 of each year, until the principal thereof shall have been paid.

SEC. 6. Any payment of interest or principal may be made at the option of the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes in any United States Government obligations issued after April 6, 1917, such obligations to be taken at par and accrued interest.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIVERSIDE INDIAN SCHOOL, ANADARKO, OKLA.

The bill (H. R. 8326) to authorize the construction of a dormitory at Riverside Indian School at Anadarko, Okla., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does the Senator from Oklahoma think that this is wise and proper legislation?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am personally acquainted with conditions at the Indian school at Anadarko, Okla. This school is one of the two schools located on the Apache, Comanche, and Kiowa Indian Reservation. This bill authorizes the appropriation of funds for the construction of a dormitory for boys at the Anadarko school. The present boys' dormitory was constructed 45 years ago, 20 years before the reservation was open to settlement and at a time when there was no railroad within 20 miles of Anadarko. The brick of which this old dormitory was constructed was of a very inferior quality. The building is in a bad state of repair, really in a state of no repair. The building has no basement, and the ceilings are low. At the time the building was constructed it was thought to be modern, but, of course, times have changed.

In addition to the condition of the building it is entirely too small to properly accommodate the boys at this school. I know personally that wooden porches have been constructed on one side of this old brick building, and those porches are nothing more than screened-in wooden structures, and the boys are required to sleep out there and live out there during the wintertime when they are at school. There is no place in the United States, in my judgment, where a new building is more badly needed than at this particular Indian school.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, how many students are there?

Mr. THOMAS. Something like two or three hundred.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2535) granting to the State of New Mexico certain lands for reimbursement of the counties of Grant, Luna, Hidalgo, and Santa Fe for interest paid on railroad-aid bonds, and for the payment of the principal of railroad-aid bonds issued by the town of Silver City, and to reimburse said town for interest paid on said bonds, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 8831) to provide for the collection of fees from royalties on production of minerals from leased Indian lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2319) for the relief of John W. Stockett was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 362) to provide for the advancement on the retired list of the Navy of Lloyd Lafot was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2532) to provide for the designation of clerks or employees of the Department of the Interior to serve as registers and receivers in the land offices in Alaska was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLAINE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3117) for the relief of the State of Connecticut was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. May we have a brief explanation of the bill?

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MOUNT M'KINLEY NATIONAL PARK

The bill (H. R. 8126) to repeal the sixty-first proviso of section 6 and the last proviso of section 7 of "An act to establish the Mount McKinley National Park in the Territory of Alaska," approved February 26, 1917, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to repeal the proviso of section 6 and the last proviso of section 7 of 'An act to establish the Mount McKinley National Park, in the Territory of Alaska,' approved February 26, 1917."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2336) for the relief of Nina MacDonald, Zenas V. Johnston, Margaret E. Thompson, Arthur L. Beaman, May Fee, Willis E. Young, Daniel E. Turbeville, Clarence C. Spears, and Ina Mae Elkins was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

HALF HOLIDAYS FOR CERTAIN GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

The bill (S. 3116) providing for half holidays for certain Government employees was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to suggest an amendment to the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

REISSUE OF DEFECTIVE PATENTS

The bill (S. 2823) amending the statutes of the United States with respect to reissue of defective patents was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] if the bill attempts to deal with what is conceded by many at least to be an unsatisfactory condition in the Patent Office or in the patent law?

Mr. METCALF. Oh, no; there is no attempt to do that in the bill. It applies only in case there is some mistake. It does not even increase the length of the life of the patent. Under it if there is some little thing that is wrong, a man will not lose his patent.

Mr. KING. It is such a big bill in words I did not know but that there were a lot of concealed meanings in it.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that the only object sought to be accomplished by the bill is a simplification in the reissue of patents. The whole section of the law referring to that matter has been reprinted. There is nothing in the bill which would in any way change the basic patent law.

Mr. KING. May I say to the chairman of the committee, while I have the floor, that it seems to me no better service could be rendered the real inventor and the American people than to revise our patent laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is S. 1271, the migratory bird bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. KING. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to submit a few remarks on another subject.

Mr. KING. Very well; I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The senior Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	McMaster	Simmons
Barkley	Frazier	McNary	Smith
Bayard	Gerry	Mayfield	Smoot
Blaine	Gillett	Metcalf	Steck
Blease	Glass	Moses	Steiwer
Borah	Gould	Neely	Stephens
Broussard	Harris	Norbeck	Swanson
Bruce	Harrison	Norris	Thomas
Capper	Hawes	Nye	Tydings
Caraway	Hayden	Oddie	Tyson
Copeland	Heflin	Overman	Wagner
Curtis	Johnson	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Cutting	Jones	Pittman	Warren
Deneen	Kendrick	Ransdell	Waterman
Dill	Keyes	Sackett	Watson
Edge	King	Sheppard	Wheeler
Edwards	McKellar	Shipstead	Willis
Fess	McLean	Shortridge

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EDWARDS in the chair). Seventy-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

CONDITIONS OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is gratifying to learn from the report of the Secretary of Labor that while unemployment exists in the country, the evil is far less serious than certain alarmists have represented it to be. Unemployment in any volume is always a misfortune, not only to the immediate sufferers but to the entire country. People out of work are out of the market. They have ceased to consume. When they exist in any considerable numbers the effect is felt by business in general. The effect is more than a financial loss resulting from lowered consumption. The sight of any number of the unemployed depresses all others. It fills them with caution, if not with fear, and makes them timid buyers. The mere rumor of widespread unemployment has a demoralizing influence. Of late we have listened to wild and random estimates as to the number of people out of work at present. They have filled the country with alarm, and undoubtedly have tended to lessen confidence and depress business. It is a great relief to find these baseless rumors spiked by fully equipped and thoroughly accredited Government officials.

While it is a serious thing for any country to have 1,800,000 of its people out of work and deprived of their earnings, there are other relieving features in the situation besides the fact that the number of unemployed is no higher than it is. We learn from the report submitted by the Secretary of Labor that by far the most of these unfortunate people are unskilled labor. It will thus be easier to fit them into emergency jobs such as are rapidly becoming available in the vast programs of building and construction undertaken by the National Government and by States and municipalities all over the country. Much of this unemployment, we learn, is due to adverse seasonal influence. The advance of spring and summer, with the beginnings of farm work and stimulation to building, should open employment to many thousands. The Secretary of Labor is further encouraging in his belief that the forces which have brought about such unemployment as we have are passing phases of our economic life.

Most encouraging of all is the attitude of the public. In former times we tended to allow unemployment to reach serious proportions before it was noticed at all. Few serious, deliberate, and practical efforts were made to relieve it, and these were generally too late to accomplish any good. Now we are alert to discover it and prompt to act. Doing this will result in good, even though it was otherwise intended.

Our country leads not only in high wages and excellent working conditions but also in commercial prosperity. We are thus able to do more than any other country in the world for those who for various reasons are temporarily unemployed. Our fortunate situation places upon us the obligation not only to devise but to put into immediate operation constructive measures to meet the necessities of those deprived of work. I believe our people now keenly feel this obligation and are ready to act upon it.

In my opinion the attention of the country should be directed more and more to the causes of unemployment. We do well to aid without delay those who suffer by this economic disease. It is better to get after the disease itself. In this report the Commissioner of Labor Statistics states:

> It is not unreasonable to believe that one-half of the employment shrinkage shown is due to new machines and new mechanical devices.

I am informed that hardly a day passes but the Department of Labor receives reports of acute situations resulting from the introduction of new labor-saving machinery.

In one industry, for instance, a new machine has been installed to do the work formerly done by 12 men. Only four persons are needed to operate this device. Its effect on the industry in which it is used depends upon the individual employer who uses it. One employer, I am told, employs four men to run this machine, and pays each one the average earnings of a former handworker. Yet, even in this instance eight men have been displaced by the machine. Another employer, however, using the same machine, employs four women to run it, and pays them 60 cents each per thousand for the output they produce. That is, he pays $2.40 for an output that formerly cost him $12 by the old hand methods. It means that 12 skilled men have been released by each machine and their places taken by women willing to work at a little more than half the former wages paid. I am not objecting to the employment of women in industry, but where four women, with the aid of a machine, can turn out the same product as four men, it seems to me only business sense to pay them the same wages. I cite the case only to show what an unwise employer can do to add to unemployment and lowered earnings by taking an uneconomic advantage of new labor-saving machinery.

This is going on in every industry and at a rate which requires to be watched. The President of a certain labor organization reports that in the last few years 11,000 jobs in his craft have been abolished because of new automatic machinery. Between 1920 and January 1, 1925, the number of tractors on farms in the United States had increased 105.9 per cent, which is an answer to those who think that "back to the farm" is a remedy for unemployment in the cities.

In the near future the automatic dial system will be nearly universal in the telephone service. What this will do to displace workers is indicated by the fact that Greater New York has 20,000 telephone operators, nearly all of whom will no longer be needed. The prediction has been made that by 1930 there will not be a telephone girl in the District of Columbia.

These instances can be multiplied indefinitely. We could not, if we would, halt the development of new machinery and methods. They come in answer to the human need for more and cheaper goods and because of the profits in greater sales. It is highly desirable that life should be bettered and human labor lightened by these ever more wonderful and capable mechanical marvels. But we pay for this advance in the people these devices turn from their jobs, and this goes on at a rate that will soon compel serious attention and more practical remedies than calling conferences, writing books, or making speeches.

Commissioner Stewart well says that waiting for new industrial development is of little avail to these people. Their jobs are gone. Inventive genius, he tells us, must devise new industries, new public needs must be found and met. The time has come when the employer who plans to equip his plant with new mechanical devices must regard, as a natural accompaniment to this new step, the duty of finding new occupations for the men he is going to displace. I believe the same public opinion, now so much aroused over the present conditions of unemployment, will some day be strong enough to force this humane attitude on every employer.

As a matter of fact, alert business men are already awake to this necessity of developing new inventions and new industries. One man has begun, as a separate business, the fostering and financing of new inventions. The editor of a scientific weekly reports that manufacturers are applying to him in considerable numbers for information regarding new commodities with a fair chance of pleasing the public. And the same editor reports that since January 1 of this year the number of patents applied for to his immediate knowledge exceeds by far all previous records.

Business men in general now well understand that any considerable body of people out of employment are a menace to the prosperity of all. They realize that unemployment takes hundreds of thousands of consumers out of the market, and that maximum prosperity results only when every worker is employed and paid at a rate that will give him full purchasing power. There is every humanitarian reason why unemployment should be prevented, so far as we are able to do so; but there is thus a strong economic and business reason for watching these causes of unemployment and stopping them, so far as we can.

Nothing so demoralizes a man as vainly searching for work. No one who has not sympathetically witnessed this human demoralization which comes from the protracted and unsuccessful search for work can fully realize the invisible and incomputable cost to industry and to mankind that results from that demoralization. Loss of wages, loss of production, loss of purchasing power, can be at least approximately counted in dollars and cents. The utter shattering of morale can not be computed. It can nevertheless be felt by the entire country. Remedies for unemployment can not be supplied by laws. The remedies must come through thought and action—the thought and action of many minds. I think the Senate, in obtaining this information as to the exact amount of unemployment, has done much more than relieve the country of alarm. It has focused national attention on these causes of unemployment, and out of that stimulated attention will come, I hope, the ultimate remedy.

I call to mind the proclamation of George Washington to the people of the United States, dated October 3, 1789, which history records as follows:

> May we unite in most humbly offering our prayers and supplications to the great Lord and Ruler of Nations, and beseech Him to pardon our national and other transgressions; to enable us all, whether in public or private stations, to perform our several and relative duties properly and punctually; to render our National Government a blessing to all the people by constantly being a Government of wise, just, and constitutional laws, discreetly and faithfully executed and obeyed, to protect and guide all nationals and to bless them with good governments, peace, and concord; to promote the knowledge and practice of true religion and virtue, and the increase of science among them and us; and generally to grant unto all manknd such a degree of temporal prosperity as He alone knows to be best.

The Great Creator of this world has blessed America beyond any other country. He placed within her borders the basic materials upon which great industries are established and maintained. Her greatness is not found alone in her unlimited resources, but also in her manhood and womanhood. Nothing should be done to shake the confidence of the people in their Government. Senators, it is great to be an American. Let us sustain the laws and Constitution of our country. God protect and bless America.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. The tenor of the Senator's argument in explaining why there is so much unemployment was to the effect that labor-saving devices have become so universal, especially in the manufacturing plants of America, that vast armies of erstwhile employed have been turned loose.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has made the statement in a very much broader way than I made it.

Mr. SMITH. Then to whatsoever extent the Senator had in mind, he says this movement is going on, and he gave us an illustration that in the telephone business the invention and use of the little dial would turn loose in New York City, perhaps, 20,000 telephone operators. The Senator gave that as an illustration. Every man who is at all acquainted with manufacturing processes knows that labor-saving devices are more generally employed in manufacturing plants than elsewhere. Therefore, as labor-saving devices are perfected and adopted from time to time, labor is turned loose.

The Senator from Utah is the high priest of the protective tariff. We have been met with the argument upon this floor every time the question has been brought up that we were not justified in demanding that American labor should be put on a footing with the pauper labor of Europe. Now, according to the Senator's argument, Europe at least gives employment to her so-called pauper labor, while our protective and imperialistic manufacturers turn laboring men out on the street. I presume that we will be asked to keep the tariff up not in order to protect American labor but to protect and improve labor-saving devices. That is the logic of the situation. Although the effect of the adoption of labor-saving devices is to turn loose on helpless society millions of unemployed, yet, because it is more profitable to employ labor-saving devices than it is man power, labor-saving devices will be employed and man power will be turned loose. Are we to maintain a high protective tariff for the purpose of increasing the power of the few further to develop labor-saving devices and to protect machines as against human beings? That is the point.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course the Senator has looked at only one phase of the situation; he has missed the whole idea. He took one part of what I said, but never took into consideration the remainder. I wish to say to the Senator that labor-saving devices have been and are being adopted by foreign countries. I wish to say further that our foreign competitors will produce goods with similar machines just as cheaply as they can be produced in the United States, even if wages were the same; and, without protection to American industry, that there would be not only 1,800,000 men out of employment as this time, but there would be five or six or seven million out of employment.

It has been stated upon this floor that there were four or five or six million people out of employment. That was an exaggeration; the figures do not justify such a statement. In regard to the situation in New York the reports of that State as to unemployment in New York show the percentage to be 5.8, and that is approximately what the estimate is for the entire United States. That includes the voluntary as well as the involuntary unemployed.

I cut from a newspaper only this morning a notice concerning a dispute between the bricklayers and the steel board. The clipping goes on to say that in New York five or six thousand men working on 11 skyscrapers which are being erected in the city of New York are walking out to-day. That may happen at any time.

Mr. SMITH. There is another feature——

Mr. SMOOT. Wait a moment. That condition will happen at any time whenever there is a dispute between the builders of skyscrapers or the operators of any industry and the men who are employed. There is nothing that will stop that. Nothing can stop it. They have the right to strike, and they should be protected in their rights. There never will be a time when there is not some unemployment in the United States; but, as compared with any other country in all the world, there is no unemployment to speak of in the United States.

Mr. SMITH. Just one other feature of the Senator's very remarkable and illuminating and helpful statement: In proportion as these labor-saving devices are installed, the Senator will agree that that is an evidence that it is more profitable to employ the labor-saving devices than to employ human labor?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, certainly; and everybody knows it—that is, I mean, they can make goods cheaper.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; they can make them cheaper.

Mr. SMOOT. And in order to do that they have to compete with the world; and that is what they are trying to do now, and are doing, in many industries in the United States.

Mr. SMITH. In the record of several manufacturing concerns with which I am personally acquainted I have seen no evidence whatever of any reduction in price. The installation of the lavor-saving devices has not resulted in any appreciable decline in the price of the product.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, the Senator has not followed the industries of the country. If they had not had the improved machinery, and had paid the same wages that they are paying to-day, the prices to-day would not be the same that they are to-day. They would be a great deal higher, and the Senator knows it.

Mr. SMITH. That is a mere inference, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not an inference; it is an absolute fact.

Mr. SMITH. The facts are that manufactured articles to-day are out of all line with any time in our history; and the facts are that there are more absolutely unemployed than ordinarily during what we might term a normal period. We are 10 or 12 years away from the World War; and surely this wonderful "prosperity" that has been proclaimed abroad ought not to give rise, even in the wildest imagination, to the idea that we have an army, according to the Senator's own admission, of over 1,000,000 ablebodied men and women walking the streets.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Nearly 2,000,000—1,800,000.

Mr. SMITH. I am corrected here—practically 2,000,000; and that is a mere estimate on the part of the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is not a mere estimate on the part of the Senator.

Mr. SMITH. My impression is that it is nearer the original mark of 5,000,000 than 2,000,000; and if we were to take a census of the unemployed throughout this country by virtue of the absorption of capital within certain arbitrary regions, and the earning power of the masses being cut to the bone, if we had a census of those actually unemployed to-day—I do not mean the voluntary unemployed ones; I mean those that are forced out of jobs—it would far exceed the figure that the Senator has stated.

Mr. SMOOT. Evidently the Senator has not read the report of the Department of Labor. If the Senator will read that report, I think he will come to the conclusion that it is absolutely fair. There is no time when there have not been about a million men out of employment in the United States, necessarily so, in the regular change of business.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, temporarily out of employment, perhaps.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the case here. These people are temporarily out of employment.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator from Massachusetts a few days ago spoke with some authority from his region. Other Senators rose and gave the facts as they pertained to their localities. Now the Senator from Utah gets up and explains it on the ground that labor-saving devices have been employed by the great protected interests of this country, and have turned loose this flood of American citizens without any employment at all; and then he asks us to pass a tariff bill to protect machines as against human beings in a foreign country!

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I think I have the floor.

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, pardon me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] has the floor. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. Pardon me, then.

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], who has been on his feet for some time.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desired to interrupt the Senator while he was making his statement. I have been delighted to see that the Senator is not only familiar with many statistics and practically all the governmental statistics, but the Senator has developed into a real orator and made his speech in a strain of eloquence that we rarely hear in this Chamber. I am glad to see him in this new rôle; but I should like to ask the Senator where he got all of the statistics that he has given the Senate with reference to these new inventions and the number of people who have been put out of employment because of these new inventions?

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure the Senator has not followed the reports in the press. Not only that, but I will say to the Senator that I get the statements from the Department of Labor here as to unemployment. If the Senator will read the report to which I referred, I think he will become convinced that it is absolutely correct.

Mr. SIMMONS. When was that report made?

Mr. SMOOT. It was made since the speech of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] in answer to that. Of course, they are making these examinations all the time.

Mr. SIMMONS. In other words, the objective of the speech of the Senator from Utah to-day is to account for the enormous number of unemployed people in this country.

Mr. SMOOT. Not the enormous quantity; the actual number.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think I may use that term properly, and I think I should.

Immediately upon its being brought to the attention of the country that there was an enormous amount of unemployment, estimated conservatively by the press of the country at that time at least 4,000,000 people, the governmental department concerned became exceedingly active in preparing arguments and securing statistics for the purpose of answering those estimates, which seemed to be so inconsistent with the contention of the party in power that prosperity prevails. It had been the avowed purpose of the administration to make "prosperity" the slogan of the next campaign, and these unemployment facts upset its prosperity propaganda, and it was seen therefore that they must be answered; this program would be upset, so these agencies of the administration got to work for the purpose of seeing if they could not find an answer, and they now present their answer in the speech of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. No; in the report that was made yesterday.

Mr. SIMMONS. Ah, the report that they made, and that report was sent to the Senator from Utah, and the Senator from Utah is the mouthpiece of these agencies that have been engaged in the work of trying to answer these published charges that went the rounds of the press and which seemed to be confirmed and generally acquiesced in.

Mr. SMOOT. Is there any other agency in the United States that could get that information? Is there any other agency anywhere?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Where?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will give it to the Senator if he will be quiet a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that there is not.

Mr. SIMMONS. If this information is to be furnished as the guide of the people, and if the people are expected to rely upon this information, I should like to have it gathered by people who are not interested in discounting the facts.

I have in my hand a telegram that came to me when this question was first presented to the Senate by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. The telegram is signed by Mr. F. D. Grist, who is the commissioner of labor and printing of my State, and is with reference to unemployment there. The date of it is March 7. I did not read it on the day it was received because I did not come into the Chamber on that day until after the debate was over. This telegram was a reply to an inquiry that I had wired Grist for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of unemployment in my State.

North Carolina has been regarded by the country at large as one of the most prosperous areas in the Republic. While New England was suffering with lack of employment in her textile industries, those of North Carolina were running full time and apparently we were enjoying a degree of prosperity that was not enjoyed even in the great protected State of Pennsylvania. We had no strikes; we had no people who were threatened with eviction and against whom the doors of factories were locked.

Commissioner Grist has a system in North Carolina that, as I understand it, enables him to ascertain definitely at short intervals the number of people out of employment. He does this by means of suboffices scattered all over the State, whose agents in charge make daily or weekly reports to the Raleigh office as to the unemployment conditions in their respective districts. It is the business of these agents to check up every day the number of people usually employed who are then out of employment and to try to procure employment for them. On March 7 his reports showed an appalling fact, which I was very loath to publish. It was that 70,000 people, representing about 30 per cent of the total employed, were then out of employment in my State.

Commissioner Grist's telegram is as follows:

RALEIGH, N. C., March 7, 1928.

Hon. F. M. SIMMONS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Approximately 70,000 unemployed in North Carolina. About 30 per cent of total number employed represented by the number of unemployed.

F. D. GRIST.

Mr. President, the Senator has appealed—I presume he has; his party has, at least—to the department that he says is the only department that can gather these statistics to gather information in order to enable him to answer this charge that overwhelmed and discounted the main slogan upon which the Republican Party expected to win the election next November; and here comes the story the Senator wished for from the head of an executive department of this administration, and the story is that this unemployment is the result of new machinery, inventions, and devices by which people are thrown out of work.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] asked a very pertinent question: "Has this been accompanied with a commensurate reduction in the price of manufactured products?" The Senator answers that it has. But, Mr. President, let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that these new instruments and the new inventions to which he refers, reducing the cost of production in the arts and in the industries, do not apply to agriculture. There have been but few labor-saving machines produced that are applicable to agriculture, as the Senator from South Carolina, who is familiar with this question, will bear me out.

Yet in agriculture, where there have been no such inventions to throw people out of employment and to reduce the cost of production, the products of the farm have continuously fallen in price, while the products of the industries where these labor-saving machines are used have not fallen in any such proportion, if at all, as the result of their use.

Mr. President, I do not accept the facts that are now presented by the Department of Labor. I do not admit that this departmental inquiry has been an impartial one. On the contrary, I believe there is reason at least to suspect that a political motive is involved in the low estimate made. Nobody will say that the State I represent is not representative of the highest industrial progress and prosperity in the United States. Nobody will say that North Carolina has suffered more than any other States in this Union. No one probably will argue that my State has suffered even equally in the loss of employment by its people with the majority of the States of this Union. But if other States have suffered in the same proportion that Commissioner Grist says North Carolina has suffered in the matter of unemployment, then instead of there being a million unemployed, or 1,800,000 unemployed, there are between three and four million people unemployed in the United States.

I did not rise except for the purpose of expressing my dissent to this answer of the Republican Party, through its spokesman in this Chamber, to the facts and charges that were not disputed anywhere until the filing of this report, formulated upon statistics gathered—in what manner I can not say—by those who were seeking desperately to find some way to save their exploded issue of "prosperity."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Utah has been most illuminating. We have the frank admission from him that the unemployed of the country, whatever the number may be, can expect no remedy through legislation. We ought to be grateful to have that information at least.

We have also received from him the information that the present unemployment and depressed business condition of this country is due to the inventive genius of the American people.

Mr. SMOOT. Partly so.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. We have made such tremendous strides in inventions that we are doing away with employment, and the army of unemployed must continue to steadily increase without any remedy that can be proposed by the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the Senator does not want to do an injustice to me.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I certainly do not.

Mr. SMOOT. I never made any such statement as that. That was only a reference to some of the things that led to unemployment.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. What reason has the Senator given for the unemployment?

Mr. SMOOT. There is seasonal unemployment, for one thing.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Because it is winter or spring? Is that seriously stated as the cause of the present grave unemployment situation?

Mr. SMOOT. And voluntary unemployment is another. I will say to the Senator now that just as soon as spring opens, and men go to the fields, and go to the building of houses, mechanics of all kinds, this country will have employment.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Does the Senator withdraw the statement, I understood him to make, that the present unemployment is due to the large number of machine inventions that are doing away with the necessity of a great number of employees in the manufacturing industries and commercial establishments of the country?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator could not have listened to what I said. That was only an incidental thing that I had reference to. I called attention to one machine and stated just exactly what was happening. I did refer to the telephone disk that was coming out, and I believe with all my heart that there will not be a telephone girl employed in the District of Columbia by 1930. I do not think there will be one. That is only incidental, however. I called attention to that fact in what I stated.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Then I can only say that I have not been enlightened by what the Senator said as to the causes of unemployment.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I did understand the Senator to give considerable attention in his prepared address to the suggestion that modern inventions were rapidly doing away with the number of workers in our population.

I want to call attention to this fact, that with all our marvelous inventions and our improved mechanical devices, and our mass production, there have been little or no benefits of a financial nature to the American public at large. All these great inventions, all this movement toward mass production which is doing away with the independent producer and manufacturer, has resulted and is resulting in increased cost of living to the American people, and is unfortunately resulting, according to the Senator from Utah, as I understood him, in reducing the number of employees in the country. If the cost of living is not reduced and the number of unemployed increases, of what benefit to the masses are these modern inventions?

Mr. President, I refuse to take the position that there is no remedy of a legislative character against increasing unemployment. One of the greatest curses of modern civilization is unemployment. For years past, since the World War, there have been, and there are now, at this very moment, departments of this Government studying and planning military defense and a military defense policy for this country in the event of another war. They have ready to present quickly a legislative program providing for conscription of man power and industry, the formulating of plans for financing, and the military tactics to pursue in the event of a future war. Why not a board of officials to study, anticipate, and prepare to meet the recurring internal conflicts that bring so much grief and so many hardships to the families of the wage earners? Are economic convulsions that impoverish millions and cause sickness, destitution, and misery to vast numbers of our neighbors of no concern to the Government?

I believe a government which is organized to promote the "happiness and well-being" of human beings should be active and alert in remedying the condition that now confronts the country, and which may result in as serious injury as a great conflagration or earthquake, either of which stirs instantly the whole Nation with the spirit of giving quickly in order to send prompt relief to the sufferers. It appears that our hearts and pocketbooks are only touched by the calamities that come suddenly and unexpectedly.

How much longer must this Nation decline to extend a helping hand or offer to make a serious study of the present unemployment catastrophe which has been increasing in proportion steadily for more than two years? It is bad enough not to advance some help or remedy, but the discouraging feature is that many in places of leadership refuse to admit the very existence of the problem.

There are many aspects of this question that a board such as I suggest could study as a basis for remedial recommendations. For instance, it could anticipate periods of unemployment by having plans for new governmental work prepared. Also, it should study the important question of unemployment insurance. But nothing will be, or can be accomplished, if the personnel of such a board is unsympathetic with the subject or indifferent to the wants and needs of the wage earners whose lives are affected very vitally by employment conditions.

I do not think it is possible to exaggerate the extent of unemployment in this country to-day. I received recently a letter from the editor of a newspaper which has one of the largest circulations of any newspaper in the United States. Its columns are open to the public. The editor called my attention to the fact that of all the streams of letters coming into that paper, from all classes of readers, discussing public questions, the outstanding question discussed by the writers was unemployment.

A few days ago I received another letter not unlike many others received that impressed me very forcibly. It was written by a man of standing and of education, one interested in public affairs. He said:

> If you could only know and see and understand what is going on in certain parts of this country, what I have observed in my own experience, the man of family leaving his home in the morning, leaving the children in the care of his wife, and searching through the shops and factories for employment, returning at noon for the wife to go out in the afternoon and leave the children with the husband to be taken care of while she searched for employment.

That is going on in every large city in this country, and going on in increasing proportions. In fact, it is generally agreed that the unemployment conditions in this country during the months of February and March of this year were of larger proportions than at any time in recent years. From every part of the country and from almost every line of business the reports are of depressed business conditions.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. If I understood the Senator from Utah, he said that these statistics had been gathered since this matter was brought up in the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I did not say that.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator said what was equivalent to that.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can put whatever construction on my statement he wants to. I said they were prepared after the resolution was introduced, but had been gathered some time before. The Department of Labor is constantly gathering such statistics. They have monthly reports from every city and every county and every State. It is not a spontaneous thing brought about because of the resolution that was passed here. The Senator can get the information for any month and any year.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. But it is very spontaneous to take the position that they have taken now, in view of their assertions repeatedly that there was no unemployment.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator say those statistics are not right?

Mr. SIMMONS. There was no public statement from the department, so far as I know, as to the unemployment in the United States, even if they had the facts, until after the discussion in the Senate and after the resolution of inquiry was passed. If they had not taken the statistics before, they certainly could not have gathered facts that would have been of a reliable character in the short time that has elapsed since the resolution was passed.

Mr. SMOOT. May I say to the Senator that he can get the monthly reports from the Department of Labor referring to a time before the resolution was ever thought of. The statistics are reported every month, and if the Senator will make an investigation he will find no difference between this report and those that were issued before.

Mr. SIMMONS. If they had discovered before this matter was brought to the attention of the Senate and the resolution passed that there was unemployment to the extent of a million, while the papers were stating that it amounted to 4,000,000, why did they not issue the statement then and there?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the statements are issued. Any Senator can get them. The Department of Labor is not in politics and talking for political purposes and making statements that are unjustified.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I wanted to ask the Senator from Utah a question.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator recall the speech of Dr. Julius Klein, who is at the head of one of the statistical bureaus of the Department of Labor?

Mr. SMOOT. He has nothing to do with the Department of Labor.

Mr. WAGNER. He spoke in behalf of the Department of Labor.

Mr. SMOOT. He could not have.

Mr. WAGNER. And stated there was no unemployment in this country to speak of.

Mr. SMOOT. Doctor Klein is not connected with the Department of Labor in any way, shape, or form.

Mr. WAGNER. The Department of Commerce, I mean.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. He spoke for the administration.

Mr. SMOOT. The Department of Labor keeps the statistics as to the unemployment of labor in this country, and not Doctor Klein.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, up to the time of the passing of this resolution, the very welkin rang with the cry of prosperity, everybody with plenty of work to do.

Mr. SMOOT. And there is prosperity, more in this country than in anywhere else in all the world, and always will be.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I wanted to ask the opinion of the Senator from Massachusetts in regard to an inquiry. I am sure he will understand the spirit in which I am asking it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. We have been sitting for nearly a month in the coal investigation, and it has come out that there is a surplus of labor of about two-fifths in the coal industry. There is a limited demand for coal, almost unlimited resources, and a large surplus of labor. Just before dinner I asked a very distinguished labor leader, who is an unusually brilliant and fair-minded man, why they did not get that surplus of coal miners into some other industry. He answered in extenso, in a rather convincing statement, that that could not be done, that there was no possibility for it, and went on to state why. With the statement of fact that there is rather serious unemployment in coal mining, and the statement we can not get the men into any other industry, what would be the Senator's remedy for such unemployment? I am asking him in a spirit of desire to know whether he has an opinion and a remedy.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I will say to the Senator that the suggestion is not a new one. The condition he describes has existed for years in the soft-coal mining industry. Am I not correct?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Once a miner becomes trained in the mining of soft coal he will not enter any other kind of employment.

Mr. FESS. That is the statement which was made to us this morning.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. He will not even mine hard coal, if I am correctly informed. The situation which the Senator describes has been in existence for a number of years. There are periods of time when employment is very good. There are periods of time when there are large numbers unemployed and unable to get employment because the demand for coal becomes limited. I have no suggestion as to how to remedy a condition when people out of work refuse to take up another form of employment.

Mr. FESS. That has been the answer which has been made whenever we have asked the question.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I have not been talking about the unemployment condition in the soft-coal territory, which I do not think is any different from what it has been in years gone by in periods of depression in the coal industry.

Mr. FESS. The Senator said he did not believe we were without a remedy for unemployment, and I wondered what remedy he would apply to the situation. The situation is embarrassing.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think it is a matter that might well be studied and given thoughtful consideration by the committee. Of course, there are particular cases of unemployment where it is difficult to find an immediate remedy.

Mr. FESS. We are doing that.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Some method ought to be devised for solving it, if possible; but, of course, if men will not work anywhere else except in a certain given locality and there is no work there no government can do anything. But we are talking of unemployment in general, and there are hundreds of thousands of working people, men and women, who are willing to go into any locality or a different kind of employment if they can be assured of work.

This is an age of prevention activities in government. Health departments are constantly striving to prevent the spread of disease. Departments of education are studying the problem of the elimination of ignorance. Where is the Government department that is studying the problem of preventing want, suffering, sickness, and even crime resulting primarily from unemployment? I refuse to subscribe to the assertion that there is no remedy. What is needed is leadership. Leadership that will formulate for the Congress and the State legislatures a program, not based upon political but upon broad humanitarian lines; that will rally all unselfish, public-spirited citizens to support such a program as may make some contribution to the happiness and contentment of the men, women, and children employed in our industrial and commercial life.

Mr. President, I want to say that one benefit of the present discussion is the fact that there is apparently a willingness now, upon the part of those who have been asserting that we are enjoying unparalleled prosperity, to admit that there is some unemployment in the country. It has been asserted for the past two years again and again that we were prosperous because of the great activity in the stock market, because of increased bank deposits, because of the large dividends that were being earned by large financial interests of the country. When it has been asserted that the independent manufacturers and the small merchants were not prosperous, figures showing large financial returns and profits from certain big financial combines have been presented. Conditions have gone on to such an extent and now the army of the unemployed has increased to such proportions that it is necessary to make some admissions and for the first time we hear, notwithstanding the fact that the claim of prosperity is still proclaimed, that there are almost 2,000,000 unemployed people in the country.

I want to say what I have hitherto said repeatedly, that big business is prosperous, that stock speculators are prosperous, that financial gamblers are prosperous, that those who have great wealth are prosperous, and never more so. But I say without fear of successful contradiction that there has not been a time since the World War when the small independent manufacturer who is not a part of an industrial monopoly, when the small retail merchant who is not a part of the retail business monopolistic combines, has been so depressed and his business in such jeopardy as to-day. There has not been a time when there has been such an appalling number of men and women willing and anxious to work, seeking employment. During all this time no one in the present administration has dared to assume leadership and ask that these great economic revolutions which are taking place in the country be studied in order to determine when or what the end will be. How far are we going with unchecked monopoly and with the movements that are crushing out the great middle class of people in the country? Is it true, as has been boldly and brazenly stated, that before long the American people will be a nation of hired men and women, that all the wealth will be in the hands of a very few, a very limited number of people, and the millions be then hired help, without any appreciable class of business men? Is the result of these financial combines to be a capitalistic class and a working class with the middle class exterminated? Are these problems of no concern to statesmen? Is the chief purpose of government to help the wealth of the country combine and grow larger and more powerful without regard to the economic status of the millions of other patriotic citizens?

The income-tax returns confirm and prove that the number of millionaires has been and is increasing by leaps and bounds during these last few years of increasing unemployment and business depression. It is useless to expect that some department in the Government might give immediate attention to the very serious and grave economic results that are coming in the way of unemployment and failures and ruin to the great middle class of the country by reason of the consolidation and federation of wealth in the hands of the great monopolies of the country.

Yes; they are prosperous, and they are bringing with their prosperity ruin to millions of independent merchants, driving out of employment millions of men and women who want to work. The saddest part of it all is that these monopolies, increasing prices, getting here whatever tariff protection they demand, are supported, encouraged, and defended by the Government. They prove the existence of prosperity by pointing to the huge income-tax returns of the millionaires and the big profits of the trusts and monopolies and to the increasing stock market rises. There is not a merchant in this city or any other city of America who is not passing through the most grave business crisis of his whole career. If you talk with some of them they will tell you that they realize they are facing what they know is certain death and annihilation. I am referring to the struggling, independent merchant, who has been the backbone of the country, who has given to the country a superior citizenship, who has helped to stabilize and keep our country away from radicalism and the other isms because he had a stake in the country.

I know the attitude of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. The Senator may well say we are prosperous. He may well say, "Look at the stock markets, look at the big bank deposits, look at the dividends ever increasing." I say we are not prosperous. It is unhealthy prosperity. It is unsound. It spells economic ruin if it is not checked or regulated.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] said that oil will not be the issue in the next election. I will tell the Senate what might well be the issue. If some candidate will come forward and challenge the present economic tendencies in the country and the alliance between the big economic interests in the country and politics, he will have a real issue. Monopoly and its partnership with politics some day is going to be the issue. It may not be oil, but it will be money, money in politics used to corrupt politics, money in business used to corrupt business and to exploit the American people. The business interests that spend large sums of money in corrupting politics and public officials will use the same means and use their business for the purpose of exploiting and extorting from the public and crushing out the weak and the man of limited financial resources.

Mr. President, the situation in this country to which I have referred is an ever-increasing and crying menace. I repeat, the saddest part of it all is that few will admit it. When we protest, the word "prosperity" is flung back in our faces and not a voice is raised, not a movement is made to curtail and restrict these excesses and to bring back real genuine prosperity which will reach down to all the people.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. For the sake of argument, admitting that there is unemployment, will the Senator be good enough to suggest his remedy?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. If the Senator had been in attendance upon the Senate a few days ago, he would have known that I spoke on the subject and named many different remedies. I pointed out various pending bills that would help reduce the miseries and burdens of unemployment. If the Senator will be kind enough to read my speech, he will find that I stated different kinds of legislation and different governmental proposals that could be made. A few moments ago I proposed a remedy which, if the Senator had been in his seat at the time, he would have heard and therefore would not have asked this question. It was for the Government to do now something to prevent future unemployment, misery, and suffering in the nature of what it is now doing through another bureau to prevent unfavorable results of another war—anticipating conditions that may arise in the event of trouble with another nation that would be detrimental to our country.

I say an administration that is interested in human beings and not mere dollars would make for itself an opportunity to study the economic conditions and the reasons for recurring periods of unemployment and be ready to come forward with a program of relief in the way of construction of public buildings, and so forth. Would the Senator agree to such a proposal?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has a bill pending, either on the calendar or before one of the committees, which seeks to remedy in part the causes of unemployment. There is plenty of legislation to be enacted and there are plenty of ways to help solve the problem if one is friendly disposed and sincerely interested in trying to do something.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Personally I do not think legislation would start up a mill, necessarily. There is unemployment. Men are seeking work. We must have industry going, mines being worked, farms plowed, forests being cut down. We must have some business going on.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. We must find out what the cause is for closing mines and mills.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. We all know the conditions.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Does the Senator know what the cause it?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. There are many causes.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Will the Senator admit what the cause is?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. There are seasonal causes.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Oh, seasonal causes. It is winter that is the cause when it is winter, it is summer that is the cause when it is summer, and it is spring that is the cause when it is spring!

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. There are many reasons. Of course, at times men will be out of employment.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I hope we will have something said in the Senate for the cause of this unemployment besides the amusing statement that it is seasonal.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Speeches will not make employment.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Talking will help to bring about action. Silence and indifference and talk of prosperity unbounded will not do it.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. We have to have new industries established. Perhaps a free trade bill would give employment to America?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I suggest that the Senator try it if he thinks it will.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do not think it would, in point of truth. Sometimes I would even favor an embargo in order that goods consumed by the American people might be produced by them.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. During a period of depression?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. During many periods. But I do not wish to pursue the matter further at this time.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator, I hope, will agree with me that some department of our Government might well be thinking about the problem and making recommendations. Does not the Senator agree to that?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I think the Senator from Massachusetts is just as competent to think on the subject as is any department that might be set up. Let us do a little thinking and perhaps some one will propose a specific remedy.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I will say that I think the question is of such magnitude and importance that no one Senator can suggest a solution for the question.

Aside from temporary relief in the way of providing employment by advancing building and improvement work which a sympathetic municipal, State, or National Government could provide at periods of business depression, I think it highly desirable to institute a permanent national board of officials—for example, three Cabinet officers—under whose direction experts could study this question, investigate the cause, and suggest remedies. In the States three department heads could constitute such a board.

We have now and always have had a group of Army and Navy officers studying and preparing plans for the defense of the country in the event of war.

I think it is a most important question, for which political leadership of the proper sympathetic kind should find a solution, just as is being done by the progressive governors of the various States, who, in their own limited spheres, are trying to find a solution for the question.

Mr. President, I did not intend to speak so long. I merely desired to emphasize the fact that we now have an admission, at least, that though the country is claimed to be still prosperous, though the prosperity claim is repeated by the majority party, there is unemployment to the extent admittedly of nearly 2,000,000; but the cause of that unemployment, I repeat, as I understood the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], is the inventive genius of the American people. Never before has invention and improvement in industry resulted in greatly reducing employment; rather has it opened up new, larger, and wider opportunity for the working classes.

Mr. McKELLAR obtained the floor.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas will state it.

Mr. CURTIS. I am not going to object to the Senator from Tennessee now yielding, but I am going to give notice that hereafter I shall object to Senators obtaining the floor and yielding it to other Senators. The rule provides that a Senator may yield for a question but prohibits a Senator from securing the floor and then parceling out the time for the remainder of the afternoon.

Mr. WAGNER. I shall occupy the floor for only a moment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will say to my friend from Kansas——

Mr. CURTIS. I am merely serving notice; that is all.

Mr. McKELLAR. That I think the debate on the unemployment situation has been very enlightening, and I see no reason why it should not have taken place. Under those circumstances I yielded, and I am going now to yield to my friend from New York to finish the debate.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I do not propose to prolong the debate on this question except, in the first place, to express in all modesty some degree of satisfaction that the resolution seeking information as to unemployment has at least agitated the mind of the Senate and has called the attention of the public to an important social subject which has been ignored by our legislative bodies. I received a copy of the printed report only this morning; I have not had an opportunity to study it with any great care, nor have I had the time. I have read sufficient of it, however, to be confident that upon a later occasion, perhaps some day next week, I shall be able to show that the very figures contained in the report warrant the conclusion that the total number of unemployed far exceeds the number reported by the Commissioner of Labor Statistics. I am also confident that I shall sustain the position which I took two weeks ago, that there are about 4,000,000 men out of employment.

I do not want to have this subject considered from a political or partisan point of view. I regard it as superior to partisan considerations. It is a vital social problem; to my way of thinking, there is no economic disease so serious to our whole economic well being as is the question of involuntary unemployment.

I merely want to say to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that I do not want to go into details now as to statistics, but I think I understood him to say that there was about only 5 per cent of unemployment in the State of New York.

Mr. SMOOT. I said that the report of the Department of Labor shows that there is 5.8 per cent of unemployment in the State of New York; not only that——

Mr. WAGNER. To what report does the Senator refer?

Mr. SMOOT. I refer to the report as made by the Department of Labor. I also added that the report of the State of New York shows about the same thing.

Mr. WAGNER. No; the Senator from Utah is mistaken.

Mr. SMOOT. I will show to the Senator from New York that the report so shows.

Mr. WAGNER. I looked at the report of the Department of Labor of New York but yesterday. It shows over 9 per cent of unemployment at this time. The report of the Secretary of Labor does not show the full measure of unemployment, because it simply compares the employment figures of one year with those of another year and shows a difference between the prior and subsequent year, without taking into consideration the amount of unemployment existing during the prior year, the whole resting on the assumption that there was no unemployment during the prior year which is used as the basis.

Mr. SMOOT. I am amazed that the Senator from New York should criticize his own State report in that way, because, if that be the case, the statistics might just as well never have been prepared, and the amount of the money that it cost to gather them has been absolutely thrown away.

Mr. WAGNER. Has the Senator from Utah at hand the report of the Department of Labor of New York, so that he may read the statement as to unemployment in that State being only about 5 per cent?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not read it, but I will say to the Senator that if he desires me to do so, I will send it to him.

Mr. WAGNER. I inquired of the Department of Labor of the State of New York, and was informed that their report for this month showed an unemployment figure of 9 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator a question. In the last two months has unemployment in New York increased nearly 100 per cent?

Mr. WAGNER. No.

Mr. SMOOT. A short time ago it was 5.8 per cent, and now the Senator states it as being 9 per cent.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator from Utah apparently has misunderstood the figures.

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator stated that the Department of Labor of the State of New York has made a report to the effect that unemployment was only 5 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. That it was 5.8 per cent.

Mr. WAGNER. And I am saying that there is presented a question as to which one of us is inaccurate. I am saying that the report of the department of labor shows no such percentage. I am sorry that I have not the report here, but I am sure that I can convince the Senator of that fact.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator was referring to a report of the State of New York showing an unemployment figure of 9 per cent.

Mr. WAGNER. In the State of New York; yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, the report of the State of New York does not conform to the figures supplied by that State and submitted in the report of the Department of Labor.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not know anything about that. I am talking about the report of the Department of Labor of the State of New York.

Mr. President, I had not the advantage, being absent from the Chamber in connection with a committee session, of hearing the observations which the distinguished Senator from Utah made in regard to the report of the Department of Labor as to the unemployment situation. I hope next week, however, as soon as I have had an opportunity of making a sufficiently careful study, to discuss the question and to back up whatever I may say with facts and statistics to show that the conclusion reached by the United States Department of Labor in the report which it has submitted is inaccurate and also to sustain my former position that a conservative estimate of unemployment in this country to-day shows that not less than 4,000,000 men are without work.

PROPOSED NICARAGUAN CANAL

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the proposal which I am about to make does not directly refer to the unemployment situation, but if the proposal shall be carried out it will have a tremendous effect upon lessening unemployment.

Eighteen years ago the United States Government completed the Panama Canal. Already that canal is giving signs of performing very nearly all the work of which it is capable. If traffic through that canal should continue to increase during the next 10 years as it has during the past 10 years, the canal will be clogged. It is absolutely necessary, as it seems to me, that there should be dug another canal and that it should be in Nicaragua. I have prepared, Mr. President, a bill providing for the digging of a canal in Nicaragua, and I am going to ask the clerk to read that bill as it will, I believe, be enlightening to the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska before the bill shall be read.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no doubt that the reading of the bill will be enlightening, but I am interested in a statement the Senator made. I should like to have him elucidate briefly the proposition he lays down to the effect that the Panama Canal will not be able to handle the business which may desire to use it. Can the Senator give more detailed information as to that?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have the figures and will present them as soon as the bill may be read.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator made the statement that if business shall increase during the next 10 years as it has during the past 10 the Panama Canal will be unable to handle the traffic. Are there indications that there will be such an increase, or has the traffic practically reached the maximum limit of the canal? I am not disputing the Senator's statement, the Senator understands.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that. The figures sustain the statement that I have made, that there has been a constant increase from the time the canal was first opened, with one exception, and that was during nine months of the first year or the second year, when, by reason of slides, the canal was closed.

Mr. NORRIS. I am merely seeking information.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not contesting the Senator's claim.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be glad to give the figures. I have them right here and will give them as soon as the clerk shall read the bill.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make an observation?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. I do not know that the Senator is familiar with the fact that on March 21, just a few days ago, the Senator from New Jersey introduced a joint resolution, being Senate Joint Resolution 117, providing for a continuation of the surveys for a Nicaraguan canal which were made, as I recall, about 1901, something over 25 years ago, in order to ascertain the engineering conditions existing there to-day, and the practicability of such a canal in comparison with a possible enlargement of the Panama Canal. As I understand the Senator, the bill which he has introduced and which he desires to have read at the desk directs the Government to construct a canal across Nicaragua.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. EDGE. I am merely calling the Senator's attention to the fact that proposed legislation is before the Senate, being now in the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, of which I have the honor of being chairman, suggesting a further survey in order to ascertain all the facts which it would seem to be advisable to have before we shall embark on such an enterprise.

I should like to say further—and then I will not interrupt the Senator again—that I am very much interested in the subject. Without taking snap judgment, for I want to have the benefit of whatever information a survey may afford, I think there is very strong argument in support of the contention for another interoceanic canal.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator for his interruption. I have not examined the joint resolution which the Senator introduced a short time ago, but there were very full, ample, and complete surveys made about the time the Senator suggests, or a little earlier, and those surveys, in my judgment, have shown the wisdom of building a canal in Nicaragua beyond a doubt. I will refer to them a little later. I now ask that the clerk read the bill which will give an outline of what is proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (S. 3789), as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Government of Nicaragua having by treaty with the Government of the United States signed at Washington on August 5, 1914, and duly ratified as required by the laws of both of said Governments and proclaimed June 24, 1916, granted in perpetuity to the Government of the United States, forever free from taxation, or other public charge, the exclusive proprietary rights necessary and convenient for the construction, operation, and maintenance of an interoceanic canal, by way of the San Juan River and the great Lake of Nicaragua, or by way of any route over Nicaraguan territory, the details of the terms upon which such canal shall be constructed, operated, and maintained to be agreed to by the two Governments whenever the Government of the United States shall notify the Government of Nicaragua of its desire or intention to construct such canal, the President of the United States is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to notify the Government of Nicaragua of its desire and intention to construct such canal and to agree upon the details of the terms under which such canal shall be constructed, operated, and maintained.

SEC. 2. The Senate of the United States, having in its ratification of the treaty with Nicaragua, as aforesaid, inserted the words: "It is declared by the Senate that in advising and consenting to the ratification of the said convention as amended, such advice and consent are given with the understanding, to be expressed as a part of the instrument of ratification, that nothing in said convention is intended to affect any existing right of any of the said named States," namely, Costa Rica, Salvador, and Honduras, the President is authorized and directed to enter into negotiations with said States and determine whether they, or any of them, have any interest in said proposed canal.

SEC. 3. That the President shall direct the Nicaraguan canal commission hereinafter authorized to cause to be excavated, constructed, completed, and perpetually maintained a ship canal connecting the Caribbean Sea with the Pacific Ocean by what is commonly known as the Nicaraguan route from a point on the shore of the Caribbean Sea near Greytown, by way of Lake Nicaragua, to a point near Brito, on the Pacific Ocean. Said canal shall be of sufficient capacity to accommodate vessels of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, and such as may be reasonably anticipated, and shall be supplied with all necessary locks and other appliances to meet the necessities of vessels passing through the same from ocean to ocean; and he shall also construct such safe and commodious harbors at the termini of said canal as shall be necessary for the safe and convenient use thereof, and shall make such provisions for defense as may be necessary for the safety and protection of said harbors and canal; and such sum or sums of money as may be agreed upon by such treaty as compensation to be paid to Nicaragua and Costa Rica for the concessions and rights hereunder provided to be acquired by the United States, are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid on warrant or warrants drawn by the President.

SEC. 4. That as soon as the details of the terms upon which said Nicaraguan canal shall be constructed, operated, and maintained and agreed upon by said Governments, the President shall cause the said Nicaraguan canal commission to make such surveys as may be necessary for said canal and harbors to be made, and in making such surveys and in the construction of said canal may employ such persons as he may deem necessary, and may fix their compensation.

In the excavation and construction of said canal the San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua, or such parts of each as may be made available, shall be used.

SEC. 5. That the sum of $10,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, toward the project herein contemplated, including preliminary investigations and surveys.

SEC. 6. That in any agreement heretofore made or hereinafter made with the Republics of Nicaragua or Costa Rica the President is hereby authorized to guarantee to said Republic or Republics the use of said canal and harbors upon such terms as may be agreed upon for all vessels owned by said Republic or Republics, or by citizens thereof, such agreement, however, to be confirmed by the Senate as in ordinary cases.

SEC. 7. That to enable the President as provided for in this act, there is hereby created the Nicaraguan canal commission, the same to be composed of five members, who shall be nominated and appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall serve until the completion of said canal unless sooner removed by the President, and one of whom shall be named as the chairman of said commission. At least three of them shall be persons learned and skilled in the science of engineering, and at least one of them shall be an officer of the United States Army, and at least one of them shall be an officer of the United States Navy, the said officer being either on the active or the retired list of the Army or Navy. Said commissioners shall each receive as compensation $12,000 per year, provided that in the case of Army and Navy officers said compensation shall be in lieu of their pay as officers. In addition to the members of said Nicaraguan canal commission, the President is hereby authorized to employ in said service any of the engineers in civil life, at his discretion, and any other persons necessary for the proper and expeditious prosecution of said work. The compensation of all such engineers and other persons employed under this act shall be fixed by the commission, subject to the approval of the President. Said commission shall in all matters be subject to the direction and control of the President, and shall make to the President annually and at such periods as may be required by order of the President full and complete reports of all their acts and doings and of all moneys received and expended in the construction of said work and in the performance of their duties in connection therewith, which said reports shall be by the President transmitted to the Congress. The said commission shall give such information as may at any time be required by act of Congress or by order of either House of Congress. The President shall cause to be provided and assigned for the use of the commission such offices as may, with the suitable equipment of the same, be necessary and proper, in his discretion, for the proper discharge of the duties thereof.

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to borrow on the credit of the United States from time to time, as the proceeds may be required to defray expenditures authorized by this act—such proceeds when received to be used only for the purpose of meeting such expenditures—the sum of $200,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and to prepare and issue therefor coupon or registered bonds of the United States in such form as he may prescribe, and in denominations of $20 or some multiple of that sum, redeemable in gold coin at the pleasure of the United States after 10 years from the date of their issue, and payable 30 years from such date, and bearing interest payable quarterly in gold coin at the rate of 3 per cent per annum; and the bonds herein authorized shall be exempt from all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority: Provided, That said bonds may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par, under such regulations as he may prescribe, giving to all citizens of the United States an equal opportunity to subscribe therefor, but no commission shall be allowed or paid thereon; and a sum not exceeding one-tenth of 1 per cent of the amount of the bonds herein authorized is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expense of preparing, advertising, and issuing the same.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it will be seen from the reading of this bill that it follows very closely the Panama Canal act, as it now is on the statute books. The only changes made are those changes that are necessary because of the different conditions, and because of treaties that have since been entered into.

As we all know, in 1914 a treaty was entered into between the United States and Nicaragua, proclaimed on June 24, 1916, by which treaty, for the consideration of $3,000,000, Nicaragua ceded to the United States exclusive proprietary rights for the operation and maintenance of an interoceanic canal by way of the San Juan River and the great Lake of Nicaragua, "or by way of any route over Nicaraguan territory." Since that time our Government has done nothing with this canal. The reason for that is very plain. We had but a short time before built the Panama Canal. We did not know whether that would accommodate the business of America and of the world or not, and naturally nothing has been done.

THE REASONS FOR BEGINNING CONSTRUCTION

Mr. President, the reasons for beginning construction of this canal are found in the report of the Governor of the Canal Zone, Hon. M. L. Walker, of date August 27, 1926. I first present a table taken from the report, showing the number of transits, net tonnage, total tonnage, and the amount of tolls:

Fiscal year ending June 30—	Number of transits	Panama Canal net tonnage	Tolls	Tons of cargo
1915	1,075	3,792,572	$4,367,550.19	4,888,454
1916	758	2,396,162	2,408,089.62	3,094,114
1917	1,803	5,798,557	5,627,463.05	7,058,563
1918	2,069	6,574,073	6,438,853.15	7,582,031
1919	2,024	6,124,990	6,172,828.59	6,916,621
1920	2,478	8,546,044	8,513,933.15	9,374,499
1921	2,892	11,415,876	11,276,889.91	11,599,214
1922	2,736	11,417,459	11,197,832.41	10,884,910
1923	3,967	18,605,786	17,508,414.85	19,567,875
1924	5,230	26,148,878	24,290,963.54	26,994,710
1925	4,673	22,855,151	21,400,523.51	23,958,836
1926	5,197	24,774,591	22,931,055.98	26,037,448
1927	5,475	26,227,815	24,228,830.11	27,748,215

It will be seen that in 1915 there were 1,075 transits; in 1916 these dropped off to 758. This was caused by slides which closed the canal for about seven months. In 1917 the number of transits increased to 1,803, in 1918 to 2,069, in 1919, 2,024, in 1920, 2,478, in 1921 to 2,892, in 1922 to 2,736, in 1923 to 3,967, in 1924, 5,230, in 1925, 4,673; in 1926, 5,197, in 1927, 5,475.

It will thus be seen, Mr. President, that the total number of transits in 12 years have increased from 1,075 to 5,475.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. What would be the maximum capacity? How near are we to it?

Mr. McKELLAR. We are not far from it, as I shall point out in just a few moments. The question that the Senator suggests will be dealt with by me almost immediately.

Under the title, "Hours of operation," on page 17 of the report, the governor says:

> The schedules outlined above for dispatching vessels through the canal require the Atlantic locks to be operated from 7 a. m. to 11 p. m. daily and the Pacific locks from 6.50 a. m. to 10.50 p. m. daily. Lengthening the hours of transit necessarily would prolong the hours of lock operation, which would mean added difficulties and increased costs of operation not only at the locks but for other divisions of the canal as well. Increase of traffic may eventually make an extension of operating hours advisable, but under present conditions it is not warranted.

So that, Mr. President, if it is a question now operating the canal for 16 hours a day, and that is what these figures show—as to whether the business can be done promptly, what will be the situation 10 years from now if business through the canal continues to increase? If it has increased 500 per cent in 12 years, it is reasonable to suppose that it will increase quite as largely in the next 12 years as it has in the past 12 years. If it does, manifestly the ships can not be put through the canal. Manifestly, it will be necessary for us to build another canal. We ought not to wait, Mr. President, for the present canal to be so congested as to turn away business before we start work on the Nicaraguan canal. For these reasons it seems to me that we ought to start work on the canal at once, and the bill that I have introduced is, in my judgment, the way to meet the situation.

THE COST OF THE CANAL

What the Nicaraguan canal may cost, Mr. President, of course, is problematical. We can only go by the cost of the Panama Canal. Personally, I do not believe the Nicaraguan canal will cost nearly as much as the Panama Canal, but, of course, we can not say positively.

I find in a report made by Senator Morgan, of Alabama, on the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, submitted January 18, 1900, that—

> The upper limit of cost, under the most favorable conditions as to the prices of labor and material and all incidental expenditures, and with ample capacity for the safe and rapid transit of the largest vessels, is $140,000,000. The lowest limit of cost is, probably, $70,000,000.

I digress from my manuscript at this time to interject another thought. The late Senator John T. Morgan was perhaps the best versed man on interoceanic canals in all the world. He made that a life study. He was a man of great ability, of marvelous learning, one of the greatest Senators who ever sat in this body, and while the Panama Canal was not the direct result of his labor and of his ability, he had more to do indirectly with its construction than perhaps any other man who ever lived in America.

While I am talking about Senator Morgan in this connection, I might say a word about another distinguished citizen, one of the greatest men this country ever produced in my opinion. It was he who selected the Panama route instead of the Nicaraguan route. His reason for that selection I need not go into. But in my judgment the greatest work that Theodore Roosevelt ever did in his eventful life was the building of the Panama Canal, connecting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. I figuratively take off my hat to that courageous and wonderful man who carried out that great project. Not long ago somebody asked me who I believed were the 10 first great Americans, and I included Mr. Roosevelt in that list. He wanted to know why. I said, "Because of his great work in connection with the Panama Canal."

That accomplishment was a wonderful thing. Perhaps no man in this country was ever more abused for wasteful and extravant use of the people's money than was Mr. Roosevelt abused for the expenditures in connection with the Panama Canal. Only 13 years have passed since its completion, and it has been a wonderful success, such a wonderful success that there is an absolute necessity, it seems to me, to supplement it with another canal.

The Panama Canal cost, in round numbers, about $370,000,000, exclusive of fortifications, including the $40,000,000 that we paid to the Panama Canal Co.

Our net yearly income from the canal after paying the entire cost of operation and also the interest on unpaid bonds amounts to $14,000,000, and constantly increasing. So it can easily be seen that it will not take long for the Panama Canal to pay itself out and furnish a very substantial income for the American people the rest of the time.

It is safe to say that the Nicaraguan canal can be made to do the same thing with a normal increase in the world's shipping business.

I ask unanimous consent that there be printed at this point in my remarks a table from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury issued on June 30, 1927, found on page 494.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Panama Canal receipts and expenditures for the fiscal years 1903 to 1927 [1]

[On basis of warrants issued]

Year	Construction, maintenance, and operation	Fortifications	Total	Interest paid on Panama Canal loans	Receipts covered into the Treasury
1903	$9,985.00		$9,985.00
1904	50,164,500.00		[2] 50,164,500.00
1905	3,918,819.83		3,918,819.83		$371,253.05
1906	19,379,373.71		19,379,373.71		380,680.10

[1] The above table does not include the payments to the Government of Panama under the treaty of Nov. 18, 1903, of $250,000 per annum, the first payment being made during the fiscal year 1913, and similar payments continuing each year since that date; nor does it include the payments to the Government of Colombia growing out of the construction of the Panama Canal of $5,000,000 per annum during the fiscal years 1923 to 1927, inclusive, an aggregate sum of $25,000,000 as provided for under the treaty of Apr. 6, 1914.

[2] This amount includes the $40,000,000 paid to the New Panama Canal Co. of France for the acquisition of the property, and the $10,000,000 paid to the Republic of Panama in connection with the Canal Zone as provided for under Article 14 of the treaty of Nov. 18, 1903.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to call attention briefly to this table. The first year the receipts amounted to only a little over $4,000,000. They constantly increased until now they are $25,000,000 a year. This represents the tolls paid by vessels going through the canal. The cost of operating the canal is about $7,000,000, leaving about $18,000,000 yearly as the income.

We owe about $134,000,000 on the bonds issued for the construction of the Panama Canal, and the net income of the canal for the next 10 years will probably more than pay all of these bonds.

As to the bonded indebtedness, I have the figures, and ask unanimous consent that they be made a part of the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

	Amount issued	Amount retired	Amount outstanding
2 per cent Panama Canal loan of 1916–1936	$54,631,980	$5,677,800	$48,954,180
2 per cent Panama Canal loan of 1918–1938	30,000,000	4,052,600	25,947,400
3 per cent Panama Canal loan of 1961	50,000,000	200,000	49,800,000

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I remember when the canal was first undertaken by President Roosevelt it was alleged by many that this would be a sink hole of the people's money; that it would never pay, and many of the friends of the project, as I recall, admitted that it would not pay, claiming, however, that it would be a most valuable enterprise, both for our commerce and for our defense in the event of war, whether it was a paying proposition to our Government or not. But, instead of its being a failure, it has been a wonderful success, and after 10 years the tolls charged were an important item of revenue for our Government.

BONDS TO BE ISSUED

This bill provides that $200,000,000 of bonds, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, shall be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury at 3 per cent for the purpose of paying for this work, the bonds to be issued as and when needed. This being a sea-level canal, I am in very great doubt as to whether it will cost even the $200,000,000. And yet the increased cost of production might make it cost more than the highest estimate—$140,000,000.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. I note that the Senator makes the affirmative statement that this would be a sea-level canal. Does the bill he proposes to introduce make that mandatory, that it shall be a sea-level canal?

Mr. McKELLAR. Indeed not, and I am glad the Senator has called attention to that fact. The bill provides that the President shall put in such locks as may be necessary. In other words, it is not certain that it will be a sea-level canal, and in order to make assurance doubly sure the provision is made that the commission appointed by the President to do the work may construct locks and dams if it is necessary.

Mr. EDGE. I asked that question because it is well known in this age of engineering development that a sea-level canal is much preferable because of the absence of locks and the expense of maintaining locks.

Mr. McKELLAR. We have found that out.

Mr. EDGE. On the other hand, that is one of the reasons for the absolute necessity of a survey. The determination of the kind of canal becomes a matter of engineering. It would seem to me to be almost impossible of execution from a business standpoint to direct the Government to construct a canal, sea level or otherwise, until a survey had been brought down to date, with the newer engineering methods and ideas relating to sea-level canals.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that section 3 of the proposed bill authorizes the appropriation of $10,000,000 for preliminary surveys and other necessary acts, such as acquiring the property from Costa Rica as provided in this measure.

Mr. EDGE. But, irrespective of their reports, I understand the bill directs the construction?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; after the surveys shall have been made.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. Why appropriate any money to purchase territory from Costa Rica? Why not just organize a little revolution down there, the way the Government did when it took away from Colombia the territory on which the canal was constructed?

Mr. McKELLAR. That method might be pursued, but it does not meet my approval and is not provided for in my bill.

Mr. BLAINE. I am very happy to know that it does not meet the approval of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am wholly opposed to taking anything from any other nation; I am wholly opposed to taking an inch of their territory by forceful methods; and this bill provides only the most peaceful and peaceable methods in the world. A little later on I want to explain to the Senate and to the Senator just what I have in view in that connection.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. BLAINE. I observe in the course of the Senator's remarks that he says the Panama Canal cost, in round figures, $370,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Exclusive of amounts spent for fortifications and other military features connected with it.

Mr. BLAINE. Does that $370,000,000 include the $25,000,000 that was recently settled upon the Republic of Colombia in acknowledgment of the wrong America did in taking her territory by a coup d'état in Washington?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it did not. I voted for the measure to repay Colombia; I thought we ought to do it; but that item of $25,000,000 paid Colombia is not included in these figures. And yet, whatever the cost of production, I am sure it would more than pay its way, and in presenting this matter to Congress and the people of the United States I am sure that we can quite safely say that it will be a good investment as well as a most desirable construction.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, has the Senator considered the possibility of the enlargement of the Panama Canal? Is that possible?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not believe that it is, and even if it were possible I think it would cost a great deal more than the Nicaraguan canal, the right of way of which we now own, and if the Senator will listen to the next subject I am going to take up he will see the reason why I think it will be immensely beneficial to the defense of the United States to have this second canal.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator will permit a further interruption——

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be glad to.

Mr. FESS. I have understood that even though we could enlarge the Panama Canal, which is doubtful, in my mind, in the course of years there would be another canal constructed by some nation at Nicaragua, and in view of that, it would be better for the United States to be the country that would do it. I understand that that really was one of the things which inspired Secretary Bryan to recommend the procedure at once to buy a perpetual leasehold there.

Mr. McKELLAR. I so understood, and the Senator will recall that before Mr. Roosevelt decided upon the Panama route, he was met with very serious obstacles—first, a prior treaty with Great Britain, the celebrated Clayton-Bulwer treaty, of 1850. That treaty provided that the United States might furnish the money to build the canal, but that it would be just as much Great Britain's canal, when it was finished, as America's canal.

The Senator will also recall that Mr. Roosevelt, through Mr. Hay, negotiated a second treaty, known as the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, taking its name from the American Secretary of State and the British ambassador, and that when that treaty was negotiated, it put an end to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. So, as I am going to point out now, we could build this canal not handicapped by treaties of any kind, because the Hay-Pauncefote treaty is a thing accomplished. Whatever rights Great Britain had under the Bulwer-Clayton treaty, or whatever rights Great Britain has under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, applied to the Panama Canal only, and by terms would not now apply to this canal if built. The Senator can easily see what an immense advantage that would be to America.

Mr. FESS. I think that it is not so significant as to when the canal should be built as that it would be built some time, but it was very significant that we get this agreement so that when it is built the United States will still control the connection between the two seas.

Mr. McKELLAR. I spoke a few moments ago of the splendid work Senator Morgan had done in forwarding the Panama Canal movement. I also spoke of the magnificent work done by President Roosevelt in putting the canal through.

Mr. FESS. Yes; I was in the Chamber when the Senator spoke of those incidents.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to say that Mr. Bryan, in securing this treaty from Nicaragua, initiated this great project and made it possible. It was acquired at a time when it did Nicaragua a great good. There seem to me to be many reasons at this time, as I shall point out a little later, why we should proceed to carry out the purpose of acquiring the canal route in 1914 under the very wise administration of Mr. Bryan.

Mr. FESS. I had asked a moment ago how near we were to the capacity of the Panama Canal for the reason that I saw a statement some time ago, which was said to be scientific, that when it should be operated 24 hours a day, putting on three shifts of workmen, the capacity would be such as to indicate that we are at only about one-fourth its capacity now. I am making the inquiry for information.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can not say what the science of the situation is, but I can say something about what the facts of the situation are. If it takes 16 hours in each 24 to put 5,000 ships through the canal in the course of a year, it is perfectly evident to me that when that number of ships doubles we will not be able to put them through the canal with three shifts of workmen. I doubt whether we would be able to put more through with three shifts than we do now with two shifts. But that is a matter which can be worked out.

AN ALL-AMERICAN CANAL

It will be recalled that when we took over and built the Panama Canal a great question was raised about its neutrality, Great Britain resurrecting the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850, in which we agreed that any canal we might build would be forever neutral. So that in 1901 we had to conclude another treaty with Great Britain, which superseded in terms the treaty of April 9, 1850, known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

In order to do this, we had to agree in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty of 1901, as to the Panama Canal, that—

> The canal shall be free and open to vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing these rules, on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any such nation, or its citizens or subjects, in respect of the conditions or charges of traffic or otherwise. Such conditions and charges of traffic shall be just and equitable.
> The canal shall never be blockaded, nor shall any right of war be exercised nor any act of hostility be committed within it. The United States, however, shall be at liberty to maintain such military police along the canal as may be necessary to protect it against lawlessness and disorder.
>
> Vessels of war of a belligerent shall not revictual nor take any stores in the canal except so far as may be strictly necessary; and the transit of such vessels through the canal shall be effected with the least possible delay in accordance with the regulations in force, and with only such intermission as may result from the necessities of the service.
>
> No belligerent shall embark or disembark troops, munitions of war, or war-like materials in the canal, except in case of accidental hindrance of the transit, and in such case the transit shall be resumed with all possible dispatch.

These provisions were all in substance carried in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850. That treaty specifically provided for a proposed canal on the Nicaraguan route, and for some reason our Government felt that it was compelled to enter into a treaty with Great Britain before we built the canal. There was apparently no reason why we should have entered into such a treaty with Great Britain or any other power, but we did, and President Roosevelt apparently secured the best modification of the treaty that he could.

Now, it will be seen by article 1 of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty of 1901, it is said:

> The high contracting parties agree that the present treaty shall supersede the aforementioned convention of the 19th April, 1850.

In article 2—

> it is agreed that the canal may be constructed under the auspices of the Government of the United States, either directly at its own cost, or by gift or loan of money to individuals or corporations, or through subscription to or purchase of stock or shares, and that, subject to the provisions of the present treaty, the said Government shall have and enjoy all the rights incident to such construction, as well as the exclusive right of providing for the regulation and management of the canal—

Showing that it was intended that only one canal should be built and that the treaty of 1901 was to apply to that canal. In other words, the treaty of 1901 known as the Hay-Pauncefote treaty concerns only the canal that was built under it, namely, the Panama Canal. And so the United States is not under any obligation to Great Britain in the matter of building the Nicaraguan Canal.

OUR POLICY IN THE NEW CANAL

Of course, the canal must be kept free and open to the vessels of commerce and of all nations observing the rules regulating the canal on terms of equality. The conditions and charges of traffic should be just and equitable, and will be, but we should make no agreement in reference to our fortifying the canal, nor should we make any agreement as to our use of the canal in times of war. It is proposed to build the canal entirely with American money on American soil, which we have already bought and paid for, and we will not be under any obligation to take dictation from any other nation as to how we shall manage and control the canal. Of course, we should make it plain to all the world that we are going to treat all alike, but if any other nation should make war on us, of course, we should have the right to use our own property as we saw fit as long as the war existed. In other words, my proposal is that this canal when built must be an American canal and wholly under American control.

HISTORY OF CANALS

I need not go into the history of interoceanic canals other than to say that the Panama Canal was the dream of the ages. The French people first undertook the work under Monsieur de Lesseps. My recollection is that the French Government sunk some $300,000,000 and sold it to the United States under Mr. Roosevelt for $40,000,000. In the early nineteen hundreds the canal question was of prime importance in the Congress of the United States. Practically everybody wanted to build a canal, and the principal question was which of the two routes. The Congress appointed a committee in 1899 known as the Walker Commission to examine into the question of the two routes, and in November, 1900, this commission, through Mr. Walker, made a report comparing the relative merits of both routes, and wound up by recommending the Nicaraguan route. This report goes fully into the whole matter.

COSTA RICA

We have no treaty with Costa Rica for the building of the Nicaraguan canal. For a distance of perhaps 40 or 50 miles the San Juan River is the boundary line between Nicaragua and Costa Rica, and for that reason we must have the treaty with Costa Rica if the San Juan River is to be a part of the canal. I take it there will be very little trouble in securing this treaty. All the remaining part of the canal is entirely through Nicaraguan territory. It might be well if Nicaragua would sell us a strip 5 or 10 miles wide along the northern boundary, reserving for herself all rights of ingress and egress. Certainly the canal would be of immensely more advantage to Costa Rica, and I take it there would be little difficulty in obtaining a treaty from her.

PRESENT DISTRESSING CONDITIONS IN NICARAGUA

I take it also that the building of the canal at this time would have a splendid effect upon the present distressing conditions in Nicaragua. It would take her people's minds off of the war and political parties and set them to thinking about the material advantages which would come to that country from the building of this canal. It would certainly give the people of both countries an enormous amount of work to do. It would draw thousands of people to the situs of the canal. It would create greater satisfaction at each end thereof and it would be the greatest possible thing that could come to Nicaragua and to Costa Rica. These beneficent reasons also should be weighed in considering the question at this time.

Mr. President, I am very much opposed to the policy of keeping our marines in Nicaragua. I am very much opposed to making actual war against one set of revolutionists and taking the part of another set of revolutionists in Central or South American countries. We would not think for a moment of interfering in Canada, and we owe it to ourselves not to interfere in these helpless Central American countries by force of arms. We can help the people of Nicaragua better by building this canal by employing her people. If we give them work on the canal, it will go a great way toward preventing banditry. Bandits will become laboring people. In addition to this, the building of the canal will bring tremendously increased trade, commerce, and prosperity in Nicaragua and be of wonderful advantage in restoring order in the country.

In other words, Mr. President, when we send our marines there and aid one set of revolutionists in making war on another set of revolutionists without a voluntary declaration of war we violate our own Constitution. We do ourselves and our institutions the greatest injustice and at the same time we do not help the Nicaraguans. By building this canal we would aid ourselves immeasurably. We keep within our Constitution and our traditions and we make our national defense complete.

Mr. President, we are obliged to build that canal. It ought to be begun at once. The other canal will soon be so full of ships that it can not take more. Business is increasing rapidly. We ought to begin and we ought to begin now to build the canal.

Mr. President, Nicaragua is the largest of the Central American Republics. It has 42,000 square miles and is a little less than the State of Tennessee. It has about 703,000 population, mostly of a Spanish-Indian admixture. The east side is sparsely settled, the principal part of the population living on the plains bordering the lakes. For many generations the country has been beset with warring factions. Granada, on Lake Nicaragua, has been the center of the leading families and Leon, northward near the Pacific Ocean, has been the center of the poorer classes of farmers, artisans, and the like. For a long time there has been bitter strife between the two. Managua is about half way between Granada and Leon and is the capital, and was established so as to be half-way station. They have but one railway in the country, and that is from Granada, on Lake Nicaragua, to Corinto, on the Pacific Ocean, not much more than a hundred miles long.

Parties are divided into the Liberals and the Conservatives. Leon is the center of the Liberal activities and Granada is the center of the Conservative activities. As a matter of fact, the Liberals far outnumber the Conservatives, but when elections are held, owing to the superior mathematical genius of the Conservatives, they usually win.

In 1893, one Jose Santos Zelaya became President and was President for 16 years. He was nominated a Liberal, but was really a despot. It was claimed that Zelaya negotiated with both Great Britain and Japan, and especially had negotiations with Japan, in reference to building a canal. In 1909 Zelaya was overthrown. In 1909 General Chamorro, aided by Juan J. Estrada and Adolpho Diaz, now President, started a revolution at Bluefields, on the Atlantic side. This revolution was largely promoted by America. At any rate America looked on it with favor. The result of this revolution was that Zelaya was banished. His successor, Dr. Jose Madriz, attempted to put an end to the revolution, but failed. Estrada became provisional President and Diaz Vice President. There continued to be bitter controversy and all kinds of strife and war down to 1912. Diaz had acquired supreme power and was called upon by the American Government to protect the lives and property of Americans, and thereupon, on August 3, 1912, Diaz requested the American Government, as follows:

> In consequence, my government desires that the Government of the United States guarantee, with its forces, security for the property of the American citizens in Nicaragua, and that it extend its protection to all the inhabitants of the Republic.

The next day 100 men from the U. S. S. Annapolis landed at Managua and later many hundreds were brought down, and America has been controlling Nicaragua ever since during various administrations.

In 1914 the Bryan-Chamorro treaty was entered into, by which the United States was given the perpetual privilege of fortifying the Corn Islands, on the Caribbean Sea, and of constructing a naval base on the Gulf of Fonseca, and constructing a canal through Nicaragua. For these concessions the United States paid Nicaragua $3,000,000.

After joining in a federation with other Central American States and dissolving it, but our marines still controlling the country, an election was held in 1923. Solorzano and Sacasa were elected by a vote of 48,000 to 28,000. A fight arose between Chamorro and Solorzano, and Vice President Sacasa was run out of the country. Chamorro became the dictator, and afterwards Diaz was virtually appointed by the United States to fill out the unexpired term of Solorzano. Late in 1926 he was elected President and the United States recognized him and has kept him in office ever since. In April, 1927, the President appointed Henry L. Stimson his special representative to go to Nicaragua and adjust things. He finally brought out an agreement that an election was to be held for President, and the "generals" on both sides agreed to it, except Sandino. Whether the agreement for a fair election means anything is exceedingly doubtful.

The finances of Nicaragua are in a bad shape. The Nicaraguans owe more than they can pay, and with their constant revolutions it seems impossible for the Government to get out of debt.

Again I say there is but one way we can help, and that is to build the canal. And while we help them in this way we help ourselves infinitely more, and at the same time do not dishonor our Constitution, do not dishonor our Government, and do not dishonor our flag.

Mr. President, in conclusion let me say that I have no sympathy with keeping our marines in Nicaragua, but I have the greatest sympathy for the people of that country in their efforts to maintain their liberty. I believe that if we shall go there in the way I have proposed and spend our money to build this canal in their interest as well as ours, and in the interest of the commerce of the world, we could not do the Nicaraguans a greater service nor could we do our own country or the world a greater service. By adopting this peaceful method, in my judgment, we will bring about a settlement of their dispute, encourage men to go to work in the peaceful vocations of life rather than to be arrayed as revolutionists on one side or the other. It seems to me that we can carry out this project without financial loss, but, on the contrary, with an enormous financial gain. I therefore hope that the Committee on Interoceanic Canals will report the bill and that Congress may pass it.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 28, 1928, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, March 27, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Glory be to Thee, O Lord most high; heaven and earth are filled with Thy glory and praise becometh the upright in heart. All Thy works do praise Thee: The dawning of spring with its promise and hope brings Thee very near our responsive hearts. The bursting bud, the incipient bloom, the rapture of birds, the sun-kissed waters—these all tell of Thy glory. Do Thou help our souls to rise above the drab, leaden things of life, pushing their virtues upward through worldly pressure and shaping themselves mysteriously into the image of Thy dear Son. Make us tremendously ambitious for the simple gains and joys of human experience, with all their love, peace, and tenderness. The friendship of true friends, the laughter of little children, the sight of flowers, the strains of sweet music, and the heart talks of the hearthstone—bless us with these and we shall make no complaints. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

INTERNATIONAL EMIGRATION AND IMMIGRATION CONFERENCE

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file a supplemental report on House bill 10167, relating to the Second International Emigration and Immigration Conference to be held at Habana.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to file a supplemental report on the bill referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REPORTS FROM THE COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SNELL, from the Committee on Rules, submits the following report, to accompany H. Res. 148, for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 113, S. 716, and H. R. 12407.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I expect to call up that resolution on Thursday after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table. The first bill provided for by the committee is the one dealing with national origins.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman insert in the RECORD the committees that reported these various bills?

Mr. SNELL. There are just three bills from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. They are all from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization?

Mr. SNELL. Yes. I think they are all practically unanimous-consent agreements.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit another report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SNELL, from the Committee on Rules, submits the following report, to accompany H. Res. 149, for the consideration of H. R. 279:

"The Committee on Rules reports the House Resolution 149 to the House, with the recommendation that the resolution be adopted. The resolution provides for the consideration of H. R. 279, to amend section 8 of the act entitled 'An act to incorporate the Howard University in the District of Columbia,' approved March 2, 1867."

The SPEAKER. Referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, for Mr. MICHENER I submit another report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MICHENER, from the Committee on Rules, submits the following report, to accompany House Resolution 150, for the consideration of H. R. 8937:

"The Committee on Rules reports House Resolution 150 to the House, with the recommendation that the resolution be adopted. The resolution provides for the consideration of H. R. 8937, to amend the act entitled 'An act to promote export trade, and for other purposes,' approved April 6, 1918."

The SPEAKER. Referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I understand that that bill is reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. SNELL. No. It is reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

RESIGNATION FROM THE COMMITTEE TO ATTEND UNVEILING EXERCISES OF STATUE ON STONE MOUNTAIN OF GEN. ROBERT E. LEE

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communication, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 26, 1928.

Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I regret to advise that recent uncontrollable circumstances will prevent my acceptance of the appointment which you were so good as to tender me on the congressional committee to attend the unveiling exercises of the statue on Stone Mountain of Gen. Robert E. Lee.

Very respectfully,

A. J. MONTAGUE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints Representative L. J. STEELE, of Georgia, to fill the vacancy.

THE GOLIAD MASSACRE—ITS PLACE IN HISTORY

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] for one hour.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, to-day is the ninety-second anniversary of one of the most barbarous, most revolting, and most heart-rending scenes ever perpetrated by men in ancient or modern times. On Palm Sunday, March 27, 1836, at Goliad, Tex., Col. J. W. Fannin, jr., a soldier and officer in the army for the independence of Texas, with about 330 men under his command, all of whom were prisoners of war, were marched from their prison at daylight and shot to death without warning.

I desire to review, briefly, the events leading up to that horrible tragedy, the circumstances under which it was committed, and its bearing upon subsequent events. In order to give a more thorough understanding of the situation, I have here a large map of Texas showing the geographical location of Goliad, and other points having a historical bearing.

Goliad [pointing] is located here on the San Antonio River about 40 miles from the Gulf of Mexico. San Antonio, then known as Bexar, is on the same river about 80 miles above, and to the northwest of Goliad. Gonzales is on the Guadalupe River about 55 miles north of Goliad. Victoria is 28 miles to the east, also on the Guadalupe. Refugio is about 30 miles to the south of Goliad, and San Patricio about 60 miles to the southwest. San Felipe is on the Brazos, about 120 miles northeast of Goliad, and San Jacinto, about 150 miles to the northeast, near the present city of Houston.

At San Antonio and Goliad are located old Spanish missions, which, at the time we now have under consideration, 1835 and 1836, were used as forts or military posts. The one at San Antonio is called the Alamo, and was erected by the Franciscan friars about the year 1718. The one at Goliad is called La Bahia, and was erected by monks of the same order about the year 1749. Refugio was also the seat of an old mission, known as the Mission Del Refugio.

Gonzales was the seat of one of the early American settlements, known as De Witt's colony. It is called the Lexington of Texas, as it was there, on October 2, 1835, the first skirmish was fought for Texas, and which resulted in a victory for the Texans. Victoria was also the seat of a colonial settlement, known as the De Leon colony. Refugio and San Patricio were small Irish settlements.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I will.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Will my friend from Texas explain that section of his interesting map embraced within the red lines?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That represents one of the greatest congressional districts in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNELL. I thank the gentleman, and would add that it is very worthily and capably represented in the House by one of its ablest Members.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I thank the gentleman for the compliment.

San Felipe was the seat of the provisional government of Texas. It was located in Stephen F. Austin's colony, though Austin's home was farther down the Brazos River, in which is now Brazoria County. San Jacinto is where the final victory was won that made Texas independent and paved the way for its admission to the American Union as one of the 48 States of the present.

Under Mexican domination Texas had been attached for administrative purposes to the State of Coahuila. Saltillo, the capital, was several hundred miles from the American settlements, and much of the territory intervening was uninhabited. Santa Anna had overthrown the constitutional government in Mexico and had military posts at San Antonio and Goliad to force Texas into submission.

The fight at Gonzales of October 2, 1835, occurred when a force of about 150 men under Castinado was sent from San Antonio to take possession of a small cannon which had been given to the colonists by the Mexican Government several years before as a protection against the Indians.

To the demand of Castinado an evasive reply was at first made, and, as in 1775, minute men were sent out to gather in the colonists. The following morning, a sufficient number having arrived, they then made a positive refusal. The fight resulted. Castinado was forced to return to San Antonio without the cannon, and after the loss of several men.

This victory of the Texans was followed by several others in rapid succession. One week later Goliad fell into their hands. In another 20 days they won the important Battle of Concepcion. They then laid siege to San Antonio, which capitulated on December 9. General Cos and his army were permitted to return to Mexico under agreement not to further resist the return of Mexico to the constitution of 1824. This agreement they afterwards violated.

All this fighting occurred before there was any organized effort for Texan independence. The main purpose was to resist the usurper, Santa Anna, and reestablish constitutional government in Mexico, of which Texas was a part. For self-preservation during the time such government was suspended, the Texans, on November 3, established a provisional government at San Felipe, consisting of a governor and council. A declaration of independence was adopted at Goliad on December 20, 1835, but this was disapproved by the council who ordered it suppressed.

San Antonio, Goliad, Refugio, and San Patricio, all being in the hands of the Texans, it was the object of the council to concentrate these forces in a march upon Matamoras, across the Rio Grande, with a hope that it would cause an uprising of the Mexicans in the States of Tamaulipas and Nuevo Leon and aid in the overthrow of Santa Anna. While this plan had the approval of the council, it was opposed by Smith, the governor. It was also opposed by Sam Houston, who had been appointed at the head of the army, but Houston's authority was not fully recognized at that time, and in some quarters it was disputed.

Here Colonel Fannin enters prominently into the drama. He was in command of about 400 men at Goliad, under the orders of the council. Grant and Johnson had smaller forces at San Patricio. All these officers were expected to take important parts in the proposed Mexican invasion. The whole proposition was ill-advised, as fully shown by subsequent events. Instead of advancing into Mexico, it was later found that the Texan force was incapable of defending the advanced positions they then held.

The combined forces of Fannin, Grant, and Johnson amounted only to 600 or 700 men, untrained, poorly armed and equipped. Santa Anna was at that time advancing upon Texas with 8,000 seasoned troops, well armed and equipped, and flushed with their recent victories over Zacatecas, the last of the Mexican States to fall before his power. His right wing, under Urrea, was then concentrating at Matamoras, the Texan objective.

Santa Anna, with the main body of his troops, soon advanced to San Antonio and laid siege to the Alamo, which fell into his hands March 6 after one of the most heroic defenses recorded in the annals of history. Bowie, the Georgian; Travis, the Alabamian, Bonham, of South Carolina; and Davy Crockett, the Tennessean—but all Texans—fell at their posts with about 180 men under their command. Not one retreated; not one surrendered; not one was spared.

On March 1, 1836, a convention was assembled at Washington on the Brazos. It was by this time the almost universal opinion that complete independence was the only hope for stable government in Texas. The following day the declaration was adopted, and Sam Houston appointed commander in chief of the armies. A few days later a president and vice president ad interum were elected by the convention. The provisional council, which had previously been acting, then turned over the affairs to this new government.

Supposing the Alamo to be still in the hands of the Texans, but besieged by Santa Anna, Houston started to its relief. He arrived at Gonzales on March 11, where he received the word that the Alamo had fallen on the 6th and that the entire Texan force had been put to death. Houston had with him at Gonzales 374 men but with few arms and little ammunition. Fannin was then at Goliad with about 400 men.

Knowing that resistance on that exposed front was suicidal, Houston decided to retreat to the Colorado. He dispatched a courier to Fannin with orders to retreat to Victoria on the east side of the Guadalupe. This order was sent on the night of the 11th, the day of Houston's arrival in Gonzales. Two days later, Houston began his famous retreat eastward, taking with him all the inhabitants of Gonzales.

Santa Anna's men were closing in on Gonzales, on Goliad, and on Refugio. San Patricio had already fallen. Houston continued his march to the Colorado. Fannin did not start his retreat until the 19th of March, five days after the receipt of Houston's order. Goliad by that time was menaced by a large force of the Mexican Army. On the morning of the 19th, the country was enveloped in a dense fog. The oxen that were to pull the cannon and supplies were weak, having been kept up the day and night before without feed.

Fannin started his retreat in the direction of Victoria, but before reaching the Coleto, a small stream, he found it necessary to stop to let the oxen rest and graze. This was about 10 miles from Goliad, near the present town of Fannin. The time was about 2 or 3 o'clock in the afternoon. When he resumed his march he found that the Mexicans were in front of him.

The battle commenced at once, but the Texans were soon completely surrounded on the open prairie. Fannin formed his men in a hollow square and intrenched. The battle continued desperately until stopped by the darkness of the night, and the Mexican force was several times thrown into great disorder and with heavy loss.

It was a dark and horrible night for the Texans. They had no water, and this added greatly to the suffering of the 60 or more wounded, who could not receive necessary medical attention. The two or three small cannon had been put out of action for the want of water to cool them between the shots. Ammunition was also exhausted. A scouting party sent out before the fight commenced, to select a crossing place on the Coleto, were cut off by the enemy and could not rejoin the force.

At daylight on the morning of the 20th, the Mexicans received reinforcements, with several cannon and a pack train of ammunition. Their force was then about 1,900, while the Texan force was less than 400. The oxen had been killed during the fight. There was no way of escape, except by leaving the wounded in the hands of the enemy. This they could not do. After consultation, it was decided that surrender was the only hope of escaping extermination, such as had befallen the defenders of the Alamo three weeks before. A truce was arranged, and the terms agreed upon, by which Fannin and his men were to be accorded treatment due to prisoners of war by civilized nations.

The prisoners were taken back to Goliad and incarcerated in the old mission, where they remained for one week. They were then, on Sunday morning, at dawn of day, marched out in three or four divisions, in as many directions, under false pretenses, and shot down between files of soldiers, in obedience to the order of Santa Anna. Many who were only wounded at the first volley were then stabbed to death with bayonets. A few, but very few, made their escape. About one hour later the wounded were dragged out and butchered. Colonel Fannin himself was badly wounded in the battle a week before. He was the last to die. He met his fate like a soldier. He handed his watch to the officer and requested to be shot in the breast instead of the head. He then seated himself in the chair, tied the handkerchief over his eyes, and bared his bosom to receive the volley.

Urrea, who was in command of the Mexican division operating in that territory, is said to have been at Victoria at the time, and knew nothing of this horrible massacre until it was accomplished. He had left orders for the prisoners to be treated humanely. That order had been superseded by the order of Santa Anna, sent to Goliad from headquarters in San Antonio.

Some of the Mexican officers revolted at this horrible murder, but dared not disobey Santa Anna. A kindly hearted woman, Senora Alvarez, wife of one of the Mexican officers, succeeded in saving several of the Americans by taking them from the prison the night before under various pretexts and concealing them until they could have an opportunity to escape. Four surgeons and a few others were also saved by a Mexican colonel, who took them to his tent where they were concealed and protected. Senora Alvarez, on hearing that the son of Doctor Shackelford was among the slain, burst into tears and said that if she had only known it she would have saved him.

These acts of this good woman are related in the sketch written by Doctor Bernard, of Chicago, who was one of the survivors. Her conduct was also most feelingly referred to by Mr. Benton in the Senate of the United States, when he paid her a most beautiful and adoring tribute.

The exact number who perished at Goliad may never be known, though from facts obtainable it is thought to have been 330. They were young men and boys, coming from almost every State of the Union. Fannin himself was a Georgian, a graduate of West Point. There also perished at Goliad the "Lone Star" flag made by a Georgia girl, Miss Joanna Troutman, who was the stepsister of the late Justice L. Q. C. Lamar, of Mississippi, This flag was brought to Texas by the Georgia company that responded to the call of Texas. It was first unfurled at Velasco, near the home of Stephen F. Austin. Two months later, on receipt of the news of the adoption of the declaration of independence, it was unfurled at Goliad.

The Goliad massacre made a profound impression upon the civilized world, and perhaps more than any other single thing contributed to the final success of the Texan cause, both in battle and in the field of diplomacy. It shared with the Alamo, the battle cry at San Jacinto, where the doom of Santa Anna was sealed in one of the most brilliant victories ever won upon the field of battle.

It gave the Texans the moral support of the civilized world, and was one of the principal causes of the prompt recognition of Texas independence by the United States. It also played an important part in the chain of events leading to the final admission into the Union. It was several times referred to in the debates in Congress when these measures were under consideration. In the House in January, 1845, Mr. Caldwell, of Kentucky, said:

> Who can read the cold-blooded massacre of his 400 prisoners of war at Goliad, the detachment of the noble Fannin, without visiting upon its savage author his deepest execrations?

Mr. Norris, of New Hampshire, made this reference:

> The horrid and fiendlike butcheries of the Alamo, the heartless treachery and cold-blooded assassination of Goliad only invigorated this brave people with fresh courage, bordering on desperation, to resist even to extermination the murderer of their countrymen, the usurper of their liberties. On the 21st of April, 1836, they sealed their emancipation from Mexican despotism with the blood of their enemies upon the battle field of San Jacinto.

Mr. Benton, in the Senate in 1836, said:

> Goliad has torn Texas from Mexico; Goliad has decreed independence; San Jacinto has sealed it. What the massacre decreed the victory has sealed, and the day of the martyrdom of the prisoners must forever be regarded as the day of disunion between Texas and Mexico. * * * I repeat it; that cruel morning of the Alamo, and that black day of Goliad were great political faults. The blood of the martyr is the seed of the church. The blood of slaughtered patriots is the dragon's teeth sown upon the earth, from which heroes, full grown and armed, leap into life, and rush into battle.

Fannin has been both criticized and defended for delaying his retreat from Goliad. He, of course, did not live to give us his version. Houston, in his farewell address in the United States Senate in 1859, used this language:

> Fannin, after disobeying orders, attempted on the 19th to retreat and had only 25 miles to reach Victoria. His opinions of chivalry and honor were such that he would not avail himself of the night to do it in, although he had been admonished by the smoke of the enemies' encampment for eight days previous to attempting a retreat. He then attempted to retreat in open day. The Mexican cavalry surrounded him. He halted in a prairie, without water, commenced a fortification, and there was surrounded by the enemy who, from the hilltops, shot down upon him.

In another connection in this address, Senator Houston said:

Colonel Fannin was ordered to fall back from Goliad. * * * He (Houston) received an answer from Colonel Fannin, stating that he had received his order; had held a council of war; and that he had determined to defend the place, and called it Fort Defiance, and had taken the responsibility to disobey the order.

These criticisms by Senator Houston have been almost universally regarded as an injustice to Colonel Fannin. Yoakum's History of Texas, published in 1855—four years before the farewell address of Senator Houston, is a complete refutation of this charge, afterwards so made. According to Yoakum, Fannin had previously been ordered by Lieutenant Governor Robinson "not to make a retrograde movement" but "await orders and reinforcements." Pending those orders, he had sent King to remove some families at Refugio in distress. Not hearing from King, Ward, with another detachment, had been sent to King's relief, and Ward had not been heard from.

Such was the situation when Fannin received General Houston's order to retreat. Yoakum, on page 87, volume 2, of his history, says that this order, sent by Houston at Gonzales on the night of March 11, was received by Fannin on the morning of the 14th. As afterwards found out, the 14th was the day that Ward's command had been engaged with the Mexicans in battle at Refugio, and in which the Texans were overpowered. Hence, the reason they had not returned to Goliad. After that engagement Ward had attempted to reach Victoria but was cut off and, without ammunition, surrendered. He with his men were returned to Goliad two days before the massacre and shared the fate of the other prisoners.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HUDSPETH. In a recent history of Texas by Hon. Louis J. Wortham, there is recorded the reason Fannin did not retreat. Wortham relates that there was one survivor who states that Fannin did not want to leave the American families there at the mercy of the Mexicans. This is the story that one of the Americans who escaped relates in this history of Texas, which I think is the best I have ever read.

Mr. MANSFIELD. In reply to the gentleman, I will say that the families in distress at Refugio was one of Fannin's reasons. King had been sent there to take them away and Ward had been sent to King's relief. Fannin could not retreat and leave these families there unprotected. Furthermore, he could not retreat until the two detachments of soldiers had returned because he would be leaving them to fall a prey to the Mexican soldiers. He was endeavoring to get them back so as to be able to retreat and take the families with him. This is what caused the delay.

Upon receipt of Houston's order, according to Yoakum, Fannin "immediately dispatched an express to Ward, stating the nature of Houston's order, and requiring him to return with all haste to Goliad." Other orders were issued preparatory to the retreat, but these fell into the hands of Urrea.

Senator Houston twice in his farewell address lauds Yoakum's history for its accuracy and completeness. In the main, it was relied upon by him to refute the scurrilous charges made against him and published in the Texas Almanac. Yoakum was a man of undoubted character and ability, and had made wonderful research in the preparation of his historical work. He was a Tennesseean and the friend of Houston. On coming to Texas he lived in the same town in which Houston lived and died. He was a graduate of West Point and a lawyer of great ability.

Senator Houston's farewell address was in vindication of himself against the scurrilous charges made in the Texas Almanac. It was a notable address, in which he flayed his political adversaries as with a lash made of scorpion's tongues. But in the bitterness of the debate, 23 years after the occurrences spoken of, he could not be expected to give the same degree of accuracy to detail of facts, as characterized the work of the careful historian, Yoakum. In this Yoakum is corroborated by later historians, including Mrs. Pennybacker and others.

Doctor Bernard, who was with Fannin at Goliad, in his account says:

The alleged disobedience of Colonel Fannin to Houston's order is an undeserved censure of a gallant soldier, and that he wrote back a refusal I know to be false. Circumstances have enabled me to possess a positive knowledge on this point, and justice to both the dead and the living require me to state it.

Up to this point there seems to be a direct conflict between Houston on the one hand and Doctor Bernard and Historian Yoakum on the other. I have spent a great deal of time and effort to get at the real truth. I have reached the conclusion that the explanation is contained in Houston's letter to Collingsworth, chairman of the military committee, written from Gonzales on March 13, the day he commenced his retreat from that place. That was just two days after he had sent the order to Fannin, and he inclosed copy of the order to Collingsworth with that letter. Fannin had not then received the order, and did not receive it until the following day, according to Yoakum.

In this letter to Collingsworth, Houston, speaking of Fannin, said:

He has written letters here indicating a design to march upon San Patricio, and also the occupation of Copano. So that I am at a loss to know where my express will find him. * * * On seeing the various communications of Colonel Fannin at this point, I could not rely on any cooperation from him.

It is clear that Houston at the time of writing that letter to Collingsworth was impressed with the fact that Fannin's plans were inconsistent with his. He formed that impression from seeing the letters at Gonzales, written by Fannin himself. This impression doubtless remained with him, as Fannin did not live to clear it up. After the lapse of 23 years, in answering his critics, Houston was undoubtedly in error in assuming that Fannin's letters were written after instead of before receiving the order to retreat.

So far as known, Houston never at any time made public a letter from Fannin indicating that he would disobey the order to retreat from Goliad. Neither did he ever refer to such a letter in any official communication or report.

The continued retreat of Houston and the result at San Jacinto are too well known to warrant repetition here. It is sufficient to say that by that victory a new nation was born, which was recognized in due time by the United States, England, France, Holland, and Belgium. Resolution for recognition of independence was reported by Mr. Clay in the Senate and by Mr. Wise in the House. It was adopted March 1, 1837, the first anniversary of the assembling of the convention that adopted the declaration of independence.

In August, 1837, Gen. Memucan Hunt, Texas minister at Washington, at the instance of President Houston, made representations to the United States for the admission of Texas into the Union. Forsyth, Secretary of State, declined to consider the proposition, and in this he had the approval of President Van Buren.

In 1841 Harrison became President and appointed Webster Secretary of State. Harrison soon died, and Tyler became President. Tyler was favorable to the admission of Texas, but Webster was opposed. Webster was later succeeded by Upshur, of Virginia, who was favorable to admission. Upshur, under Tyler's advice, in 1843 arranged for a treaty with the Republic of Texas for admission to the Union as a Territory; but before this could be entered into Mr. Upshur was unfortunately killed by an explosion of a gun on the Princeton. Calhoun succeeded Upshur and carried out the negotiations, after making some minor alterations in the draft of the treaty.

The treaty was submitted to the Senate in 1844 and resulted in a defeat for admission by a vote of 35 to 16. Both the Senators from the States of Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Louisiana and one each from the States of North Carolina, Georgia, and Missouri, all slave States, voted against admission. On the other hand, one Senator from New Hampshire and both the Senators from Pennsylvania and Illinois voted for admission. From this it might be inferred that the question of slavery was not considered the dominant issue at that time.

After the decisive defeat of annexation by the Senate in 1844, the question became the leading issue in the presidential election of that year. Clay was the nominee of the Whigs, and opposed admission. Polk was running on an admission platform.

In the book entitled "Tyler Letters and Times," by Lyon G. Tyler, son of the President, published in 1885, on page 350, volume 2, appears this language:

As the day of the election drew near the excitement over Texas grew each day more and more violent. The caldron of politics seethed nothing but Texas! Texas! Every other issue was swallowed up in the great one of annexation, which formed the subject of every speech, meeting, and conversation. Orators bawled themselves hoarse about Texas; newspapers bristled with all sorts of types proclaiming Texas. Texas clubs were all the rage, and even the poet wrestled with the name and wrote numberless verses in honor of Texas.

The election resulted in a landslide for Polk and Dallas. In the next session of the Congress the treaty was disregarded, but many bills were introduced for the admission of Texas. The discussions were full and complete, able and interesting. Slavery, of course, came in for its due share of the discussion, but additional to that, constitutional questions were involved. Then war with Mexico was seriously considered, Mexico not having acknowledged the independence of Texas, and still claiming it.

In the latter part of February, 1845, the joint resolution was adopted for the admission of Texas as a State, and by which the public domain was to remain the property of the State. This was carried by a substantial majority in the House, but in the Senate the majority was only 2, the vote being 27 to 25 in favor of annexation. The resolution was signed by President Tyler on March 1, just three days before the expiration of his term.

Texas had many friends in public life, but Mr. Tyler was not surpassed in his zeal by any. He, with Upshur, put forth the first plan for annexation by treaty. Under his direction Calhoun afterwards negotiated that treaty for presentation to the Senate. It was signed by Van Zandt and Henderson, on behalf of Texas. The election in 1844, after the defeat of the treaty in the Senate, was a vindication of President Tyler.

Texas has acknowledged the services of President Tyler and Secretaries Upshur and Calhoun, by naming a county in honor of each. I am indebted to Miss Ruth Myers, chief clerk of the attorney general's office of Texas, for information in regard to the naming of Upshur County, and for a brief biography of Mr. Upshur. I am also indebted to ex-Governor Colquitt and to Mr. J. Littleton Talley, of Goliad, for data furnished at my request.

One of the Senators who took an active interest in behalf of the admission of Texas was Senator Bagby, of Alabama. He had been Governor of Alabama and United States minister to Russia. It is of interest to note that Senator Bagby was the father of one of our most distinguished Texans, the late Gen. Arthur P. Bagby, of Lavaca County. General Bagby was educated at the University of Alabama and at West Point. He came to Texas in 1858 and served as a brigadier general in the Confederate Army during the War of Secession. At the time of his death a few years ago, he was survived by only two other generals of the Confederacy.

In recent years the people of Texas have taken steps to honor the martyrs of Goliad. The old mission, which has ever remained the property of the Catholic Church, and long in ruins, has been restored by the Knights of Columbus to what is believed to have been its former condition.

The legislature in 1883 authorized the erection of a monument in Goliad, consisting of a 33-foot marble shaft upon a granite base, and suitably inscribed. It is considered the handsomest monument in Texas, and the grounds are beautified and maintained by the ladies of the Fannin Park Association.

Through the efforts of the Daughters of the Republic of Texas a bill passed the legislature in 1913 to accept and beautify another park at the town of Fannin, where the battle and surrender took place, and to erect a suitable monument there.

The land for this park was contributed by its owner, Mrs. L. J. Hanley, and the bill in the Texas Legislature was introduced by Hon. Leopold Morris, of Victoria, who sponsored it through the house, while a like service was performed in the senate by Senator John H. Bailey, of Cuero. As a coincidence, the bill was approved by Gov. O. B. Colquitt, then Governor of Texas, a distant cousin of Senator William T. Colquitt, of Georgia, who performed an active service in behalf of Texas annexation in the United States Senate in 1844 and 1845. Also under Governor Colquitt's administration a monument was erected to Miss Joanna Troutman in the State cemetery at Austin and a bronze tablet placed there containing the names of those who perished at Goliad.

Goliad is now becoming a great shrine in Texas and is being visited by many persons of note each year. The State park at Fannin and the old mission near which the massacre took place have become the Mecca for the school children interested in the study of history. It is a common occurrence for large classes to visit these hallowed grounds. County Judge J. A. White and Mayor Joseph Wearden, of Goliad, have taken steps to beautify the grounds where the massacre took place and provide suitable roads and driveways.

At the beginning of the year 1836 Texas was the last resting place for civil liberty in Mexico. The usurper had behind him 8,000,000 people, Texas had 30,000. The martyrs of Goliad proved more powerful in death than in life. San Jacinto sealed the doom of Santa Anna. He never regained the confidence even of his own country. After death he was denied burial in the national cemetery. His remains lie at Guadalupe Hidalgo, where our treaty of peace was signed at the close of the Mexican War.

Texas fills a unique place in history. It was long claimed by both France and Spain by right of discovery. In 1763 it was ceded by France to Spain. Spain ceded it back to France in 1800. It was claimed by the United States under the Louisiana purchase from France in 1803, but all our rights were quitclaimed to Spain in 1819 in part consideration of the purchase of Florida. Texas became a part of the Mexican Empire under Iturbide in 1821 and of the Mexican Republic in 1824.

Texas became an independent republic in 1836 and a State in the American Union in 1845. In 1861 Texas seceded and shared the fate of the Southern Confederacy. From the close of the war in 1865 it was under the military rule of the United States until 1870, when, complying with the requirements of Congress, it was readmitted to statehood.

Texas has paid allegiance to the Bourbons and the Bonapartes, the Hapsburgs and the Montezumas. It has several times been a kingdom, twice an empire, and six times a republic. It has now reached its goal as a king of empires in the greatest Republic the world has ever known. [Applause.]

Notwithstanding its varied history, Texas remained practically unsettled and undeveloped until a time almost within the memory of men still living. To Stephen F. Austin, more than any other, is due the honor and credit. Austin and Houston were both born in the State of Virginia, in the same year, 1793; Austin in Wythe County, Houston in Rockbridge. Austin went to Texas from Missouri, Houston from Tennessee. Each became prominent in his respective State of adoption before going to Texas, but the crowning points in their careers were attained in the land made great by their wisdom and genius. [Applause.]

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield for one observation?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. In enumerating all the wonders of Texas the gentleman forgot to mention the chief one, and that is we are going to nominate the next President of the United States down there.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska. [Applause.]

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12286, the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ROWBOTTOM). The gentleman from Idaho moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CHINDBLOM in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12286) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS

AVIATION, NAVY

For aviation, as follows: For navigational, photographic, aerological, radio, and miscellaneous equipment, including repairs thereto, for use with aircraft built or building on June 30, 1928, $1,250,000; for maintenance, repair, and operation of aircraft factory, air stations, fleet, and all other aviation activities, testing laboratories, for overhauling of planes, and for the purchase for aviation purposes only of special clothing, wearing apparel, and special equipment, $9,675,000, including $400,000 for the equipment of vessels with catapults and including not to exceed $300,000 for the procurement of helium, of which such amounts as may be required may be transferred in advance to the Bureau of Mines; for continuing experiments and development work on all types of aircraft, including the payment of part-time or intermittent employment in the District of Columbia or elsewhere of such scientists and technicists as may be contracted for by the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, at a rate of pay not exceeding $20 per diem for any person so employed, $2,000,000; for drafting, clerical, inspection, and messenger service, $725,000; for new construction and procurement of aircraft and equipment, $15,865,000, of which amount not to exceed $9,480,000 shall be available for the payment of obligations incurred under the contract authorization for these purposes carried in the Navy appropriation act for the fiscal year 1928, approved March 2, 1927; toward the construction of the rigid airships authorized in Public Act No. 422, Sixty-ninth Congress, approved June 24, 1926 (total limit of cost $8,000,000), $1,800,000, and the sum of $200,000 of the appropriation, "Aviation, Navy, 1928," toward the construction of one of such airships is hereby made available until June 30, 1929, toward the construction of two such rigid airships: Provided, That the contract for such rigid airships shall (a) reserve to the Government the right of cancellation of the construction of the second airship if changed circumstances, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, shall suggest that course as being in the best interests of the Government, such right of cancellation to continue until the first airship shall have been tested in flight and accepted, and (b) provide that in the event of such cancellation the total cost of the first airship, and all payments under, and expenses incident to the cancellation of, the contract for the second airship, shall not exceed $5,500,000; in all, $31,315,000; and the money herein specifically appropriated for "aviation" shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing law and shall constitute one fund: Provided, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated and specified for expenditure for new construction and procurement of aircraft and equipment the Secretary of the Navy may prior to July 1, 1930, enter into contracts for the production and purchase of new airplanes and their equipment, spare parts and accessories, to an amount not in excess of $10,000,000: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for maintenance of more than six heavier-than-air stations on the coasts of the continental United States: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the construction of a factory for the manufacture of airplanes: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay out of this appropriation the amounts due on claims for damages which have occurred or may occur to private property growing out of the operations of naval aircraft where such claim does not exceed the sum of $250: Provided further, That all claims adjusted under this authority during the fiscal year shall be reported in detail to the Congress by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph just read contains the reappropriation of $200,000 and new appropriations to the extent of $1,800,000, a total of $2,000,000 to be applied toward the construction of one or more rigid airships.

After the bill had been reported to the House, and when general debate was proceeding on last Thursday, it came to the attention of the members of the subcommittee that one of the outstanding shipbuilding concerns in the United States, the American Brown-Boveri Electric Corporation, of Camden, N. J., was in position to offer competitive designs and estimates for bids for the construction of one or more of the type of ships to which I have referred, and that it desired to do so.

In view of the fact that the matter had not been brought to the attention of the subcommittee during the hearings, your subcommittee felt that it was due the House that we conduct something of a supplementary examination or inquiry into the report that had come to the committee.

Your subcommittee at once got into touch with the Brown-Boveri Co. and arranged for a hearing the following day to determine something of the plans this organization has in view that might have bearing upon the question.

After obtaining rather a full statement from Mr. Laurence R. Wilder, the chairman of the advisory committee on shipbuilding of the corporation, who was accompanied by Mr. E. H. Rigg, naval architect, and Mr. Charles Langell, chief estimator, outlining the responsibility of the company and the thought of those responsible officers in connection with the possible construction of a rigid airship, your subcommittee held a further hearing with the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Wilbur, the Assistant Secretary, Mr. Warner, and with officers of the Bureau of Aeronautics, particularly with the thought of inquiring into the advisability of requiring new design competitions following the passage of the pending bill in event we shall carry money for the construction of one or more rigid airships as an alternative program, in lieu of a possible contract upon the basis of offers of designs made eight months ago.

Members of your subcommittee believe that it might be to the advantage of the Government to invite new designs to be followed by construction bids. Probably I should say that it is not at all unlikely that other large concerns that were not interested in the program of lighter-than-air craft one year ago to the extent of offering bids are now seriously considering the question.

The committee contemplated offering an amendment requiring the Secretary of the Navy to call for new designs and new bids. However, the Secretary of the Navy advised the committee frankly and fully that he concurred in the desirability of calling for new designs and bids and assured the committee that that would be the policy. With that thought we are not offering an amendment requiring new offers to be made, as we are assured that this will be done.

Probably I should say further that if we had not had this understanding it is the opinion of your subcommittee that calls for new designs and bids would need to have been made under the law. Members of the subcommittee question the sufficiency of authority to contract for two ships upon the basis of calls for designs and bids when only one ship had been appropriated for; and hence, that there may be no uncertainty whatever, it seems to the subcommittee that the slate should be wiped clean and invitations made anew for designs and construction.

I should say that the Secretary of the Navy concurs in the general thought I have indicated, and should the bill pass carrying money for rigid airships he will undertake the problem of assembling competitive designs and estimates for construction upon the basis of a new program.

I recognize that there may be those who will feel that contracts should be entered into upon the basis of designs already made. Your subcommittee was very particular to inquire whether or not the Government had gone so far as to incur any liability and was assured that it had not. No one can be more appreciative than the members of the subcommittee, because of their knowledge of the facts, of the research and studies and expenditures incurred in connection with the preparation of designs upon the part of the successful design competitor in 1927—the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. Even so, since no obligations have been assumed by the United States, your subcommittee does not feel that it would be doing the frank and just thing by the House in omitting to bring the full facts to your consideration. We are not administering our own property; we are in the position of trustees, administering the property and affairs of a great country, and we believe that in so doing we are compelled to follow the course that we have pursued.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENCH. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to ask the gentleman in reference to the language on page 34:

> Provided, That the contract for such rigid airships shall (a) reserve to the Government the right of cancellation of the construction of the second airship if changed circumstances in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy shall suggest that course as being in the best interest of the Government.

Is that in line with what the gentleman has been telling us, or does that hold back the construction of that ship?

Mr. FRENCH. That applies only to the second ship, and not the first.

Mr. LINTHICUM. We can proceed with one ship until it is completed under these provisions?

Mr. FRENCH. The right of cancellation is reserved to the Government in the construction of the second airship if in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy it shall be wise. Suppose, for instance, the first ship shall fail to function properly. There would be a good illustration. We ought not to proceed blindly with the other ship. We felt that the department ought to write into its contract a provision reserving the right of cancellation, so that there would be no question about it. Of course, there might be other contingencies that we are not able now to see that would justify cancellation.

Mr. LINTHICUM. So that the one ship will be finished and then they will proceed with the other?

Mr. FRENCH. I do not think that will be necessary. If the gentleman will read further on he will find that we have not tied it so tightly as that, but we have provided that moneys may even be expended, where economies could be obtained through the preparation of duplicate parts, for a second ship, and yet we have limited the amount. We do not want the Navy Department to go too far and too fast on the second ship until the first one shall have been demonstrated a success.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The bill also provides that the right of cancellation shall continue until the first ship is tested out and accepted.

Mr. FRENCH. That is correct.

Mr. BEGG rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Idaho have two or three minutes more. I want to ask some questions. I want to know something about this. I am not going to try to mess up the gentleman's bill in any way, but I would like to have some information.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Idaho be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already recognized the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I yield the floor for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. It has been two years since these ships were ordered. Am I right in that?

Mr. FRENCH. The law was passed in 1926.

Mr. BUTLER. Can the gentleman tell me just when, in the gentleman's mind, we may expect to see these ships completed? Are we going to complete them at all?

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, I think so.

Mr. BUTLER. Because there is no use of our bothering over in our legislative committee unless we are going to have some results. This Goodyear Co. told us that they would build these two ships for $8,000,000, and build a hangar along with them. They ask now for $5,000,000 to build one, and the other to cost $4,000,000. What are we to do about it? I am not barking for any corporation or any institution. I wish to see these two ships built, or else I would like to see Congress repeal the law, and I am perfectly willing to introduce a bill to strike out all of these hold-over provisions of law providing for the construction of ships not even begun. Does my friend propose to build a hangar? It is provided in the bill that no part of the appropriation shall be used for the construction of a factory for the manufacture of airplanes. Where will this concern that my friend speaks of build the ships? The Goodyear people offered to put up a hangar that will cost at least a million dollars and build the two ships for $8,000,000.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, the hangar is to cost from two and a half million to three million dollars.

Mr. BUTLER. I am obliged to my friend; I had forgotten that. I do not propose to antagonize this appropriation, and I could not succeed if I wanted to do it, but we have been endeavoring on our end of the program to make a bargain by which we can save some money on these ships. These people said that they would build them for $8,000,000 and at the same time put up a hangar. The concern of which the gentleman speaks is a very responsible one. I know of it over at Camden, N. J. It makes a fair contract, and it does fine work, but where will it build this great big balloon? It requires a big barn to build a balloon in.

Mr. FRENCH. May I answer the gentleman's inquiry now?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. I fear I have asked a pretty long question.

Mr. FRENCH. When the representatives of the department were before the committee a year ago it was contemplated at that time that if one dirigible could be built by contract, the hangar of the Government at Lakehurst would be utilized. When designs were called for and negotiations undertaken looking to a contract, the Goodyear people, the winner of the first place in the design contest, felt that it was altogether out of the question to use the Lakehurst hangar, that the expense would be such that they ought not do it. They felt that the limit of cost of $4,500,000 was such that it precluded the company building a hangar of its own. In trying to be safe, it appears that probably we tied the department too tightly as to limit of cost. In this bill we have raised the limit of cost on the first ship, and we recognized that since airships pertain to a new industry in this country, whatever concern will build in such a way as to win the contract will need to build a hangar or else use the Lakehurst hangar.

I do not believe that any manufacturing concern other than possibly the American Brown-Boveri Co. would be near enough to Lakehurst to make the utilization of that institution available. Even so, this company would prefer to build its own hangar. I think if the contract were to be awarded to the Goodyear people, they would need to do what the gentleman has suggested—build a shed or hangar within which to construct the ship.

Mr. BUTLER. Is the gentleman satisfied that all of the equipment that is necessary to be provided is in that hangar at Lakehurst ready to build these ships?

Mr. FRENCH. No; I am not. If the Government should build one or more of the airships, we would need to use the Philadelphia air factory as well as the Lakehurst hangar, and we would need to extend their facilities.

Mr. BUTLER. How much money will the Government have to expend in order to prepare that hangar at Lakehurst in which this ship can be built?

Mr. FRENCH. In a general way we went into that question, and we were told by the department that the rough estimates, if the Government itself were to build one of these ships, would be somewhere around $4,500,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. I will ask that the gentleman may have five minutes more. I am not quite through. Of course this is subject to a point of order.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I request that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] may have five minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] may have two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. I only asked permission to make this inquiry in order to subscribe myself among the list of those who favor what is known as "Coolidge economy." You can get these two ships down flat and plump for $8,000,000, under bond, given by this corporation, the Goodyear Co., for performance. On top of that they will give us security to put a hangar up that will cost an enormous sum of money, so that hereafter if the Government needs additional ships of this character it will have these places in which to construct them. They are not spending any money uselessly. I would like to live to see the time when we would build these ships.

Mr. FRENCH. The calling for new designs and bids would probably have the effect of a delay for several months. I do not think it would have the effect of delaying longer.

Mr. BUTLER. These people never made any offer to our committee that I ever heard. I do not think they have ever made any suggestion at all. Nothing came to us but the offer of the Goodyear people. They give bond for the faithful performance of contracts. I think it is a good thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has again expired.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes, if I might.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes after my colleague has finished.

Mr. DYER. Those are requests that should be put separately.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the requests separately. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] asks unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to his colleague for the purpose of enabling him to make a request?

Mr. BEGG. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY] asks unanimous consent to speak for 15 minutes following the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, I suppose those two speeches are both on the bill?

Mr. DAVEY. I will say that for the time being my colleague and I are agreed.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Reserving the right to object, I trust there will be no political debate, one in favor of a Democratic candidate and the other in favor of a Republican.

Mr. LOZIER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire if either of these gentlemen has in his inside pocket a letter written by the other? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I agree whole-heartedly with my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER]. I am not at all in sympathy with the idea of provoking an additional delay in the beginning of the construction of these dirigibles. Let me say that in the remarks I shall make I do not intend to be in any way unkind. But the facts are as they are, and I can not change them.

Now, as to this Swiss-American concern, this Brown-Boveri Co., I would like to call attention to the fact that the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] asked Mr. Wilder if it was an all-American concern, and in the hearings not once does Mr. Wilder deny that it is a foreign corporation. But he says repeatedly in his testimony that the Swiss concern, the Brown-Boveri Co., furnished them the patents and the engineers, and they have two members on the board of directors.

That does not mean a thing to me. I would personally, perhaps, just as willingly let a contract to an all-foreign concern; but when it comes in the way it does, it does not at all increase my faith in the sincerity of the bidders.

This Brown-Boveri Co. was organized in 1925. The Navy Department advertised for bids and designs in 1927, two years after these people were in existence. Now, if their interference at this time, if their injection of an implied cheaper price, be worthy of attention, I call the attention of the committee to the fact that there is not in evidence anywhere a single line in writing by an authorized officer of this Swiss-American concern binding that concern to do anything for the American Government.

In 1927—last spring—the Navy Department advertised publicly for bids for design and construction of these dirigible ships. Now, there were approximately 30 bidders and designs; some institutions or companies, others individuals. The Navy Department had drawn up a scale of ratings on the basis of 100 per cent. The Goodyear Co. rated 103 on the grading of the Navy Department, and the nearest competitor to the Goodyear Co. rated 86, and the next competitor rated 77. In other words, there was a differential in favor of the Goodyear people of almost 20 points.

Now, that is to be easily understood. Let this House familiarize itself with the personnel of the Goodyear Co.; and for the information of the Navy Department and of the House I want to go on record as being opposed to a delay of six or eight more months for the purpose of giving an opportunity to a concern as to which I will say there is doubt in my mind about its good faith and the good faith of that concern's bid.

The gentleman who appeared before the committee, Mr. Wilder, has no license to make any claim to anything about a dirigible. He says they have associated with them a couple of college professors. They may be theoretical; they may be authorities in the field of engineering theory, and I will not question that. Then he refers to Captain Heinen, and he quotes him at length in the hearings, but I challenge any man living to show me a line in the biography of Captain Heinen which justifies the assumption on his part that he is any kind of an engineer in navigation. It is true he was a pilot at one time, but there is some doubt about his ability to continue as a pilot in the only real job he ever had.

Now, contrast that with the personnel of this Goodyear Co. Dr. Karl Arnstein was with the Zeppelin company in Germany as its chief engineer for 10 years. He constructed one of the first duralumin structured airplanes and was closely associated with the design, stress, analysis, and construction of the two types of metal airplane. Eugen Brunner, from 1911 to 1924, 13 years with the same Zeppelin concern in Germany in charge of design of power and passenger cars and accessories for airships, and so on. All doctors from the best engineering schools in the world. Herman Richard Liebert, from 1918 to 1924 with the same Zeppelin company in charge of experimental work, aerodynamic computation, experimental designs, and so on, now a member of the Goodyear concern. Benjamin Josef Schnitzer, from 1915 to 1924, nine years with the same concern in Germany and up until the present time with the Goodyear concern, in charge of design of hull structure, landing, handling, and mooring devices. Paul Helma, another German Zeppelin man, with experience in strength calculation on airships. Dr. Wolfgang Klemperer, from 1921 to 1924 with the same Zeppelin concern in charge of research work on wind channel and in flight; developing and testing instruments for airships and testing experimental airship parts. Lorenz Rieger, out of the same concern in Germany, in charge of design and construction of airship power plants. Eugen Schoettel, from the same concern. He spent one year in design and installation of instruments and miscellaneous apparatus; three and a half years in design, construction, and testing of new airship parts, miscellaneous projecting, and so forth, and four years in projecting department in charge of outer cover, gas bags, valves, and so on. Karl Huerttle, another man out of that company, superintendent of fabric shop, manufacturing all covers, bags, gas valves, interior equipment, and so on. Directed the inspection and testing of all textile material used on airships and supervised all work on gas-cell netting and miscellaneous rigging. Hans Keck, who had charge of control arrangements, mooring arrangements, special tools, dies, jigs, and so on. William Fischer, who spent one year on experimental work and three and a half years on projecting work. Kurt Bauch, specialist in stress analysis and strength calculation.

Now, I want to call your attention to the fact that the Goodyear Co. is in this through patriotic motives, because the president of the Goodyear concern, Mr. Litchfield, I believe, is a man who has as much vision as any man in business with whom I have ever been permitted to come in contact. Mr. Litchfield believes the dirigible will become a vehicle of commerce in the immediate future, and I believe in the light of the developments in the rest of the world that he is justified in his belief.

Germany will put into operation between Seville, Spain, and Rio de Janeiro this year a passenger-carrying and a material-carrying ship through the air; and right now, according to information that comes to me, a Britisher by the name of Birney is in the United States undertaking to execute a contract with the American Government for 10 years to carry mail across the Atlantic in these rigid airships. Here we are in this country, and if we let this contract next week the very closest possible time we can get a ship into operation is, perhaps, 30 months.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Is the gentleman aware that unless these airships are begun within 90 days the contract is off and that the authority is gone? That is my recollection of the act of Congress—that they have to be begun before the 1st of July, 1928.

Mr. BEGG. I have the act here.

Mr. BUTLER. Is that true—that in 90 days from now these ships must be begun?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Is not the gentleman wrong in using the plural? You can not begin the second one until you have the first one.

Mr. BEGG. But we can begin the construction of airships by starting one.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman does not believe the Postmaster General or anyone connected with the administration would enter into a 10-year contract to carry mail by air to Europe with a foreign concern?

Mr. BEGG. Whether the Postmaster General enters into that contract or whether he does not, it is evidence of what the rest of the world is doing in the development of rigid airships. And while we are sitting idly by, along comes this spurious bid, made after 12 months. I ask you where were the Brown-Boveri Co. last summer when designs were called for? Why, if you are going to postpone action for another eight months in order to accommodate this company, what is to hinder some other shipbuilding company a year from now from coming in and saying, "Give us another six months; we would like to bid"? This company is taking no chances in the world, because, as I said a moment ago, there is not the scratch of a pen anywhere which will bind the Brown-Boveri Co. They are not bound to the payment of one dollar—not a dollar—and yet they are coming to Congress and trying, through irresponsible statements, to throw a monkey wrench into the machinery and hold up the construction of these rigid airships for six months and, so far as I am concerned, knowing the Goodyear Co. as I do and that company having in its employ the engineers I have mentioned, at a cost, perhaps, of a half million dollars, for a number of years, I would not permit the Navy Department to postpone the construction of these dirigibles or, at least, the construction of one of them. If they want to advertise for the other one, that is an entirely different matter.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I would like the ask the gentleman whether this man Wilder, to whom he has referred, is the same one who has been writing us and saying that he will build ships to cross the ocean in four months if we will loan him $75,000,000?

Mr. BEGG. He is the same gentleman.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. And if it is required in the law that the airships shall be started in 90 days, I understand the Goodyear people are ready to start them, and I may say that I rather liked the list of names which the gentleman read.

Mr. BEGG. There are no better gentlemen in the world and they are ready to proceed.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I thought mine might fit in very well with theirs.

Mr. BEGG. They can start construction in one hour after the Government signs the contract.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Has the Navy Department prepared the plans and specifications?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman understand that the Goodyear proposition with their design was not submitted in accordance with the aircraft procurement law and that it would be impossible for the Secretary of the Navy to let a contract for the construction of those airships without again advertising for bids?

Mr. BEGG. No; the gentleman is entirely wrong when he makes that statement.

Mr. TABER. That is exactly the legal situation.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman is entirely wrong, and all the gentleman has to do is to call up Secretary Wilbur and Secretary Wilbur will advise the gentleman that if the legislation were passed they would sign a contract with the Goodyear Co. as soon as the details about the design were worked out.

Mr. TABER. Saturday Secretary Wilbur did not say that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. DAVEY and Mr. O'CONNELL rose.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Why does not the gentleman ask the gentleman from New York the source of his information?

Mr. BEGG. I would like to first answer the statement of the gentleman from Nebraska. This same man Wilder is proposing to build a ship—not an airship, but a water ship—to cross the Atlantic, as he claims, in four days. If the dirigible proves practicable—and I am perfectly willing to admit it is an experiment and that the rest of the world is two years ahead of us—there will not be much opportunity for this four-day ship.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. For cargo.

Mr. BEGG. Two hundred tons can be carried in this six and a half million cubic foot ship.

I want now to say a word about this $4,000,000 offer made by this Swiss-American concern.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman tell us how fast these airships travel?

Mr. BEGG. I will ask the gentleman from Idaho to answer that question. I have an idea, but I do not want to make a positive statement about it.

Mr. FRENCH. The hearings have indicated that ships of this type would be able to travel at 60 or 80 and perhaps more miles per hour.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It depends on the wind. If she gets a tail wind, you add, and if she gets a head wind, you subtract.

Mr. FRENCH. And you must remember we have not had a ship like this.

Mr. BEGG. Let me say further that it is very interesting to read the testimony of this man Wilder. He admits connection with a foreign concern, and he speaks of a Capt. Anton Heinen. This [indicating] is the Journal of the American Society of Naval Engineers, and here is what they say about the testimony of Captain Heinen on the wreck of the Shenandoah:

> The testimony of Capt. Anton Heinen being of a very positive nature, requires on certain points equally positive refutation. While there is no disputing the fact that Captain Heinen is an expert operator of rigid airships, we have in the record his own statement to the fact that he is not an engineering expert.

Now, just a word further. The statement was made by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] that the Lakehurst hangar would probably be too far from Goodyear for the ship to be built by the Goodyear Co. The Goodyear people can erect this ship in the Lakehurst hangar if the Government wants to surrender the use of the hangar for three years; but in their bid of $8,000,000—and keep in mind that the Brown-Boveri Co. wants $4,000,000 for one ship and the Goodyear will build two for $8,000,000—they will erect a hangar that in any time of national emergency or anything of that sort would be available to the Government wherever they decide to build this ship, let it be in Ohio or anywhere else.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Wherever the Government decides?

Mr. BEGG. Wherever the Government decides it wants it to be built they will build this hangar, and the lowest estimate that has been given me by Mr. Litchfield for the cost of the hangar is $1,500,000, and he has said, as my colleague from that particular city states, it may cost two and a half million dollars. Mr. Litchfield said further to me:

> Mr. BEGG, if building two Government ships at $8,000,000 was the end of the program in my belief, I would not think of submitting a bid, but I believe the dirigible will become the transporter of materials and men over great bodies of water just as certainly as the airplane will become the transporter of material and men over the land, and because of that belief I am willing to risk from $500,000 to $1,000,000 of my company's money in performing the experiment with the Government.

Will we, I ask you, permit an irresponsible bidder, who had every opportunity and every chance in the world to put in a bid last year, to come in now and throw a monkey wrench into the machinery and bring about a delay of six months, or will we speak positively to the Navy Department and direct them to proceed with the construction of one ship at the very earliest possible moment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to make a statement. While the Chair entertained a request a moment ago by the other gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY] to be recognized for 15 minutes following the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] the Chair does not desire this procedure to stand as a precedent. In the opinion of the Chair recognition is entirely in the hands of the Chair and it might prove embarrassing to the committee to have the precedent established that the time may be controlled in advance.

Without objection, the Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY] for 15 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like first to read from the testimony of Mr. Wilder before the subcommittee. He says:

> We do not believe dirigibles will be practical for North Atlantic use for the next 20 years because of weather conditions there.

Here is a man who suddenly comes into view and wants to secure a Government contract on a proposition with which he is not acquainted, comes before the subcommittee and makes the statement that he does not consider the dirigible practicable within the next 20 years. That, I think, illustrates his state of mind.

I might be frank in saying that this sudden burst of enthusiasm on the part of the concern from Camden, N. J., is in a way a surprise proposition and hard to understand. But inasmuch as the gentleman's name is Wilder, I should say perhaps the name illustrates the type and character of the proposition.

To me it seems the concern has come as an interloper. I am wondering, as my colleague has said, not only where the concern was last summer, but I am wondering where they were two and a half years ago.

At the beginning of the struggle to bring about an American development in the construction of the great and new dirigibles in the efforts for the advancement of commerce—I am wondering where they were in the winter of 1927 when competitive designs were requested and bids called for. Perhaps it may be understood by referring to the program that this particular concern is interested in, that fast-going steamships will cross the Atlantic in four days. I understand their proposition calls for the Government, through the Shipping Board, to provide the necessary money for that wonderful new enterprise of four-day transportation—the Government to provide the money at a low rate of interest to finance the concern in their enterprise. In other words, they come here primarily with a selfish proposition asking the Government to finance an enterprise dealing with fast steamships for transportation across the Atlantic.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not know who this company is, but I have read the hearings and I do not want the gentleman to leave the impression that they want the Government to finance them.

Mr. DAVEY. I mean on the steamship proposition.

Mr. BRITTEN. I know the gentleman from Ohio wants to be fair. The gentleman ought not to leave the impression that this company desires the Government to finance the shipbuilding activities. That is not quite correct. The Brown-Boveri Co. does desire financial aid through the loan fund of the Shipping Board. That is existing law that any ship that is built right now the operator can borrow 66⅔ per cent on the cost from the Shipping Board.

Mr. DAVEY. To be paid back when?

Mr. BRITTEN. In the next 20 years. The Brown-Boveri Co. have requested that this 66⅔ per cent be increased to 75 per cent, and the Government is working along that line now.

Mr. DAVEY. I am glad to accept the gentleman's correction, but it is Government aid they want just the same.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman knows that this is no other than the New York Shipbuilding Co.?

Mr. DAVEY. It seems to me when they ask the Government to back their enterprise it is simply a promotion scheme. These people come here not at the eleventh hour but at the eleventh hour and fiftieth minute and offer not a specific proposition—they say they will build an airship for $4,000,000. They do not say how big and they offer no design. What have they in the way of equipment? Nothing. They have no experience, no personnel; but they want to get a contract that has been developed through the labors of others.

Here is a concern in the district that I have the honor to represent, a concern that has been laboring on this proposition for many years. They have spent within the last few years a half million dollars to prepare themselves technically and otherwise for the construction of a great dirigible airship. They have a large equipment and adequate preparations together with expert labor and experience to enable them to go ahead.

Now, this interloping concern—and that is just what it looks like to me—comes down here and offers to build a dirigible for $4,000,000 without reference to size or anything else, and they want to use the hangar at Lakehurst belonging to the Government. In other words, they ask the Government to furnish the workshop in which to build it.

Mr. BACON. Has the gentleman read the hearings?

Mr. DAVEY. I have.

Mr. BACON. As I read them they offer to build a hangar at their own expense.

Mr. DAVEY. I do not so understand.

Mr. BACON. It is so stated in the hearings.

Mr. DAVEY. I have been told by officials of the Navy Department that their whole proposition was completely indefinite, that nobody knows what they offer to do.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Disregarding the two companies we have under consideration just now, but assuming all things to be equal, does not the gentleman believe that with the present development of the art it would be a good thing to have the two ships built by different concerns, on different plans.

Mr. DAVEY. If we are willing to pay the excess cost of dividing the contract, that might be all right; but it has been demonstrated by calculation that there is an immense saving in building both under one head.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I realize that, but I say with the present development of the art I think it would be a good thing, always assuming that the conditions are equal.

Mr. DAVEY. Do I understand the gentleman to suggest that the experience one concern gains in the building of one dirigible should not be applicable to the building of the other dirigible?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This would be the first big dirigible that the present firm would have constructed. Therefore I believe that out of the two constructions, with the present state of the art, it would be advantageous to have different ships, assuming that the other concern has designs of its own.

Mr. DAVEY. With all due respect to the gentleman's suggestion, that has not been contemplated up to date. I would like to develop one or two more thoughts in this connection. If, as I have understood, it is the idea of this interloping concern to use the hangar at Lakehurst as their workshop, what are you going to do with the Los Angeles during the period of construction?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Has the gentleman read the hearings? Does he understand that these people, when they talked about competing, stated that they would build their own hangar at Camden?

Mr. DAVEY. I have understood that their whole proposition is very indefinite.

Mr. TABER. That is what the hearings show.

Mr. DAVEY. A responsible official of the Navy told me this morning that if it is built at Lakehurst, they will have to abandon activities at Lakehurst during a considerable portion of the period and that the Los Angeles during that period will have to be stored some place out of the way.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman mean that this Congress ought to decide on the firm that should make this airship?

Mr. DAVEY. No. I am saying these things to indicate what seems to me to be the logic of the situation.

Mr. HARDY. Just why does the gentleman knock a concern in another State so hard, if he is not trying to force the building of a certain ship at a certain point. It seems to me that we ought to let the Navy Department decide where it will let these contracts.

Mr. DAVEY. That is perfectly all right.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman object to competitive bidding on this proposition?

Mr. DAVEY. I am not worried at all about that; but I wanted to get certain facts into the RECORD, because I have understood there is a gentleman's agreement between the committee and the Secretary of the Navy with reference to this contract and the delay involved.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We can not build ships by gentlemen's agreements.

Mr. BUTLER. We ought to know about that. No gentlemen's agreement goes in this House in a matter of that kind.

Mr. DAVEY. I meant not with reference to a contract, but with reference to further competitive bidding.

Mr. HARDY. Let me say that the only interest that this committee has is to see that there is no gentlemen's agreement between the Members from the State of Ohio and a local institution in Ohio——

Mr. DAVEY. That is all right.

Mr. HARDY. About that contract, and the only interest that this committee has is to see that this thing is left wide open to the whole United States, and that any firm in the United States can bid upon it. There is no agreement between this committee and the Secretary of the Navy. The only thought is that the Secretary of the Navy will throw the thing open to competitive bidding.

Mr. DAVEY. May I say in that connection that I would under no circumstances question the committee, because I think they have acted in good faith and they have the interest of the Government at heart. The things I have attempted to say have reference to a concern that has been sleeping for two years and a half and have come down here at almost the twelfth hour and put in an indefinite proposition, with no equipment, no experience, no personnel, and have asked the Government to delay a program that is already two years late.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Certainly.

Mr. ABERNETHY. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] indicated that this firm which the Navy Department was dickering with had some foreign interests connected with it. Is that correct information?

Mr. DAVEY. I really do not know. I would not attempt to answer that because I do not know.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to ask a question?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. The hearings indicate that every dollar that has gone into their Brown-Boveri Co. has been supplied in the United States.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Do the hearings indicate how much voting stock is given to the Brown-Boveri Co. for the use of their patent?

Mr. BRITTEN. No.

Mr. BEGG. Of course they do not show that.

Mr. TABER. Is that the fact?

Mr. BEGG. I do not know, but there are two boards of directors.

Mr. TABER. That is just speculation on the gentleman's part.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman from Ohio has had enough business experience so that he knows he is not putting his patent in for some other fellow to play with.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I think it a very important matter, when we are building ships that might be used for purposes of warfare in the future, to ascertain if any foreign interests have any interest in this company that has undertaken to build them.

Mr. BRITTEN. The Brown-Boveri Co. is now building three of our first-line cruisers at the present moment. It is the New York Shipbuilding Co. I will agree with my friend from Ohio that they have never built an airship and probably never will.

Mr. BUTLER. They are building one cruiser and taken over another to finish. The Cramps failed on it, just the engines.

Mr. BEGG. I am reading the testimony of Mr. Wilder, found on page 8 of the supplemental hearings. He says:

> The securities of the American Brown-Boveri Co. were entirely financed in America, and there was no money put into it by the Swiss concern.

Further on he says:

> We use the name "Brown-Boveri" because of its international reputation.
>
> Mr. TABER. Along electrical lines?
> Mr. WILDER. Yes, sir. As I have said, the stock of the corporation was entirely financed in America. Now, the Swiss have two representatives on the board of directors, but both of them are American citizens.

Do not think these people are fools enough to furnish the money and let foreign interests sit on the directorate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, may I have five minutes additional?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVEY. I further refer to the question propounded by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HARDY], for whom I have great respect. I would like to say this: There has already been keen competition upon this proposition. There was competition a year ago. It is not a beginning of competition at this time. We have had the competition last year. The whole country was invited to compete in the winter of 1927, everyone who was legally entitled to in the United States. It was open to anyone.

I would like to know where this concern was at that time. Why were they asleep in 1927?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. In letting contracts for public buildings you sometimes have only one or two bidders, but it does not necessarily follow that one bidder is going to get the contract. They readvertise.

Mr. DAVEY. The Goodyear Co. received a rating almost 20 per cent above the next highest bidder.

Mr. BEGG. There were 29 other men besides the Goodyear institution, and they were aware of the fact that the Government wanted them to bid. It seems peculiar that at this time the Swiss-American concern did not get in.

Mr. DAVEY. Who constitutes the technical staff of this concern down in Camden? What is their experience and background? One Captain Heinen—the captain part of it is a courtesy title—corresponds to an airship designer and engineer very much as an expert chauffeur corresponds to a designer of automobiles. He is an expert chauffeur, and that is all. They have absolutely no technical staff that is prepared to approach this problem. They have no equipment, no experience, no background, no preparation for it at all. They come in when the thing is all done and ask for a delay in the proceedings, so that they may get ready and think out a plan of some kind to submit in competition with the well-matured and long-developed program that has already been submitted to competition.

With that statement, gentlemen, I am glad to yield the floor, and I thank you sincerely for your patient and courteous attention. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. I know nothing of the relative merits of these two companies and, accordingly, do not address myself to that phase of our inquiry. In that regard, like most of you, I must rely upon our experts in the service who will have in charge the final determination of this matter. But I am very much interested in the early construction of these dirigibles, because I believe that our country, with all its preeminent advantages in the lighter-than-air field is likely to lag.

Something has been said in this debate to intimate that the dirigible is not a practical ship for aerial operation. We are so prone to forget history, gentlemen. Heavier-than-air planes have flown on more than one occasion from America to Europe, but many pilots have lost their lives in unsuccessful attempts to fly in heavier-than-air planes from Europe to America. Yet the fact that a dirigible has made the round-trip trans-Atlantic flight with relative ease is passed by with little thought and less comment. The British airship, the R–34, paid us a visit a few years ago and then returned safely to England. The Los Angeles was delivered to us from Germany by trans-Atlantic flight. Dirigibles have long been used in European transportation. A dirigible has flown over the North Pole, and recent press dispatches indicate that another foreign dirigible is being prepared to duplicate that feat. A dirigible has made a round trip transcontinental flight in the United States. The Los Angeles recently flew from New Jersey to Panama and then returned. We are so prone, I say, to question the utility and practicability of the dirigible and to forget very plain facts of history concerning it. Some of its accomplishments have not been duplicated with heavier-than-air machines.

I do not want our country to fall behind in this field of activity. There is every reason why it should forge ahead. The dirigible has a function which the airplane can not perform. I refer to the work of scouting, or reconnaissance, especially at sea. The dirigible can go to great distances, stay in the air for long periods of time, and has the characteristic advantage of being able to hover. No other kind of ship can render some of its peculiar and helpful services.

This country is specially blessed in the lighter-than-air field by reason of the fact that a kind Providence has given it a practical monopoly of the agent and element which makes lighter-than-air operations safe and sane. I refer to our supply of helium. I do not know why the Almighty in His wisdom has vouchsafed this element to us only. I have hoped sometimes that it might be a token of a better era to come when, with this agent of offense and defense possessed by no other nation, we might be able through this superior advantage to help bring about international peace. [Applause.] Americans are not seeking wars of conquest. Conquest has never been our goal and, as long as we continue to cherish our high ideals, never will be. Perhaps ours is the opportunity for a nobler mission.

By the terms under which we received the Los Angeles we are limited in the use we may make of it. Though other countries, denied by nature a supply of helium, are building large dirigibles, we are without a single one which we may use as we please. Our airships other than the Los Angeles are small ones. But, gentlemen, it is most important that when these ships are built, and I think they should be built speedily, but correctly—they shall be so designed and their construction so superintended that we may conserve this great supply of helium, of which we have a practical monopoly. We can not afford to permit its careless or unnecessary waste.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. There have been certain inventions which have obviated very largely the necessity of the loss of helium in ordinary flight. One is the apparatus for water recovery, whereby the exhaust from the motors is condensed and a volume of water procured equal in weight to the gasoline consumed as fuel. An equilibrium in weight is thus attained, and it has obviated largely the necessity of valving helium. But in ascending to great heights and sometimes in making landings we still lose some of it by valving. We have some loss also in the leakage through various kinds of fabrics.

We shall always have the materials to build airships, but we may not always have helium. Due study should be given to methods of conserving it. I have not the technical training to enable me to speak with any authority concerning methods by which it may be conserved, but there are those who contend that there are types of construction of gas cells and the containers which hold them which will give the advantages to be derived from expansion and contraction of the gas with little or no loss of the helium used. This is an important field for study.

So, in addition to our interest in having these ships, and in having them built strongly and durably and efficiently, we have the further interest of seeing that they are constructed in such a way that we may lose as little as possible of this God-given element which is so priceless in times of peace and of war, and of which, through the beneficence of the Almighty, we have a practical world monopoly. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman and members, as a new Member of this House, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the statement of the case attempted to be made out for the Goodyear Zeppelin Co. by the two candidates for governor from the State of Ohio [Messrs. BEGG and DAVEY]. [Laughter.]

It would seem to me that when a matter of this character is before the House for its consideration, a matter that involves our national defense as well as an effort to obtain the best possible results from an expenditure of from four to eight million dollars—according to the number of dirigibles to be built—that the best interests of the country should be given consideration rather than the best interests of a particular congressional district or a particular State. [Applause.]

I mention this fact for the reason that I have the privilege and the honor of representing the first district of New Jersey. The district which I represent has within it, at Camden, N. J., the largest and most complete shipbuilding plant in the country, known as the American Brown-Boveri Co., formerly the New York Shipbuilding Corporation.

The gentlemen from Ohio [Messrs. BEGG and DAVEY], however, have totally ignored the splendid record of achievement made by this company during the 30 years of its existence. During this time it has constructed numerous war ships and merchant vessels that have been a credit to the country. It is not exceeded by any other plant in the entire country in its capacity for high-grade work.

Notwithstanding the stability and the capacity of the plant, which has been proved by many years of exceptional service, the gentlemen from Ohio [Messrs. BEGG and DAVEY] have seen fit to refer to this well-established plant by the use of derogatory terms. They have seen fit to cast aspersions on it for no other reason than that they recognize in it a competitor of the Goodyear Zeppelin Co., which has its domicile within the State which the two gentlemen already referred to so ably represent. While I represent the district which has within it this outstanding plant, yet I do not speak for that plant merely because it happens to be in my particular district, nor do I ask that it be given any special consideration other than what will result substantially to the benefit of the country at large. I do ask, however, that if the plant located at Camden, N. J., or any other plant anywhere else in the United States, can submit to us anything that is worth while, then it is entitled to our serious thought and consideration.

This bill comes before the House after this particular matter which is now under discussion has been given very serious and thoughtful consideration by the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee. The chairman of this committee [Mr. FRENCH] and his colleagues who serve with him have an established reputation in the House of a careful and conscientious consideration of all matters that come before their committee for action. We know by experience that when they make a recommendation to this House it is entitled to serious consideration by the membership of the House.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON. In just a moment. I would take it that when this committee comes into this House and makes a recommendation as contained in this bill we can readily assume that they have gone into it with the same care and thought as is the case whenever they present a matter to us. I wish to remind the opponents of this recommendation of the committee that there is nothing to be gained by coming before the House using derogatory names and terms that are not justified by the facts. I have heard cases tried in court, and I have very frequently noticed that the weaker the case the more abusive the language addressed toward the opponent. In this particular case my good friend from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] has seen fit to repeatedly speak of the American Brown-Boveri Co. as the Swiss Brown-Boveri Co. He must know that there is no justification for such use of the name of this reputable American company. If I should adopt the same tactics, I could with great propriety inquire of him as to the nationality of the Goodyear Zeppelin Co. I do not know the nationality of Zeppelin. Is that Swiss or German?

Mr. BUTLER. German.

Mr. WOLVERTON. But when the opponents of this measure come before the House and urge us to defeat the recommendation of the committee merely upon the basis that the company, which is a competitor of the Goodyear Zeppelin Co., has a name which they say is Swiss, I say that does not go to the merits of the issue and has no place in a proper discussion of this important matter.

Now, what are the facts? The American Brown-Boveri Corporation is the successor of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation. The latter corporation has been in business in the city of Camden, N. J., for upwards of 30 years. The New York Shipbuilding Corporation has turned out of its yard some of the finest of the United States battleships, including the Kansas, Arkansas, Utah, Oklahoma, Michigan, Colorado, and last—although perhaps, the finest, because it points to the new and inevitable union of sea ships and ships of the air—the great airplane carrier Saratoga. It also constructed the cruiser Washington and about 40 destroyers for the United States Navy, and has two cruisers now under construction for the Government, and is building the engines for a third.

The American merchant marine has also been enriched by the labor of this yard. It built the ocean passenger and cargo steamers Manchuria, Mongolia, Congress, Governor, 9 ships of the famous President class, 535 feet long, and 7 of the President class, 502 feet long. In addition to these, there have been numerous other ships, such as transports, colliers, oil tankers, and river and coastwise ships, making a total altogether of more than 360 ships built by this one yard. And let me remind you at this point that during the war, when our country was anxious to build ships as fast as possible—in that great emergency time—this shipbuilding plant at Camden, N. J., did what has never been done before or since in any one shipyard in the world—and that is that within the short space of 39 days from the time the keel was laid, a completed ship was sent forth for Uncle Sam and is still rendering important service.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOLVERTON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. I do not care to interrupt the gentleman, but personally I agree with all the gentleman says. I am familiar with the New York Shipbuilding Corporation, but they sold out in 1925 to this Swiss-American concern.

Mr. WOLVERTON. My friend from Ohio, for whom I have so much respect, has said that they sold out to a Swiss-American concern. What does he mean by "sold out"? They have sold out nothing.

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman will permit, Mr. Wilder says he bought them out.

Mr. WOLVERTON. It is true that in 1925 Mr. Wilder personally organized a corporation by the name of American Brown-Boveri Corporation, which took over the New York Shipbuilding Corporation. But I wish to inform the gentleman from Ohio that every dollar that went into the American Brown-Boveri Corporation in the purchase of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation was American capital, and its entire board of directors are native-born citizens of the United States. Furthermore, every employee of the company at the present time, with the exception of a mere handful, is a citizen of this country. The name of the company is not Swiss-American Brown-Boveri, it is American Brown-Boveri. And the term "American" is used advisedly, as can be readily seen from the statement just made as to its origin and the composition of its board of directors.

There is no more significance to be taken from the use of the term "Brown-Boveri" in connection with the name of this corporation than there is in the use of the name "Goodyear-Zeppelin," so favorably referred to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG]. It is an indication, I assume, in both instances, of a desire on the part of both companies to inform the world that they have available the famous knowledge and experience of the two names which have been made a part of their American corporate names.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I wish to emphasize the fact that this company at Camden, N. J., is an American industry. It represents American money. There is not a dollar of foreign capital in the company. There is no justification for any insinuation to be cast upon it by any one as to its nationality. It is, as its name indicates, American; and the benefits that come from the operation of this company accrue to American citizens.

Mr. MOONEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON. Yes.

Mr. MOONEY. Does the gentleman know of any company that has directors that do not represent stock in the company?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I do not know. I do know, however, that the directors of the American Brown-Boveri Corporation are all native-born Americans; and with your permission I will inform the House as to who constitute the board of directors. They are as follows:

William M. Flook, president; Clinton L. Bardo, vice president; M. L. Sindeband, vice president; J. E. Slater, secretary and treasurer.

Executive offices, 420 Lexington Avenue, New York City; main plant, Camden, N. J.; subsidiary plants, Boston, Mass.; Sidney, N. Y.; St. Louis, Mo.

The list of directors and their connections are as follows:

William R. Begg, counsel for Blair & Co., bankers, New York City.

George A. Burnham, president Condit Electrical Manufacturing Corporation, Boston, Mass.

Allen Curtis, of Curtis & Sanger, bankers, Boston, Mass.

William M. Flook, president of the corporation, formerly president Memphis Power & Light Co., Memphis, Tenn.

Edward N. Goodwin, of the law firm of Campbell, Harding & Goodwin, New York City.

William V. Griffin, of the Anthony-Brady Estate, New York City.

James Imbrie, president Imbrie & Co., bankers, New York City.

William F. Ingold, partner of the firm Pynchon & Co., bankers, New York City.

John J. Rudolf, of A. Iselin & Co., bankers, New York City.

Theodore G. Smith, first vice president Central Union Trust Co., New York City.

Laurence R. Wilder, formerly president of the corporation, born in Chicago, Ill.

Furthermore, reference has been made by one of the gentlemen from Ohio that the technical experts who are connected with the American Brown-Boveri Corporation in connection with the building of dirigibles are of German extraction. They refer particularly to Captain Heinen. In this connection permit me to inform the House that Captain Heinen, although a native of Germany, is now a naturalized citizen of this country. If I wished to make the same sort of argument against the Goodyear Zeppelin Co., I would emphasize the names of individuals that have been given by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] as the ones upon whom that company is depending for the construction of its dirigible. As I remember his pronunciation of them, they would each indicate that they were of foreign extraction. However, I do not hold that against them and only refer to it for the reason that I wish to emphasize how unfair is the argument which has been made against the American Brown-Boveri Corporation because of it having retained in its employment Captain Heinen. Captain Heinen was with the German Zeppelin Co. for more than 12 years, during which time he participated in the construction of more than 85 rigid airships. Our own Navy Department thought so highly of his technical knowledge and ability and his great experience as a pilot of rigid airships that it invited him, of its own volition, to take the position of technical supervisor in the construction of the Shenandoah and put him in charge of training the American Navy crew for that ship.

He is best known to Americans as the man who took command of the Shenandoah when she broke loose from her mooring mast at Lakehurst during a very heavy windstorm, and by magnificent airmanship saved the Shenandoah, and after a long and extremely dangerous struggle in the air, brought her safely back to her landing field, although her nose had been entirely ripped away when she broke loose. This is the man who is now on the staff of the American Brown-Boveri Corporation, and whose knowledge and skill are at the service of that company in its proposal to bid for construction of an American rigid dirigible airship. He has the stamp of approval of our own Government upon him.

The chairman of the committee, which will give aeronautical advice to the American Brown-Boveri Corporation, is Prof. William Hovgaard, who occupies the chair of aeronautics and marine engineering at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the foremost authority on lighter-than-air aircraft, who, I understand, is consultant of the Navy Bureau of Construction and Repair and of its Bureau of Aeronautics. The highest students at Annapolis are sent to him for a postgraduate course. I am informed that he has accepted responsibility for the design of airship for this corporation. The other expert aeronautical consultant engineer on the staff of the American Brown-Boveri Corporation is Prof. Herbert C. Sadler, professor of marine engineering and aeronautics at the University of Michigan. I call the attention of my friend from Ohio to the fact that the University of Michigan and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology both agree with me that rigid airships and ships that float in water meet very much the same conditions, and are both properly the work of shipbuilders and marine engineers.

Mr. DAVEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DAVEY. Just two questions: I would like to ask the gentleman if Mr. Wilder did not say that he did not think the dirigible would be practical for the North Atlantic use within the next 20 years, owing to weather conditions? In other words, does he believe in the dirigible or does he simply desire to halt the program in favor of the steamship?

Mr. WOLVERTON. In answer to the gentleman's question, I respectfully call his attention to the testimony given by Mr. Wilder at the hearing before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations concerning rigid airships, held on March 23, 1928. The gentleman will ascertain that no one could be more enthusiastic as to the future of this type of aircraft than Mr. Wilder. On that occasion he stated that he had sufficient faith in the future of lighter-than-air craft to consider the building of a shed at the plant of his company at Camden, N. J., at a cost of over $700,000, and that he felt he would be justified in building such a shed as a capital investment. He stated that if his company built one rigid airship there would be no doubt about their being called upon to build more, and that he would therefore feel warranted in the building of the necessary facilities, even at the great expense mentioned, to enable his company to go into the building of this type of ship.

In this connection I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that at no time has the Goodyear Zeppelin Co. ever indicated such faith in the future usefulness of dirigibles as to warrant the expending of any such sum of money as a capital investment. And furthermore, that the offer of the Goodyear Zeppelin Co. is not a straight contract price of $4,000,000, as offered by the American Brown-Boveri Co. for the building of one dirigible, but a cost-plus proposition which means that the Goodyear Zeppelin Co. is experimenting at the Government's expense.

I further call the gentleman's attention to the fact that Mr. Wilder, in his testimony, called the attention of the committee to the fact that the French during the last two weeks have put on a South American service, flying from Paris to Morocco, and after a short sea trip to the east coast of South America, then flying to Buenos Aires; and in this connection he used these words:

> The only way we can compete as a nation, as we see it, after this most exhaustive study lasting over two years in international transportation, is by dirigible to South America. It is too long a trip to fly by any other type of airship now in service. That is why, personally, I am so anxious to see two ships constructed at this time.

In the opinion of the American Brown-Boveri Co. officials, the building of a dirigible, a rigid airship which has a metal framework, a skeleton like a ship, is a job for shipbuilders not for balloon makers. The conditions which a rigid airship meets in flight are very much the same conditions which a ship meets under way. One floats in the air and one on the water. England knows this, and that is why the British airship, the rigid dirigible R–100 is being built by Vickers (Ltd.), famous as a builder of ships. The American Brown-Boveri Co. has a long experience in building ships, as I have just shown to you, and it has a very wide general technical staff, because it builds heavy electrical machinery as well as ships.

I further wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that favorable action upon the bill as recommended by the committee will enable the Navy Department to take advantage of a much better offer that will be submitted by the American Brown-Boveri Co. should additional bids be requested. Mr. Wilder, representing this company, definitely stated before the committee that the outside cost of the construction of one dirigible by his company would not exceed $4,000,000, whereas the Goodyear Zeppelin Co., by Mr. Young, informed the House Naval Affairs Committee at a hearing on December 14 that the cost of one dirigible would be not less than $4,500,000 on the cost-plus basis. It can be readily seen that there is no limit when a contract of that character is entered into.

There is no doubt that it would be far more advantageous on the part of the Government to enter into a contract on a definite cost of $4,000,000 with a bond that would guarantee performance than to enter into a cost-plus proposition as submitted by the Goodyear Co. under date of December 3, 1927.

Mr. DAVEY. The Goodyear Co. is willing to build one ship, but they say frankly that they can build two cheaper.

Mr. WOLVERTON. But they did not submit a proposition for one ship except upon a cost-plus basis, which does not fix in a definite way the actual cost to the Government.

Mr. DAVEY. They have made that proposition to the Navy Department.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. DAVEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLVERTON. If the gentleman from Ohio could have been present and heard the testimony as it was given before the Naval Affairs Committee on December 14, 1927, by representatives of the Goodyear Co., then he would have understood how undecided the Goodyear Co. was in their desire to build an airship on a fixed-price basis. The testimony indicated that the Goodyear Co. had no experience in this connection, and there was an uncertainty as to what they could do. They wanted the Government to finance the experiment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. As I suggested to the gentleman from Ohio, all things being equal—experience, plant, ability—it might be better to have two firms construct these airships, each to build one, so that we could get the best out of each one.

Mr. DAVEY. At a higher cost?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I said all things being equal.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I know the record of the Camden company. I know its ability. I know the character of the workmen, men who have made a name for the company and for themselves by what they have done.

But whatever company builds these ships, I assume that a bond will be required, and I know that the plant at Camden, N. J., does not tackle anything that it can not carry through. The Government has never lost a cent through that company. As an illustration of the economical and efficient work done by this yard, permit me to remind the House that on one occasion it completed one of our large battleships at a price of over $2,000,000 less than what a sister ship constructed at the same time in a navy yard had cost. That is an indication of the ability of this Camden company.

But I will not say anything further along this line at this particular time, as I do not wish to stir up anything more than what we have to take care of to-day. [Laughter.] It is simply to let you know the capacity and efficiency of this particular plant, because they have the highest class of workmen, the best that could be gathered. If that company has been asleep, as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, it is the fault of the American Congress, that has let the American shipbuilding yards, like the William Cramps & Sons, of Philadelphia, sleep the sleep of death.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman know whether this concern that he speaks of—I know of it well—will be able to submit plans and specifications in order to obtain a contract within the next 90 days? I would not want to see one of these dirigibles lost.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I think they would be as capable of doing that as the Goodyear Co., which has never built a dirigible yet. They may have had some experience in balloons, but the New Jersey shipyard has had more experience in steel construction.

Mr. BUTLER. The statute runs against one of these ships in 90 days. I know my friend's statement is absolutely reliable, and I want to know whether or not the concern he speaks of is in a situation so that they can make a bid and submit plans within 90 days?

Mr. WOLVERTON. The company at Camden is capable of doing anything and everything that is required of it. The testimony before the Naval Affairs Committee indicated that definite plans and specifications had not been adopted as yet. The American Brown-Boveri Corporation has made a study of the design and character of the ship R–100, now being built in England, and considers this type of ship much more desirable than that represented by the German Zeppelin plans used by the Goodyear Zeppelin Co. I am interested in obtaining the best results obtainable for the money that will be expended, and, in this connection, remember the Camden concern gives a definite bid of $4,000,000 for the construction of one dirigible and a saving of from $500,000 to $1,000,000 if two should be contracted for. The judgment of the committee is sound, and should be confirmed by the action of this House. To do so will enable the Navy Department to obtain new bids that will undoubtedly prove very advantageous to the Government.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BEGG: Page 35, line 5, after the figures "$5,500,000," insert the following: "Provided further, That the Navy Department is directed to proceed at once to enter into contract for such rigid airships with the most favorable bidder in accordance with provision of existing law."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is legislation and is not germane to the paragraph.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard briefly on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman made the statement that this is not germane. I can not see where even this is discussable, because it is right in the paragraph having to do with the direction to the Navy Department to construct. I think it is germane. I do not think it is legislation. The whole paragraph says to the Navy Department, "Let a contract to build two dirigibles." This says to do it now at the earliest possible moment. Next, if it is legislation, it is in order, because the paragraph itself is legislation, and the point of order was not raised against the paragraph. Consequently, it can not be raised against the amendment offered to the paragraph.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this is legislation imposing a specific duty on an executive officer, and it is beyond the connection of the preceding part of the paragraph and is entirely out of order in the bill.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. What specific injunction is imposed on the Navy Department that is not imposed by the paragraph?

Mr. TABER. To immediately enter into a contract.

Mr. BEGG. The paragraph imposes the responsibility of entering into a contract, does it not?

Mr. TABER. The Secretary has that under the authorization law, whenever this bill carries the appropriation.

Mr. BEGG. Then, what added injunction is there upon him?

Mr. TABER. It is to immediately enter into a contract.

Mr. BEGG. I admit that. That is all it does. It says do it to-day instead of two years from to-day.

Mr. TABER. If he immediately enters into a contract, it is to be not in accordance with existing law but in violation of existing law.

Mr. SCHAFER. And what does the gentleman mean by the word "immediately"?

Mr. BEGG. I am not surprised that the gentleman does not know what the word "immediately" means, but I will tell him this: It means at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. SCHAFER. That does not mean anything.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. The Chair thinks there can be no question that the proviso suggested in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], which reads as follows:

Provided further, That the Navy Department is directed to proceed at once to enter into contract for such rigid airships with the most favorable bidder in accordance with the provision of existing law—

Is itself legislation, but it is offered as an amendment to a proviso reading as follows:

Provided, That the contract for such rigid airships shall (a) reserve to the Government the right of cancellation of the construction of the second airship if changed circumstances, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, shall suggest that course as being in the best interests of the Government, such right of cancellation to continue until the first airship shall have been tested in flight and accepted, and (b) provide that in the event of such cancellation the total cost of the first airship and all payments under and expenses incident to the cancellation of the contract for the second airship shall not exceed $5,500,000.

The Chair would inquire whether anyone has the authorization for the building of the two airships?

Mr. BEGG. It is in Public Act 422, Sixty-ninth Congress, passed in June, 1926, which I am glad to hand to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair finds that paragraph 1 of section 2 of "An act to authorize the construction and procurement of aircraft and aircraft equipment in the Navy and Marine Corps, and to adjust and define the status of operating personnel in connection therewith," approved June 24, 1926, being Public Act No. 422 of the Sixty-ninth Congress, provides as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Two rigid airships of a type suitable for use as adjuncts to the fleet and of approximately 6,000,000 cubic feet volume each at a total cost not to exceed $8,000,000 for both ships, construction of one to be undertaken as soon as practicable and prior to July 1, 1928: Provided, That the two airships herein authorized shall be constructed in the United States: Provided further, That one or both of said airships shall be constructed either under contract similar to contracts covering the construction of other vessels for the Navy, or by the Navy Department, as the Secretary of the Navy may deem to be in the best interests of the Government.

It seems to the Chair that the proviso already in the bill to which no point of order has been made is clearly legislation, and goes even further than the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], and that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] only in a very small particular, with reference to the requirement for immediate letting of contracts, differs from existing law, and in fact provides that even such letting shall be in accordance with the provision of existing law. The amendment is clearly germane to the proviso already in the bill, which was itself subject to a point of order as legislation on an appropriation bill, and the amendment does not enlarge the scope of that proviso. (Hinds' Precedents IV, 3836, 3837, 3862.) The Chair, therefore, thinks that the amendment is in order, and overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I did not want to step ahead of those speaking for the amendment, but I had understood one or two were going to speak for it. I prefer to wait and hear what they have to say. Yet if they do not care to defend the amendment, I shall want to oppose it.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, the reason I did not want to ask for recognition is because I thought my colleague from Ohio [Mr. MURPHY] wanted to speak. I want to say a word in behalf of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that courtesy might lose control of the floor.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I call attention to the specific language of the amendment. It merely directs the Navy Department to proceed at once to enter into a contract with the most favorable bidders.

Now, if that is not the Ohio concern and is the New Jersey concern, all well and good; it is of no material difference to me at all. Let us assume that my good friend from New York [Mr. TABER] is correct in his statement that the design bids were not technically legal and that it would be necessary to readvertise them. There is not a thing in my amendment that will prevent that.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman admit that his amendment does not mean anything at all?

Mr. BEGG. No; I do not admit it. It is simply an intimation to the Navy Department that this House wants them to proceed at once to contract for a dirigible. If the Navy Department thinks that the right and proper thing to do is to readvertise for designs, then they have perfect authority to do that with this amendment in the bill, and there is nothing to prevent their doing that. I will read the amendment again.

Mr. BUTLER. Read it slowly.

Mr. BEGG. I will. I read:

Provided further, That the Navy Department is directed to proceed at once to enter into contract for such rigid airships with the most favorable bidder in accordance with the provisions of existing law.

If the Navy Department decides that the first step is to advertise for a new set of designs, they have the right to do that under this provision. There is no question to my mind about it. If they did otherwise they would be violating the law. This expressly says, "in accordance with the provisions of existing law."

I will say frankly that the only purpose I have in submitting this amendment is to serve notice on the Navy Department that we expect action, and do not expect to come back here next fall and find some monkey wrench thrown into the machinery.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman desires to have these airships built, as the gentleman says, at once?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Do you not think that June 30 of this year is pretty nearly at once?

Mr. BEGG. Certainly.

Mr. LINTHICUM. That is according to law.

Mr. BEGG. Certainly. If they have not begun action at that time they have no authority to begin.

Mr. LINTHICUM. This has not passed the Senate yet.

Mr. BEGG. Then this will do no damage. The only purpose of this amendment is to let the Navy Department know whether or not this House is in earnest and wants early action on these dirigibles. It is for the House to decide.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we can not now arrange to close the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would like three minutes in opposition.

Mr. MURPHY. I want to reserve five minutes. I may not use that time.

Mr. FRENCH. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that further debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to 20 minutes, to be divided as follows——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that it can not be divided.

Mr. FRENCH. Then I will say, Mr. Chairman, that those who have indicated their desire for time are the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], three minutes; the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MURPHY], five minutes; the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], seven minutes, and I want some time myself.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. That would not give the gentleman any.

Mr. FRENCH. Then 25 minutes is suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize gentlemen when they get on their feet. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 25 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Chair to stop me in three minutes.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we all know that our good friend from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] does not introduce an amendment which is meaningless. His record in the House will not bear out anything like that. He is too intelligent a legislator to put in an amendment which is so harmless and so meaningless as he would indicate.

The whole purpose of the authorization for these airships was experimental, and that is why the law provided for two ships and provided for the separation of the total funds authorized. That is why the original law giving authority for these two ships provided that contracts should be awarded within a certain time, to wit, July 1, 1928. The present wording of the proviso in the appropriation bill, I believe, extends the time.

But the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] would require an award to be made for both ships at once. The amendment carries the words "at once." Under the present and existing conditions the concern in Ohio is the only one in a position to bid immediately. It would be in a position to receive the contracts on two ships, to the exclusion of everyone else.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Suppose it is decided that they have no bids? You can not award a contract without a bid.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If Ohio had no bid, the gentleman would not be on his feet at this time.

Mr. BEGG. They have two.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then you get them in.

Mr. BEGG. Does the gentleman from New York want us to understand he is opposed to the construction here?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No.

Mr. BEGG. Do you want to delay it?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No. I would like to see the Ohio concern get one and another firm get the other contract, because in the present development of the art we need to experiment. We want the best that each firm can produce.

Mr. BEGG. Then let us do it right away.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then will the gentleman amend his amendment and eliminate the plural?

Mr. BEGG. I am willing.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If you did that, your amendment would be harmless. If you take out the plural, your amendment is innocent. But to compel the department to award the contract at once for two ships is detrimental to the proper development of lighter-than-air ships.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it so happens that I was one member of the committee that favored the building last year of one lighter-than-air ship. I now favor the building of such ships. The committee feels and we are glad to report that the Secretary of the Navy agrees with us that since we are now appropriating for two airships instead of one, that new bids should be called for, especially since no one has offered to build the one ship previously appropriated for within the limit of cost.

What are the facts? The House fixed the limit of cost for one at $4,500,000. The Navy undertook to ask for bids on designs, and if you will read the hearings in connection with the law you will find that the Goodyear Co. did not comply with the law in that they failed to state a price for the design submitted. The purpose of the law was to require that when the design was submitted a price should be stated at which the Government might buy the design, so that the Government might have the option to buy the design if it desired to do so and ask for competitive bids thereon. They refused to sell the design or to fix any price therefor, but said in substance: "We will charge nothing for it if we are given the contract." Of course, that was not in compliance with the law and the committee, with such information before it, felt it was but fair that since we are now appropriating for two ships instead of one that bids should be again called for. The hearings disclose that another company, well financed, desires to submit a bid for one ship or both, the first ship to cost not more than $4,000,000.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] very properly said that if this appropriation carried for 1929 to build two airships does not itself extend the authorization, that the gentleman from Ohio should have limited his amendment to the building of one ship if he simply wishes to comply with the strict letter of the law. The language carried in the bill unquestionably authorizes the Navy Department to contract for two ships during the fiscal year 1929.

Then why should the department be required to let a contract at once involving $4,000,000 or $8,000,000, when time is required to prepare and submit designs? The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] could have had but one thing in mind in offering his amendment, namely, to require the Navy Department to award the contract to the company that had already submitted an acceptable design and might resubmit at once such design when bids were called for. The words at once might preclude a new bidder from preparing and submitting designs.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Do I understand it is left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy to let these contracts to the lowest bidder, or is there anything that would shut out any other people who wanted to bid?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. There is nothing in the language carried to shut out anyone from bidding, and the Secretary, under the language carried, will call for bids. Members of the committee are not unfriendly to the Goodyear Co., but felt that the House was entitled to know that in submitting their design, to which reference has been made, the law was not complied with.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. MURPHY. Is it not a fact that for two years those who are contemplating the building of dirigibles have had information about this matter, and is it not a fact that for more than a year definite plans have been in existence?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. In reply to the gentleman from Ohio, I will say this, that perhaps more interest has been manifested in dirigibles in the last few months than ever before, largely because two large airships are nearing completion in Great Britain and one in Germany.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes and not to be taken out of the 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not entertain a motion for time outside of the 25 minutes. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman permit a very brief question?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman said my amendment should apply to only one dirigible, but that is not necessary at all, because there is a cancellation clause in your own bill which will protect the Government.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. This is a complete answer to the gentleman's statement. The legislative committee gave the Navy Department authority not only to let a contract for these ships, but authorized the Navy to build one or both ships, if it so elected; and it so happens that the testimony shows that the Navy is prepared to build one ship, and within limit of cost fixed in the last appropriation bill, to wit, $4,500,000. Your amendment might cut off the right of the Navy Department to build—since it provides that contract for two ships must be let at once.

Mr. BEGG. But the cancellation provision in the bill would permit them to cancel the other.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Certainly you can.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. That has been an important matter with the committee and you will note we have continued the right to cancel after the test and acceptance of the first ship. We do not desire to unduly hasten the completion of the ships. We want the benefit of whatever the art has to offer. Perhaps Mr. Wilder and his company, just now interesting themselves in the building of lighter-than-air ships may do what the Goodyear Co. has done, bring over foreign talent with experience in designing and building this type of ship, and some time must be allowed for preparing and submitting designs.

Why undue hurry? Why write into the bill something that may raise a legal question? I submit that the bill as presented by the committee protects the rights of the Government and should not be changed. It is fair to the Goodyear Co., and fair to every other bidder and seeks not to discriminate in favor of or against anyone.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Will my friend put me right about the question of the statute of limitations? I do not want to go against the gentleman, as the gentleman very well knows; but what about the statute of limitations? Can we write something in here extending the statute for six months?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Unquestionably, and the gentleman can offer such an amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. That would be a change of law.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The Chairman has just held that since this section was subject to a point of order, he will permit other amendments changing the law. I will say to my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the language carrying the appropriation for two ships clearly extends the authorization through the fiscal year 1929.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the training I have received here in the last few years has taught me to always be regular and stay with my committee. I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and I generally support them, but I am just a little bit confused this afternoon as I pick up this report and I see some one responsible for holding up the building of the dirigibles by this Government.

I see a telegram printed in this report, starting with the word "rumored" and signed by the chairman of this subcommittee, inviting at the eleventh hour, after two years of notice to those who build these ships that the Government is contemplating the building of such ships, and one year after we had definite and specific plans for the building of the ships, and 30 bidders had signified a desire to serve the Government, and yet on a rumor from some one, which the chairman of this subcommittee has not yet disclosed, the program for the building of the dirigibles is to be held up unless the amendment offered by my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio, carries.

I ask the gentlemen of this House to believe in the things that have been told you by that talented man from the great State of Texas [Mr. LANHAM], who knows more about dirigibles perhaps than all the rest of us put together. He told you what they could do. He told you what they have done, and yet in this report the man who is holding up and attracting and getting the attention of this great committee to the extent that they come in here with a special report of a special hearing, is a man who says that it will be 20 years before the dirigible will be practicable; yet within the last 40 minutes a gentleman who knows what he talks about tells the story of the cruises made by dirigibles; and at the eleventh hour, on a mere rumor, the chairman of this subcommittee holds a special hearing to throw sand in the machinery. This is why I am parting from you to-day.

I believe in regularity, and I am going to be regular; but I want the gentleman and his committee to tell this House why at the eleventh hour, after two years, you come in here with a special hearing and a special report to stop, if you please, the building of a dirigible.

I do not care who builds these flying machines. I do not care whether Ohio or New Jersey gets them, but Ohio is equipped at this time to go through with them. Ohio had faith in the Congress of the United States, and they prepared to do the things which the Government expected to do, and yet at the eleventh hour, on the strength of a mere rumor, the whole program is to be held up. I want the chairman of this subcommittee to tell the House where the rumor came from, who brought it to him, and what it is. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the House is now in position to make a very grave mistake and a mistake that if it be made will reflect, I think, unfortunately upon the Congress, upon its good judgment, and will indicate that there are some Members of the Congress who are willing at this time to take snap judgment and to close up a contract upon the basis of an offer of designs that was not in proper and legal form at the time when bids and designs were called for and upon bids that were invited upon the basis of one ship actually appropriated for instead of two.

The proposition which your committee brings to you is this: If the Congress shall provide money for the construction of two ships instead of one, that new bids shall be called for and new designs submitted. There may be many concerns willing to offer bids with the prospect of building two ships which last year would not compete when only one ship was in prospect.

Does any gentleman in the House say that there is anything fundamentally wrong in this? Is there any gentleman here who is willing to assume the responsibility of saying that your Government shall enter into a contract on the basis of estimates called for and bids submitted one year ago for one ship when all your committee wants to do now is to throw the thing wide open to the citizenship of America and say that you may call now for new bids—aye, that you must call for new bids—so that everyone who offered bids before and everyone who may be in position to offer bids now may be placed on an equal footing?

Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Not now. Let me mention one or two things to which reference has been made.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for a question right on that point?

Mr. FRENCH. Not now. When I am through if I shall have the time I shall be pleased to yield.

Mr. BEGG. It is a very brief question.

Mr. FRENCH. Not now. Reference has been made to the matter of citizenship of the American Brown-Boveri Electric Corporation. Their representative came before us at our request. The matter was brought to our attention through the kindness of one of the Members of the Congress, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

When Mr. BACON advised us that that company as long ago as last December had indicated to the department, or to Assistant Secretary Warner, of the department, that it would like to offer a bid, we felt that we could do nothing that would be so fair to this Congress and the country as to call the representatives of that company before us and ask whether or not the company is or would be prepared to offer bids.

Let me go further. Reference has been made to the citizenship of owners of the company. Your committee went into that question. We asked Mr. Wilder to advise the committee of its financial condition, the ownership of its securities, and the names of its directors. In response to a question asked by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] as to the citizenship of the directors and officers of the organization, Mr. Wilder replied that the statement which he filed with the committee showing the affairs of the company did not indicate citizenship of his associates, but that their citizenship is 100 per cent American.

Again on page 8 of the hearings in response to a question by myself as to foreign capital being invested in this company, Mr. Wilder replied that the American Brown-Boveri Co. was entirely financed in America and there was no money put into it by the Swiss concern. But after all, the matter of citizenship and ownership of stock of concerns that may engage in Government contracts is one that by law is placed upon the administration officers. Your committee went into the question out of abundant caution, and that we might advise the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. I wish to take the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho is recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I shall yield to the gentleman now.

Mr. BEGG. Suppose in just a year from now some other concern as responsible as the Brown-Boveri Co. comes and wants to put in a bid, and says that they will do it for $25,000,000 less. Would the gentleman then be in favor of postponing it six months to give them a chance?

Mr. FRENCH. If the Congress should enact a law providing for three dirigibles or four dirigibles instead of two, then most assuredly I would say new bids should be called for.

Mr. BEGG. In other words, an indefinite postponement.

Mr. FRENCH. No; the former bids were offered when one airship only was called for.

Mr. BEGG. The same thing was implied in the other bids.

Mr. FRENCH. No; not implied; it was specifically provided in the law that only one ship was appropriated for.

Now, gentlemen, what does this amendment do? The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, if it means anything, means that you are attempting to require the Secretary of the Navy to enter into a contract to build two lighter-than-air ships now and keep out any other possible competition. The proposition is an entirely different proposition from what it would be if we were dealing as individuals with something that concerned ourselves alone.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Let me finish. If I am about to have a suit of clothes made by Jones & Co., and this company wants to charge me $100 for the suit that Brown & Co., tailors, are willing to make for $75, I have a right to turn down Brown & Co. and have my suit made by the tailors who are my friends, even though I am charged $25 more. That is my personal affair. But the Congress does not have that right when it comes to business of the Government. When one concern by its bid is willing to build a ship at a certain figure, and another concern of equal responsibility comes in and says it would like to offer to build the same type of ship for the United States at a less figure, this Congress—trustees of this country in a sense—are not privileged to say, "You shall not bid; we like the first firm, and we are going to let it build the ship." It is our duty to call for bids and see what facts will be disclosed. Now I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MURPHY. The gentleman from Idaho wants to be fair, and he can not find any fault with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] because his amendment does not refuse this company the right to compete with the Ohio concern. What we want is an open, fair chance with those who have had the energy and ability to prepare for this. All we want is a fair chance, and the amendment offered by my colleague does not shut out competition.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio means anything, it means the end of competition. That is all it does mean. Unless it means that, it means absolutely nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BEGG) there were 23 ayes and 78 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUTLER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUTLER. Is all speech making shut off on this paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the agreement no further debate on this paragraph or any amendment thereto is in order, and there are no other amendments to the paragraph.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to move to strike out a couple of words so that I could ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been closed upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. ANDREW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto has been closed.

Mr. BUTLER. And I voted for that, and I am not kicking against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not entertain a request for unanimous consent in violation of the agreement made by the House.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the time was fixed by unanimous consent in committee and not by the House. Can not the same committee by unanimous consent undo a former agreement? I submit that as a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that he is not privileged to entertain a unanimous-consent request in violation of an agreement already made. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL ACADEMY

Pay, Naval Academy: Pay for professors and others, Naval Academy: Pay of professors and instructors, including one professor as librarian, $259,000: Provided, That not more than $36,500 shall be paid for masters and instructors in swordmanship and physical training;

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. My purpose in doing that is to go backward, like a crab. Do I understand that with the passage of this bill, if it should become a law, the time limit imposed by statute in which one of these dirigibles will be cut off after July 3 has been removed, and this will be in compliance with the law, and that these two ships may be built and the responsibility for the construction, whether early or late, rests entirely with the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. FRENCH. My understanding is that this language, if enacted into law, will supersede the law fixing the time limit as of July 1 next, before which one lighter-than-air ship must be begun, and that it will extend authority beyond that time for the beginning of that ship.

Mr. BUTLER. I know that my friend will not object if I repeat the question I put to one of the best authorities I have ever known, and that is whether or not the passage of this law will toll the statute of limitations, so that both of these ships may be built by the Secretary of the Navy under contract even after July 1 next.

Mr. FRENCH. That is my understanding, and there is precedent for it. Submarines, for instance, carried in the 1916 program were appropriated for and laid down after the time limit of the original act had expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I am satisfied with that.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Current and miscellaneous expenses, Naval Academy: For text and reference books for use of instructors; stationery, blank books and forms, models, maps, and periodicals; apparatus and materials for instruction in physical training and athletics; expenses of lectures and entertainments, not exceeding $1,000, including pay and expenses of lecturer; chemicals, philosophical apparatus, and instruments, stores, machinery, tools, fittings, apparatus, and materials for instruction purposes, $72,800; for purchase, binding, and repair of books for the library (to be purchased in the open market on the written order of the superintendent), $5,000; for expenses of the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy, $1,400; for contingencies for the Superintendent of the Academy, to be expended in his discretion, not exceeding $4,000; for contingencies for the commandant of midshipmen, to be expended in his discretion, not exceeding $1,800; in all, $85,000, to be accounted for as one fund.

Maintenance and repairs, Naval Academy: For necessary repairs of public buildings, wharves, and walls inclosing the grounds of the Naval Academy, improvements, repairs, and fixtures; for books, periodicals, maps, models, and drawings; purchase and repair of fire engines, fire apparatus, and plants, machinery; purchase and maintenance of all horses and horse-drawn vehicles for use at the academy, including the maintenance, operation, and repair of three horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles to be used only for official purposes; seeds and plants; tools and repairs of the same; stationery; furniture for Government buildings and offices at the academy, including furniture for midshipmen's rooms; coal and other fuels; candles, oil, and gas; attendance on light and power plants; cleaning and clearing up station and care of buildings; attendance on fires, lights, fire engines, fire apparatus, and plants, and telephone, telegraph, and clock systems; incidental labor; advertising, water tax, postage, telephones, telegrams, tolls, and ferriage; flags and awnings; packing boxes; fuel for heating and lighting bandsmen's quarters; pay of inspectors and draftsmen; music and astronomical instruments; and for pay of employees on leave, $1,075,000.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, the bill now being considered provides for an appropriation and expenditure during the coming fiscal year of $369,190,737 for the maintenance of our Navy Department. Congress recently passed an Army appropriation bill calling for the expenditure of $315,566,532 during the coming fiscal year for military purposes. Combining these appropriations, we have a grand total of $684,757,269, which is the sum the American people will pay for naval and military purposes during the coming fiscal year; a sum grossly excessive and obviously wasteful. With this sum we could construct flood-control and flood-prevention works that would protect the basins of practically every river in the United States from destructive overflows.

Since the inauguration of President Harding, including sums voted for 1929, approximately $3,000,000,000 have been expended on our Navy Department, or on an average of $1,000,000 each day. In the same period we have expended about $3,000,000,000 on our War Department, or approximately $1,000,000 per day. And in the aggregate our expenditures for military and naval purposes during the Harding-Coolidge administrations have been at the rate of about $2,000,000 per day. I can not escape the conviction that we are spending entirely too much money on naval and military affairs. The five or six billion dollars expended for military and naval activities would have brought far better and more permanent results if such expenditures had been for internal improvements, for development of our rivers and harbors, for highways, for public buildings, for farm relief, and for flood control.

If I had my way, instead of spending this $684,000,000 for naval and military purposes, I would spend the major part of this enormous sum to finance the rehabilitation of agriculture and for the construction of works for the control and prevention of ruinous floods in all the principal river basins in the United States. That would be an investment that would return immense dividends in reclaimed lands, happy homes, prosperous people, improved social conditions, thriving cities and villages; and which would tremendously increase our national wealth.

It is shortsighted policy to spend nearly three-quarters of a billion dollars annually on naval and military affairs while destructive floods ravish our fairest and most productive valleys and carry poverty and desolation into a million homes. It is a stupid policy to sit complacently and allow millions of dollars worth of property to be swept away by these periodical and rapidly recurring floods. It is supreme folly for us to permit ruthless floods to run wild and transform our richest agricultural lands into a trackless wilderness and pestilential swamp. Why not spend less money on battleships and military and naval armaments and more on the conservation of our natural resources and in the protection of our people from the destructive forces of nature?

The people of the Middle West, irrespective of their political affiliations, are vitally interested in the immediate adoption of a comprehensive program by the Federal Government for the control and prevention of destructive floods in the valleys of the Mississippi River and its tributaries. Largely in the last two generations the rich basins of the Mississippi and its tributaries have been reclaimed from swamp and wilderness, developed, and brought to a marvelous state of productivity. Men of brawn, brains, courage, and vision went into these uninviting regions, felled the forests, built highways, constructed levees and drainage ditches, and reared cities, villages, and attractive farm homes, transforming swamp and wilderness into one of the most highly productive, desirable, progressive, and valuable agricultural areas in the world.

This amazing transition from wilderness to gardens, orchards, and highly cultivated fields was not accomplished by the waving of a magic wand over pestilential swamp and unproductive waste, but by unremitting toil, persevering patience, and years of tireless industry and sacrificial efforts. Having unbounded confidence in the future of this potentially rich region, the landowners uncomplainingly assumed an exceedingly heavy burden of taxation, looking to the future for reimbursement. They mortgaged their lands to build homes and other improvements, to hasten the development of this fertile district, and to transform it from quagmire, bog, fen, and marsh into a region of unrivaled beauty and productivity.

The courage of the people of southeast Missouri in their long fight against destructive floods has seldom been equaled and never surpassed in the long line of events that have marked the struggle of man to overcome the hostile and adverse forces of nature. Year after year ruinous floods swept down from mountains, valleys, uplands, and plains of the West, North, and East, destroying crops, livestock, levees, fences, buildings, roads, and farm property of every description. Year after year 31 States dumped their destructive flood waters into the lower basins of the Mississippi and its tributaries. Year after year 41 per cent of the area of the United States drained its surplus flood waters into the narrow neck of the Mississippi between Cape Girardeau, Mo., and the Gulf of Mexico, destroying levees and millions of dollars' worth of property and driving into bankruptcy hundreds of thousands of landowners along the Mississippi and its tributary streams.

While many other counties in Missouri suffered almost incalculable damages from flood waters, these periodical disasters fell with excessive violence on the landowners of nine southeast Missouri counties, namely, Butler, Cape Girardeau, Dunklin, Mississippi, New Madrid, Pemiscot, Ripley, Scott, and Stoddard. In the 1927 flood, according to the Mississippi River Flood Control Association, the total damage in these nine counties was $7,691,265.

In Butler County 258 buildings were destroyed or seriously damaged, the total loss in that county being $271,300.

In Cape Girardeau County the damage was comparatively small, being estimated at $36,500.

In Dunklin County 479 houses, stores, gins, barns, and other buildings were destroyed or seriously damaged, the total property damage in that county having reached the enormous sum of $3,078,910.

In Mississippi County 410 buildings were destroyed or substantially damaged, the total property damage in that county being $515,500.

In New Madrid County 1,294 buildings were destroyed or seriously damaged, and the total property loss in that county was $802,078.

In Pemiscot County many houses, stores, barns, gins, and other buildings were destroyed or seriously damaged, and the loss in that county was fixed at $258,875.

In Ripley County the damage was confined largely to loss of rents on lands not cultivated by reason of overflow and to injuries to growing crops. In this county the loss was comparatively small, being estimated at $20,000.

In Scott County the property damage amounted to $254,650.

In Stoddard County the property damage was $1,985,350, or approximately $2,000,000.

In the nine southeast Missouri counties I have mentioned, 310,000 acres of highly productive farming land were flooded and farm property of every kind and character completely destroyed or substantially damaged.

My colleague from Missouri [Mr. FULBRIGHT], who ably represents the fourteenth district in Congress, informs me that these statistics are very conservative and do not overestimate the loss and damage that came to these nine southeast Missouri counties as a result of the 1927 flood.

As Mr. FULBRIGHT has first-hand information as to local conditions and has made a special study of the problem of flood control and flood prevention, particularly with reference to southeast Missouri, and as he is an aggressive champion of flood-control legislation and has labored tirelessly to awaken Congress to a realization of the importance of flood-control legislation by the Federal Government, I feel absolutely safe in accepting his conclusions as to conditions in southeast Missouri and as to the character of legislation that will be most beneficial to the people of southeast Missouri.

In this connection, I desire to say in passing that while my colleague from the thirteenth Missouri district, Mr. WILLIAMS, is serving his first term, I have found him well informed in reference to all legislative problems, and especially familiar with conditions in southeast Missouri as they relate to flood control legislation. He and his colleague from the fourteenth district are supporting that brand of flood prevention legislation that will bring the best results to the people of their respective districts. I cheerfully acknowledge my obligation to them for the first-hand information as to the conditions in southeast Missouri, and as to the plan of flood control that will best protect the interests of that rich yet flood-ridden portion of our State.

Now, since the development of southeast Missouri began floods from the great Mississippi watershed have periodically ravished southeast Missouri, leaving desolation in their paths. But with commendable courage and fortitude, these stricken people, after each flood, returned to their ruined homes and "commenced life over again." They have done everything that is humanly possible for them to do to win this fight against the flood waters from 31 States. They have taxed themselves unmercifully to protect themselves from the deluge that the people of 31 States are periodically dumping on them.

The people in the Delta of the Mississippi and tributary streams between Cape Girardeau and the Gulf of Mexico, in their battle against these calamitous visitations of outlaw floods, have expended approximately $300,000,000 in building levees and other flood-control works. Is this not convincing evidence of their courage, confidence, and good faith?

As a result of one ruinous overflow quickly following another, the resources of the people of southeast Missouri have been practically exhausted. Their present capacity to pay has been almost if not completely destroyed, the great flood of 1927 having wiped out the earnings which these people had been a lifetime in accumulating.

The victims of repeated overflows, the people of southeast Missouri are standing with their backs to the wall, desperately fighting to save a little "nest egg" out of the wreck of their former fortunes. They are the victims of conditions over which they have had no control and for which they are not responsible, but which the United States Government could and should have avoided by the enactment of a comprehensive legislative program for the control and prevention of destructive floods.

One of the most important questions before Congress and the American people is whether or not the Federal Government will continue to stand idly by and permit 31 States to dump their uncontrolled, unharnessed, and destructive flood waters on southeast Missouri and similar areas along the lower Mississippi.

Flood control and flood prevention are national, not State or local problems. The burden of preventing these periodical disasters is a load that should properly be borne by the Federal Government, and no part of it should be imposed on the States, counties, local communities, or landowners. I am opposed to all flood control bills that require the States, counties, local communities, or landowners to bear any part of the expense incident to the control of these outlaw floods that the Federal Government has heretofore negligently and unwisely permitted to run at large, unharnessed, unrestrained, and uncontrolled, to the enormous destruction of property and wastage of individual and national wealth.

The people of southeast Missouri, because of the tremendous tax burdens assumed by them in order to reclaim and develop this fertile region, and as a result of successive destructive overflows, are not now financially able to assume any part of the expense necessary to carry out this flood-control program, and there is no sound reason why the State of Missouri, the counties, the cities, the drainage districts, or landowners should bear any part of this burden.

Indeed the landowners in many of the drainage and levee districts in southeast Missouri have suffered so seriously as a result of recurring and ruinous floods, that they are not financially able to pay their drainage and general taxes or meet the interest on their farm indebtedness. Unless the National Government does its duty and does it quickly, the several hundred thousand landowners in this vast region will be broken on the rocks of insolvency and face financial ruin.

Moreover, I believe that any flood control bill Congress enacts, should carry a definite provision for the early protection from the flood waters of tributary streams. In some of the counties in southeast Missouri and other portions of that State, much of the damage results from overflows from tributary streams, caused often by backwater from the Mississippi, or because the flood stage in the Mississippi is so high that these tributary streams can not speedily discharge their flood waters into the Mississippi. Several counties in southeast Missouri are vitally interested in having the flood-control legislation definitely provide, either now or in the near future, for protection from floods from tributary streams, in addition to affording protection from the flood waters of the Mississippi. From a careful examination of this question I am convinced that the people of these counties, and other counties similarly affected, are entitled to protection from floods from these tributary streams, and provision to that effect should be incorporated in any flood control bill enacted by Congress.

By this I mean, that the valleys of the Missouri, Grand, Chariton, Osage, Gasconade, St. Francis, Black, and other tributaries of the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers should be included in a comprehensive flood-prevention program of the United States Government, and these smaller basins ultimately protected from destructive overflows. The people in the valleys of the Grand and Chariton Rivers in the district I have the honor to represent, have for years suffered serious damages and many of them are now facing bankruptcy because of periodical overflows from these turbulent streams. Sooner or later the American people will awaken to a realization of the economic waste that annually results from ruthless overflow water from wild, unharnessed streams, and adopt methods that will arrest this needless destruction of individual and national wealth. Why longer delay this important task? Let's go. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak on the question of the Naval Academy merely to express a few views in reference to that great institution. It was my pleasure during the last year to serve on the Board of Visitors with Senator HOWELL, of Nebraska, and Senator TRAMMELL, of Florida, Members of the Senate, and as Members of this House, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ACKERMAN], the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUAYLE], the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL]; Senator TRAMMELL, of Florida, was made chairman, but owing to illness was not able to remain. We also had on the board Capt. William B. Franklin, a graduate of the academy; Stephen G. Goldthwaite; Ogden Reid, a great business man, a son of the late Whitelaw Reid; Harry H. Williams; and last but certainly not least that great railroad president, Daniel Willard, of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. These men attended those sessions and visited every part of that great institution.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Certainly.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I do not know whether the gentleman was at the meeting of the board when we signed that report. But the gentleman will remember that when I signed the report I especially reserved the right of further investigating the need of five cadets from each district.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not know what reservation the gentleman from Iowa made. How does the gentleman from Iowa know that I am going to speak on the question of five cadets?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I know the gentleman had some object in reading the names of the visitors there, among which was my own.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I desired to read the gentleman's name because of his well-known ability and judgment, and besides he has great influence in this House [applause]; and in signing this report which recommends five students for the Naval Academy I took it as his best conclusion on this proposition.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The only object I had in interrupting the gentleman was to remind him of what I said on the occasion of signing the report.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will not go further into that. The gentleman will agree with me that we made an exhaustive examination of the institution.

The Board of Visitors, consisting, as I have said, of men familiar with Army and Navy matters, men of distinction in the business and professional world, Members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives in close touch with legislation regarding governmental activities, made an exhaustive examination of conditions at the Naval Academy.

As a preamble to our report we have taken from the annual register that for which the Naval Academy stands, to wit:

THE MISSION

To mold the material received into educated gentlemen, thoroughly indoctrinated with honor, uprightness, and truth, with practical rather than academic minds, with thorough loyalty to country, with a groundwork of educational fundamentals upon which experience afloat may build the finished naval officer, capable of upholding, whenever and wherever may be necessary, the honor of the United States, and withal giving due consideration that healthy minds in healthy bodies are necessities for the fulfillment of the individual missions of the graduates; * * *.

We find the Naval Academy is efficiently performing the functions for which it was established and which it has been successfully performing for the past 80 years. The main object of the Naval Academy is to provide young men with an education which will fit them to become skillful, efficient, and worthy officers of the United States Navy. There must be certain readjustments which are being made, due to additional work of technical character, which the academy has been compelled to take up in recent years because of great inventions such as the submarine, aviation, radio, fire control, and so forth.

The board gave a very lengthy discussion and much consideration to the question of the number of students to be appointed to the institution. The report of the committee reads as follows:

NUMBER OF APPOINTMENTS

At the present time there is an attendance of midshipmen at the Naval Academy of about 1,600. The plant is sufficiently large and complete to take care of 2,400 men with only a relatively small increased expenditure for instructors and salaries of midshipmen. Since an increased attendance would enable more careful selection of final graduates, and such for whom vacancies in the line or staff of the Navy did not exist and who would be returned to civil life would form a valuable addition to the Navy in time of need, it would seem the part of wisdom that annual appropriations should be made sufficient to maintain the regiment of midshipmen at the maximum now provided by law, the status of each graduate to be that of a temporary ensign until after a two years' satisfactory service at sea, when a permanent commission shall be issued.

If you will compare this recommendation of the Board of Visitors with the report accompanying this bill, H. R. 12286, on page 7 of the report, you will find that the committee refers to the number of students at the academy as "potential total," which it says approximates 1,710, whereas, in fact, there are not 1,710 students at the academy, but only about 1,600, because of various reasons, such as the nonappointment of students by certain Members of the House and Senate, and of resignations, and so forth, so that while giving us an additional appointment at the expense of $255,990 in this bill, which when in full operation would be $519,167, which is supposed to give a student body of 2,112, which is also "potential," we shall in fact have only a student body of about 2,000 midshipmen.

I shall not at this time introduce an amendment to increase the number to five for each Member of Congress, including Delegates, but I am thoroughly of the opinion and in hearty accord with the recommendation of the Board of Visitors that we should have that number at all times. This would probably amount to about the capacity of the school, which is 2,400, and for which adequate provision has been made as to buildings and equipment.

This number of 2,400, or 5 to each Member of Congress, including delegates, would give a larger number from which to select those necessary to man our ships. I am of the opinion that it will require all the graduates when our full naval program has been evolved. The committee itself admits the fact that even with this full quota we will not be able to provide for the Navy and the aviation section thereof, but that men must be secured from other schools in order that we may fill our aviation quota. The question I wish to have answered is why should we take men from other schools when here is this great institution belonging to the National Government splendidly equipped and manned to provide the large number of graduates we require? Even though we should graduate more students than there are places available for them, will they not be of great benefit as a reserve force in the event of war? Will they not also be trained in governmental matters which will make them better citizens and better able to cope with the business world as well as disciplined upstanding men of their communities?

This Government of ours stands firmly for the education of its citizens, and I know of no way by which we can spend money to better advantage than the education of students in the two great governmental schools, the Naval Academy at Annapolis and the Military Academy at West Point. They should at all times be utilized to their full capacity. I sincerely trust that the committee will see proper in the next appropriation bill to provide the five appointments each as recommended by the Board of Visitors. [Applause.]

NEW AUDITORIUM

There is now no suitable auditorium where the entire regiment of midshipmen can be assembled. It seems most advisable that a building should be erected capable of seating the entire student body.

While at Annapolis the board was particularly impressed with the fact that there was no suitable auditorium of sufficient capacity to accommodate all the student body. This the board thought unfortunate, because it is on many occasions advantageous to have the entire regiment of midshipmen present.

NEW BOATHOUSE

The boathouse, which has been in use for over 30 years, is inadequate, unsafe, insanitary, and is too great a fire risk for a building containing so much valuable equipment. It is not in keeping with the very fine buildings which compose the rest of the academy. We indorse the recommendation of previous boards that a suitable boathouse be built.

We were much interested in the unsightly antiquity and insecure conditions of the boathouse. This does not compare with anything on the academy grounds, either in looks or accommodations; it is merely an old frame structure, or if my recollection serves me correctly, I think it is composed of two old structures. If it should catch fire, I do not see how the valuable equipment consisting of thousands of dollars worth of property could possibly be saved; certainly not without great dexterity and risk of life. Of all the things which should receive our attention as to building, certainly this boathouse is the most important.

I sincerely trust this committee will grant us the opportunity to correct this situation by appropriating a sufficient sum to construct a substantial, sightly, and adequate boathouse in which to store this valuable equipment. [Applause.]

REBUILDING SEA WALL

We also recommend the rebuilding of the sea wall alongside the power plant and shop building, as the original sea wall has almost entirely disappeared and the buildings are in imminent danger. This project is urgent and necessary.

The reconstruction of the sea wall mentioned, it seems to me is of urgent necessity; it is much cheaper to do this than to risk injury to the power plant and shop building at this location.

I know of no better language to express our approval of the administration of the Naval Academy and of the general satisfaction which we found to exist than that used by the Board of Governors, as follows:

GENERAL COMMENT

The board desires to commend Rear Admiral L. M. Nulton and his able staff of assistants for the highly satisfactory manner in which the affairs of the Naval Academy are being conducted. We also desire to comment on the excellent appearance of the regiment of midshipmen, their neatness, smartness, bearing, and morale, which reflect great honor upon all the officers attached to the academy.

The board desires to express its hearty thanks to its secretary, Commander Edwin A. Wolleson, United States Navy, and to its assistant secretary, Commander Clyde G. West, United States Navy, who were most courteous and efficient in assisting the board in its work.

[Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GAMBRILL: Page 37, after line 25, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.: Construction of boathouse, $250,000."

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am going to take only a few minutes of your time for the purpose of appealing for your very earnest consideration of this amendment which I have offered. The amendment is designed to provide a suitable and adequate boathouse for the use of the midshipmen at Annapolis in order to take the place of two old sheds which have been used for that purpose for 32 years past and which have served the purpose of a boathouse, but very inadequately so.

The Secretary of the Navy has informed the Committee on Appropriations that it would be useless to attempt any repairs to the present sheds, which are of wooden construction, and which are, of course, not in keeping or harmony with the fine, imposing buildings at the Naval Academy.

May I conclude my very few remarks by saying that the Board of Visitors in 1927 made this comment regarding the boathouse, which sums up this situation very adequately:

> The boathouse, which has been in use for over 30 years, is inadequate, unsafe, insanitary, and is too great fire risk for a building containing so much valuable equipment. It is not in keeping with the very fine buildings which compose the rest of the academy. We indorse the recommendation of previous boards that a suitable boathouse be built.

I hope that my amendment will receive the support of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

MARINE CORPS

PAY, MARINE CORPS

> Pay of officers, active list: For pay and allowances prescribed by law for all officers on the active list—pay and allowances, $3,618,043; subsistence allowance, $486,618; rental allowance, $658,246; in all, $4,762,907.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am simply making this motion for the purpose of trying to obtain a little information. After a very large force was sent to Nicaragua in the fall of 1926, I wrote the Secretary of the Navy asking what additional expense would be involved. I received from the Secretary, for whom I have high personal regard, a letter in which he said:

> Referring to the expense to which this Government is put on the coast and in the territory of Nicaragua, there is no added monetary expense because of the present employment of these naval forces, since the cost of their pay and provisions is already a fixed charge, and the amount of fuel consumed is probably about the same as would be used in the usual activities of the ships in cruising and training.

I thought he must be mistaken, because he mentioned in his letter that we had 13 vessels in the waters of Nicaragua, with 176 officers and 2,272 men. Of course, I understood that during the administration of Mr. Wilson, the administration of Mr. Harding, and the administration of Mr. Coolidge, up to the fall of 1926, there was very little expense due to our activities in Nicaragua, because the marines deemed necessary to maintain tranquil conditions there were only a very small number—I think never exceeding 200—but I could not but believe that the Secretary was in error in telling me that the large expedition of 1926 would not necessitate an unusual expenditure.

I find in the appropriation act of last December an item of $1,818,000 covering various items, one being the expenses of our activities in Nicaragua. I have been trying to ascertain what part of that total pertained to Nicaragua and what, if I can find out, it has really cost and is costing to conduct the Nicaraguan business; and if my friend the gentleman from Idaho, chairman of the subcommittee, can give me any information, I would like to have it.

I may say this: Nobody is going to put me in the position of denying that it is proper for our Government to protect American life and property whenever it is in actual peril, but I have not been able to find that any American resident of Nicaragua has been killed or injured.

Mr. ROMJUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. ROMJUE. I agree with what the gentleman has just said. I have made an inquiry myself and have never been able to find anybody who can report definitely any civilian American who has been killed in Nicaragua.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Have you found how many of our marines have been killed and injured?

Mr. ROMJUE. I made that inquiry of the department and am informed that 21 marines have been killed and 44 have been wounded.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In action?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes; and in addition to the 21 killed and 44 injured in action, 10 others have been killed through accidents for which the war was not responsible.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. To clarify what the gentleman from Missouri has just said, the 10 who were killed not as a result of combat were accidental deaths and not caused by natives of Nicaragua.

Mr. ROMJUE. No. They were accidental deaths, but there were 21 killed in combat and 44 injured.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I ascertained, when I was making some investigation early last year, that certain corporations, several of them engaged in the lumber business in Nicaragua, were appealing for protection.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. But not only have I not found that the life of any American civilian has been taken or endangered, but I have not found that there has been any such injury to property as we were told was imminent when the large expeditionary force was organized. Without any partisan feeling in this matter at all and with no purpose to criticize unfairly the administration, I have never ceased to regret that some sort of reason was found by the State Department for sending such a force to Nicaragua as Mr. Wilson, Mr. Harding, and Mr. Coolidge, up to a certain time, apparently never dreamed it was necessary to employ.

Now, the inquiry I am making of my friend is with reference to the expenditure to which our Government has been subjected on account of that course having been taken. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, the question that the gentleman asks as to the amount of added expenditures on account of the service of the marines in Nicaragua is one that your subcommittee is not able to answer at this time. A little later on we shall have the information. It was some months ago when the general supply bill for 1929 for the Navy was considered by the Bureau of the Budget, and at that time the situation was so uncertain that it was deemed desirable that all extra expenditures incurred be included in the next deficiency bill. That bill will follow along later in the session.

However, in response to a question that I asked along the general line, of probable deficiences for 1928, page 962 of the hearings, we were advised by General McCawley, of the Marine Corps, as follows:

> At the present time our books show a probable deficiency of about $2,750,000 in this year's appropriation.

That, of course, includes deficiencies for various purposes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Can the gentleman tell us how much of this amount must be charged to Nicaraguan service?

Mr. FRENCH. No; not at this time, though I have no doubt at all that to some extent there will be unlooked-for expenditures incurred by reason of all expeditionary forces. Ships must be used. To some extent additional equipment must be used. To some extent additional expenses must be incurred more than would occur with conditions running normally at the bases where the marine organizations would normally be stationed. I am sorry I must ask that further information be deferred until the deficiency committee may have the opportunity of going into the question.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pro forma amendment is exhausted.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures "$4,762,907" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,672,000."

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], in his usual pleasant and honest manner, gave us the reason why he could not furnish the information requested by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE]. I feared for a while that the gentleman would say that for stragetic and war reasons it would be incompatible with the public interest to give the information at this time. [Laughter.]

The fact remains, Mr. Chairman, that we have 3,500 armed marines down in Nicaragua; and while one can juggle and conceal figures in appropriations and put them in the regular supply bill or put them in the first or second deficiency bill, yet this expeditionary force down in Nicaragua is costing the people of the United States from $50,000 to $70,000 or $100,000 a day. We do not require an expert from the Navy Department or War Department to inform Congress it costs money to keep an army in the field. The lines of communication that must be established, the cost of local supplies, the quartering of troops, the transportation of troops within the zone of occupied territory, or whatever you may call it, cost money.

It was suggested a few days ago that the United States is down there at the invitation of the "good people" of Nicaragua. Yet the Congress of Nicaragua voted only a few days ago against any interference on the part of the United States in the control or supervision of their elections; and as Will Rogers says in his typical and certain fashion, the vote of the Congress does not count because the United States did not supervise that vote. [Laughter.]

I submit, gentlemen, that supervising this election no matter how it turns out will bring with it the necessity of keeping troops down there to carry out the results of the election. This is the weakness of the supervision.

It has been said in the course of the discussion on the floor of the House that all factions were agreed. If all factions are agreed, then I ask, in the name of common sense, why do we keep 3,500 troops down there? It is stated that one Sandino is protesting and that it is necessary to watch him. Well, he must be some man if it takes 3,500 marines to chase him and not be able to catch him when one reporter of the Nation went there and had an interview with him. [Laughter.]

Mr. ABERNETHY. Are they going to let Sandino vote when he comes to the polls?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I wonder. He will have about as much chance of voting as a colored man in the gentleman's State. [Laughter.]

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Some of them vote in our State—those who are educated. How do they handle it in New York?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We let them vote. I wish I had more of them in my district.

Mr. ABERNETHY. You can have all who are not educated in your district. I will turn some of mine over to the gentleman if he wants them. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I know there is no use of seeking to place a limitation on this appropriation. It is the honest belief of a good many Members that the presence of United States troops is necessary in Nicaragua. Only time will tell. But, Mr. Chairman, I say that what this Congress ought to do is to take the ideals and the pledges and the promises made by Charles E. Hughes at the Pan American Conference in Habana and translate them into legislation by recalling the troops we have in Nicaragua. [Applause.]

It seems paradoxical and inconsistent that to one part of Central America we send our diplomats who express ideals and offer expressions of friendship with assurances of noninterference in local matters to the people of Central America, while another department of the Government has its armed troops in a friendly sister republic.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay and allowances of the Marine Corps Reserve, (a) excluding transferred and assigned men, $150,000; (b) transferred men, $243,532; (c) assigned men, $87,500; in all, $481,032.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 39, line 9, strike out the figures "$87,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$65,000."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, the figures I insert represent the action taken by the committee. Somehow in preparing the bill for printing the figures of the Budget draft were used instead of the committee figures. We are carrying for assigned men $65,000, which will take care of 2,600 men.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct all totals in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct all totals in the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $8,370,000, to be accounted for as one fund.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARE: Page 43, line 14, after the word "Fund," strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and add the following: "Provided, That none of such amount shall be used in transporting troops or marines to and from marine barracks and other points except by the cheapest and most direct route."

Mr. FRENCH. I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for the purpose of affording some information to inquiries that were made a few moments ago relative to the unnecessary expense incurred in transporting troops to Nicaragua and other places, and with the hope of eliminating such an unnecessary waste of money. I have been advised that there is a growing practice in the Navy Department in recent years that, instead of transporting troops from the marine barracks at Parris Island, S. C., to other marine barracks by the customary method of Government transports or ships, they use the railroads to a much greater extent than formerly.

I am advised that a few weeks ago, when troops were being sent to Nicaragua that, instead of the Government transport stopping at the marine barracks at Parris Island, S. C., where there is one of the greatest natural harbors on the Atlantic coast, 700 or more marines were picked up from the marine barracks at this place and put on the railroad, carried around 100 miles or more, and then placed on a Government transport at a cost of $3 apiece, when, as a matter of fact, the transports following the Atlantic coast almost every day could have stopped at these barracks and picked them up and carried them wherever they were destined to go at a saving of approximately $2,000.

My understanding is that for the past two years not a soldier, not a marine, has been picked up and carried away or brought in to these barracks by a Government transport. They have all been transported by rail at an additional cost and expense to the Government.

The only reason that has been assigned as to why these transports do not stop at this point is that a few years ago it is alleged a Government transport got a little mud in the condenser. Yet, as I have already said, this is one of the greatest natural harbors on the Atlantic coast, or in the world, for that matter. It has a bar 600 yards wide, and the harbor adjoining Parris Island can accommodate not only the Navy of the United States but in addition can accommodate the combined navies of the earth and have room enough left for a submarine base.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What is the name of this port?

Mr. HARE. Port Royal Harbor, into which the first vessel sailed that landed white men in this country.

Mr. BUTLER. How much water did she draw?

Mr. HARE. Thirty feet at present. It has carried the Indiana and the Henderson, and, as a matter of fact, before the naval station was moved from Port Royal the entire Navy of the United States assembled in this harbor at one time and, as I have said, there was enough room left to accommodate the combined navies of the earth. And yet we find the Navy Department transporting troops almost every day and refusing to stop and take on board marines previously assembled at the barracks there for training. Instead of doing this, they place them on the railroads and carry them nearly a hundred miles around to some other place. You ask me why they do that. I am asking the same question, and it is for this reason that I have offered this amendment. If there is no better reason than that assigned, this amendment should be passed and ships compelled to stop and carry these marines and thereby save the Government thousands of dollars every year.

Mr. BUTLER. Would it not be better to move the marine barracks to some other point?

Mr. HARE. I do not know that it would. The gentleman wants to put me in a position of saying that I am anxious for these marine barracks to stay where they are, but I am not discussing this point. I am interested in transporting the marines to and from these barracks at the least expense. If the Government feels Parris Island is the best place for these barracks, let them stay there, but in transporting the marines from these barracks to other barracks or other points the department should use its own transports whenever it is possible and cheaper to do so.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARE. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. They might not want to leave directly from the marine barracks, because they want to camouflage their movements. Perhaps they are afraid of the Sandino submarines, and the gentleman would not want to handicap the Navy if such a condition should arise?

Mr. HARE. I think the Navy Department would be willing to give that explanation and accept that statement if it were correct. I can not help but think that there must be other reasons for its failure to send its transports into Port Royal Harbor for the purpose of conveying the marines to other barracks or places, but so far we have not been able to find them out. The thing that interests me is that this country establishes a training station on a harbor accessible to its boats, then when the time comes to move the men, and transports are there, the men are not put on the boats but are carried by rail to their destination.

Mr. EDWARDS. To what point did they take these marines by rail?

Mr. HARE. I have been advised they took some of them to Charleston, S. C., and possibly some to Savannah, Ga., or to Norfolk, Va.

Mr. EDWARDS. If the highway that is being constructed from Parris Island over to Savannah had had the bridge in, we could have taken them over to Savannah by truck and carried them away from a real harbor, could we not?

Mr. HARE. Yes; I think you could have carried them to Savannah that way, but the gentleman is not going to get me to speak disparagingly or say anything derogatory about the harbor at Savannah. No doubt they were placed on board at a good harbor, but certainly at no better harbor than can be found at Port Royal, which is at the very door of the marine barracks, and the point I am making is that they should be loaded at their door and not carried to some other port.

Mr. McMILLAN. Has the gentleman got a harbor at Savannah?

Mr. EDWARDS. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that the gentleman has no harbor there, but Savannah is a great world harbor, and it carries the commerce of the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon the ground that it is an attempt under the guise of a limitation to direct an executive officer to reach a certain decision, to perform a certain function, before the moneys can be used that are carried in the paragraph.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is germane. It merely says to the Secretary of the Navy that when transporting these marines from one point to another they shall be carried by the cheapest and most direct route. The bill recites that part of this appropriation is "for transporting of troops," and as the amendment only attempts to say that they shall be transported by the cheapest and most direct route, it appears that the amendment is not only proper but appropriate.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in the language itself to indicate that the amendment would reduce the appropriations. On the other hand it does undoubtedly seek to cause an administrative officer in all cases to come to a determination and work out the question from the standpoint of the rule set up here. In a somewhat similar case where a limitation was proposed, Chairman Frederick C. Hicks, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, on January 8, 1923, as indicated on page 48 of Cannon's Procedure in the House of Representatives, made this statement:

As a general proposition whenever a limitation is accompanied by the words "unless," "except," "until," "if," "however," there is ground to view the so-called limitation with suspicion, and in case of doubt as to its ultimate effect the doubt should be resolved on the conservative side.

Then, passing on down in the chairman's decision, he indicates several test questions that seemed to him to be pertinent. The third one is this:

Is the limitation accompanied or coupled with a phrase applying to official functions, and if so, does the phrase give affirmative directions in fact or in effect, although not in form?

It seems to me that this question must immediately be answered by saying that indirectly at least, if not in form, it does do that precise thing.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. Does not the gentleman think that these marines ought to be transported in the cheapest and most direct manner?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes. Generally speaking they are, and generally speaking I think they ought to be.

Mr. EDWARDS. Why not always?

Mr. FRENCH. Sometimes, it is conceivable, circumstances prevent. Common sense must control.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina reads as follows:

Provided, That none of such amount shall be used in transporting troops or marines to and from marine barracks and other points, except by the cheapest and most direct route.

If the amendment had stopped at the conclusion of the words—

Provided, That none of such amount shall be used in transporting troops or marines to and from marine barracks and other points—

it would be clearly a limitation. It would have forbidden the use of any of the money for the transportation of troops, but it does not entirely prohibit the transportation of troops. It says that such prohibition is to apply except when the transportation is by the cheapest and most direct route. That directs the manner in which the troops or marines shall be transported. It seems to the Chair that it is a direction as to the manner in which certain governmental functions are to be performed rather than a limitation or diminution of the amount that is to be expended.

In this connection the Chair calls attention to a case referred to in section 8693 of a new volume of Hinds' Precedents, a volume not yet published, but which will probably be volume 7, where the caption reads as follows:

8693. Provision that no appropriation provided in the bill be available for any national park "unless" park concessions were granted to highest bidder therefor was held to be legislation and not in order on an appropriation bill.

Under that heading the Chair reads:

On January 29, 1924, the Interior Department bill was under consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when the Clerk read:

"Appropriations herein made for construction of physical improvements in national parks shall be immediately available.

Mr. TOM D. MCKEOWN, of Oklahoma, offered this amendment:

After the word "available" insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"No appropriation herein made for national parks shall be available for any national park wherein any person, copartnership, or corporation enjoys any exclusive privilege or concession unless such concession or privilege is granted the highest and best bidder for same after due advertisement of the time and place to receive bids under rules and regulations of the commissioner of parks."

The decision was rendered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, who used this language:

The Chair is of the opinion this is not a proper limitation. It is close to the border line, but it does more than limit the appropriation. It goes outside of the realm of limitation and purports to legislate how certain privileges shall be obtained, and also to provide that regulations shall be made by the commissioner of parks, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

It seems to the Chair that the pending amendment would not only legislate as to the manner in which the Commander in Chief—the President himself—should employ appropriations in this bill for the transportation of marines but also would necessitate accounting by the Comptroller General of the United States, who would have to determine in every case whether the money had been properly expended under this provision, thus producing conditions and further expenditures, which, in the opinion of the Chair, render it impossible to say that this amendment would reduce or limit the expenditure of money for the transportation of marines. There are many elements besides distance which enter into the cost of transportation, especially by water. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ALTERATIONS TO NAVAL VESSELS

Toward the alterations and repairs required for the purpose of modernizing the U. S. S. Oklahoma and Nevada, as authorized by the act entitled "An act to authorize an increase in the limit of cost of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1927, $6,575,000: Provided, That no part of any other appropriation for the fiscal years 1928 and 1929 shall be available for altering, improving, or repairing such ships.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the chairman of the subcommittee be kind enough to indicate the nature of these alterations on these battleships, whether they include gun elevation, or of what character the improvements are?

Mr. FRENCH. I will say to the gentleman that the alterations referred to here include all the major alterations that were referred to in the act which Congress passed on March 2, 1927. They manifestly include alterations for deck protection and aircraft protection and for the elevation of guns and for the modernization of the vessels in general and, in addition to that, such general overhauling as the department would feel justified in giving each ship.

Mr. BRIGGS. Including aircraft guns?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. I notice that a number of tests were made last summer; among others, on the California, on the Pacific coast. I want to get some idea as to whether any of those results have been reported to your committee, or whether other Members are informed.

Mr. FRENCH. The committee members are advised that the department is wonderfully encouraged with the success that has attended the tests that have been made.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Theoretically.

Mr. FRENCH. Not wholly. Of course, the gentleman must know that these tests are necessarily tests made in the absence of actual war conditions; and yet I will venture to say that those accustomed to the air would not care to be in the place of the target.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Of course, assuming that a fleet of battleships is in a certain attitude at a certain time, when these explosives explode there would be so many hits.

Mr. FRENCH. Antiaircraft guns must be regarded as additional protection. Fighting planes would be met by fighting planes; but even so, we must not brush aside the antiaircraft guns.

Mr. BRIGGS. How far do they carry?

Mr. FRENCH. It is relative; about 3 miles with encouraging results. Of course, the less the range the more accurate the shooting is.

Mr. BRIGGS. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

INCREASE OF THE NAVY

Construction and machinery: On account of hulls and outfits of vessels and machinery of vessels heretofore authorized, $31,500,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK of New York: Page 44, line 4, after the word "authorized," strike out "$31,500,000" and the remainder of the line and insert "$33,000,000, of which sum $1,500,000 will be immediately available toward the construction of three fleet submarines."

Mr. BLACK of New York. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to proceed for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, on August 29, 1916, Congress authorized the construction of 9 fleet submarines. Since then we have built 3 and are building 3, leaving the remaining 3 as just so much paper. If we progress as quickly on the 15 cruisers in the naval bill of this year, they will not be finished for about 30 years. The President in his message to Congress this year stated that the Navy needs submarines.

The Naval Affairs Committee stated that it did not authorize new submarines because of the 1916 authorization. It seems to me incumbent, then, on Congress to appropriate for the last three submarines of the existing program, and so I have introduced this amendment.

They can hardly be classified as increases in the Navy, for, after all, they would only be replacements for four submarines decommissioned in 1927 and before they can be built a great many other submarines will be out of commission due to age. One of these submarines, declared out of commission in 1927, was the T–3, a fleet submarine. The British have 16 fleet submarines built and building and 12 more authorized. The Japanese have about 25. This difference in fleet submarines, considering that we have only 3 built and 3 building, unbalances the 5–5–3 ratio.

The submarine is a very formidable instrument of war. In the late war, in one month alone, German submarines destroyed 852,000 tons of shipping. They were such a plague to Great Britain that she had to devote a great part of her marine energy and equipment to offsetting the big German submarines, which could operate at a great distance from their own shores. Japan took over the German submarine experts right after the war, so impressed was this oriental nation with the undersea craft.

We should not be swayed by Great Britain's objection to submarines, because they threaten her naval superiority. Naval superiority means as much to us as to Great Britain. William Martin, writing in the Journal of Geneva, says:

The actual hegemony which Britain has exercised in the world during the nineteenth century, and of which its economic prosperity has been a consequence, has been due in a large measure to the fact that no fleet could measure itself against the British. The day when this will no longer be true, one will see great changes take place both politically and economically. Naval superiority for the British is not actually a question of security, but a question of supremacy.

Mr. Frank H. Simonds, the well-known American expert on international conditions, says:

We are, then, in my judgment, just at the beginning of a long period of strain in Anglo-American relations. * * * But parity is not a question of ships; it is a question of all that goes to make up British greatness in the political world.

We need these submarines to keep the lanes of the sea open, to protect our commerce, which has just as much right on the high seas as British commerce. The American business man has the same right to expand his trade as the British competitor, and our business must not at any time be interfered with by blockade. As the Chicago Tribune well said:

The argument is disingenuous. British naval action in all her later wars has been to blockade her enemy. "Contraband" is what Great Britain wishes to declare contraband. The guarding of imperial communications in fact has meant an interference with neutral commerce whenever it suited British interests to interfere. This has worked a serious injury to American commerce in the past and may do so again as long as the protection of trade routes is allowed to remain a British monopoly. Our interest in foreign trade, while not yet so large as Britain's, is increasing far more rapidly. It is probable, if not certain, that before many years our foreign trade will exceed that of the British Isles. The increase of our trade with foreign countries is largely in manufactured goods, a field in which our superiority to the British is only beginning to show itself. The trend is nowhere clearer than in the British dominions. British exports to Australia in 1924 were some $20,000,000 less than in 1923; in the same year American exports to Australia increased $45,000,000, a jump of 40 per cent.

America is beginning to outsell Britain in her own dominions, bound together in a tariff union. Elsewhere in the world we should be able to go ahead even faster. At the same time our dependence on the raw materials of industry which are not found in our country is becoming greater with advances in technology. We must buy such vital materials as manganese and rubber from overseas. They may not be so essential to our life as imported wheat and meat is to Britain's, but the difference is not so great as might at first be imagined. Without some of the raw materials which we draw from the outside world, our industrial system must stagnate. If not our lives, then our prosperity and our standard of living will be imperiled by cutting us off from the world. Britain's interest in protecting trade routes to-day is not much greater than ours, and we can anticipate the time when we shall be fully as dependent on sea communications as are the British. Even now we are giving hostages to fortune in permitting any other nation to dominate our communications.

We have challenged Great Britain commercially and, judging by Britain's historical course, we must always be in a position to back up that challenge by an adequate Navy. Those Americans who keep down the American fleet are quite in line with British thought as to conditions on the high seas. Commander Kenworthy, writing in the Nation, says:

Satisfactory as was this elimination of Germany as a naval power, the early months of the peace saw a new rival armanda in course of construction. In spite of war additions to the British fleet and the comparatively small loss suffered in capital ships, the naval building program of America was so formidable as to threaten Great Britain's sea supremacy. To the British Admiralty the American challenge seemed serious.

It is now obvious that there is little hope for disarmament. European diplomats have a rather strange plan for disarmament under the League of Nations. Mr. Edwin L. James, writing in the Times, concerning it, says:

A schedule shall be drawn up of the land, sea, and air forces which the nations now have or will have on completion of the programs now under way; every nation shall state its strength frankly and accept the status quo at the time of making the schedule; whenever any nation departs from this schedule it must explain to the league and the world in general its reasons for so doing.

We must not let this country lapse in fleet submarine strength. Great Britain has an advantage in capital ships, treaty cruisers, and merchant marine units. We can not equalize this through an American superiority in obsolete small submarines and decommissioned destroyers. We can be a better factor for peace if we are strong. As Lord Nelson said:

There is no better negotiator in the councils of Europe than a fleet of English battleships.

We should also bear in mind that the Navy is for fighting purposes, and Napoleon reminds us that God fights on the side of the heaviest artillery.

We have delayed 12 years now on building these submarines, and there has been no more critical time in the history of our country than the present, and we should adopt this amendment so that we can promptly round out the fleet on which our present security and our future prosperity depend.

Gentlemen, we have been discussing this fleet submarine question ever since I have been in the House, and I have been here now for three terms. In that time we have only managed to build about three submarines, although they were authorized away back in 1916. We have promised the country time and time again that we are going to give them something beyond a mere paper navy. It is all right to tell the country we have passed a naval bill providing for the construction of 15 cruisers; it is all right for the Naval Committee to say there is authorization for three additional submarines, but that is not building submarines and it is not satisfying the country. The temper of this country on the Navy is that they want an actual Navy in condition to fight, and at least on a parity with Great Britain.

We have fallen behind in cruisers. We are behind in fleet submarines and we can not say to the American people that we have 15 new cruisers on paper, we have 3 new fleet submamines on paper, we have 30 or 40 obsolete submarines, and have 100 destroyers out of commission. That is no answer to the American people in these times when there is a demand for a real worth-while Navy.

The other day, after we had passed the naval bill, some of us thought we had accomplished something, but I see the White House has summoned two important Members from the other side of the Capitol to consider this naval bill. I do not think this House should lag behind on this naval proposition. We refused to appropriate for the mine-laying submarine and the Senate had to appropriate for it. Are we going to stand by in this House and watch the Senate build up this Navy or are we going to do something about it? We have as much obligation to do this defense work as the Senate of the United States, and I think it is about time, after 12 years of authorization, that we gave this country some real fleet submarines instead of depending on the six we have.

I hope this amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, just one word in response to the arguments of the gentleman. I am going to pass by most of the statements he has made and get right down to the question of whether or not we want to begin the program he suggests.

In the 1929 bill we are carrying for new construction in aircraft and in ships for the Navy the grand total of $72,240,000. That includes for dirigibles $1,800,000; it includes for aircraft $15,865,000; it includes for modernization $6,575,000; and it includes money for two submarines and eight cruisers, $48,000,000. I submit that this is a very vigorous program for the Nation to carry on at a time when the gentleman characterizes the Navy as a paper navy. I submit, gentlemen, that when this country to-day through this Congress is considering a bill that carries more than $361,000,000 for 1929 the gentleman makes a severe arraignment of naval administration if by any chance whatever he could justify the statement that we have only a paper navy.

Gentlemen, we ought not to build the naval craft in such a way as to cause humps in construction. We ought not to increase the program for one year out of an orderly way of development; we ought to carry on in an even manner. To do what the gentleman proposes to do would mean to raise a hump in the building program for the next year or so, from which, unless we continued to build in a way that is not justified, we would need to recede to a lower level. The amendment ought not to prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK of New York: Page 44, line 4, after the word "authorized," strike out "$31,500,000" and insert "$35,000,000," and also insert the following: "of which sum $4,500,000 shall be immediately available toward the construction of destroyer leaders."

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I understand the Naval Affairs Committee has stated to the House and to the country that the reason they have not authorized any destroyer leaders is because there is already existing authorization. Unless this amendment is adopted the destroyer leaders are paper destroyer leaders just as the three fleet submarines are paper fleet submarines.

By denying me the amendment on the submarines you have kept this country behind Great Britain on submarines. You have run away from the 5–5–3 ratio that the President has guaranteed the country we would keep up and that this committee is trying to tell the country we are trying to keep up. We have not a destroyer leader. Great Britain has 17.

Now, what is the use of all this? What is the use of this committee and the President telling the country we need these fleet submarines and we need these destroyer leaders? The President said this in his message, and I still charge, in spite of the one magnificent word of the chairman of the subcommittee, that we have, as far as destroyer leaders are concerned, as far as fleet submarines are concerned, and to a great extent as far as cruisers are concerned, a paper Navy.

The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], in charge of this bill, has wrecked any additional program as far as actual construction of submarines is concerned. I do not know yet how he feels on destroyer leaders; but if it will give the House any consolation, the gentleman's position on these questions has been well approved in circles other than our own. The record of the gentleman's speech against increased cruiser construction a year or so ago was used by the British admiralty against this country. The gentleman never intended it should be used in that way, but the fact remains that our expert, the chairman of the subcommittee, has been also used in the British Parliament in favor of the British Navy and against ours. The President of the United States has spoken differently from the chairman of the subcommittee, and I think if you are going to follow the President you are going to adopt this amendment even though you did not adopt the last one offered.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of New York. If the gentleman wants to ask me a question; yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman ought to have enough votes from New York to adopt the amendment.

Mr. BLACK of New York. New York can not do everything; but it will be a great thing for the Navy when New York gets control.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER) there were—ayes 7, noes 37.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of any appropriation made for the Navy shall be expended for any of the purposes herein provided for on account of the Navy Department in the District of Columbia, including personal services of civilians and of enlisted men of the Navy, except as herein expressly authorized: Provided, That there may be detailed to the Bureau of Navigation not to exceed at any one time five enlisted men of the Navy: Provided further, That enlisted men detailed to the naval dispensary and the radio-communication service shall not be regarded as detailed to the Navy Department in the District of Columbia: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, may assign to the Chief of Naval Operations any public quarters under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the proviso at page 45, line 3:

And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, may assign to the Chief of Naval Operations any public quarters under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department in the District of Columbia.

Mr. FRENCH. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. FRENCH. I suspect that the point of order is well taken, although I also think that what the committee has sought to do would be in the interest of economy and that, possibly, the Secretary of the Navy might have authority under the law to do just what is proposed.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman argue the merits or the point of order so I may be advised?

Mr. FRENCH. I do not care to argue the point of order. I shall be glad to state what it is proposed would be done. On the Naval Observatory grounds is a very large, commodious building that is occupied usually by the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory. The department would like to assign this house to the Chief of Naval Operations.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. So I understand.

Mr. FRENCH. It would mean economy if the Chief of Naval Operations could occupy the property and if the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory could be assigned other quarters; or on the other hand, if he were to be allowed money for rentals of other quarters. The building itself is so large that not long ago one of the superintendents found it so expensive to keep up that he chose to remain in his own home or at a hotel rather than attempt to keep the building open because the cost of keeping up so large a house was greatly in excess of his allowances for the purpose. We thought it was in the interest of economy to do this thing. I am satisfied it has the support of the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory. I think, however, the language is possibly subject to a point of order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, this leaves the situation rather undecided. Although the gentleman may not seek to oppose the point of order, he does not concede it. If the gentleman concedes the point of order I have achieved the purpose and further argument is not necessary. This compels me to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the purpose of the proviso, as stated by the gentleman from Idaho, is to dispossess the present Superintendent of the Naval Observatory in order to install in the quarters the present Chief of the Bureau of Operations. The building now occupied by the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory was constructed under an appropriation made in 1889 and is found on page 806 of the twenty-sixth volume of the Statutes at Large, and there the appropriation was specifically made for the residence of the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory, and the proviso here would change existing law in that it would vest in the Secretary of the Navy the authority to assign another officer to the particular quarters.

In other words, these beautiful quarters at this very useful scientific institution are used by the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory. As you know, it is necessary for him to make assignments of scientific men to observe the motions of the heavenly bodies; but instead of having those, it is intended to convert the place into a tea garden where we can have some movements of the flappers observed by the social elite of Washington. [Laughter.] Clearly, it is legislation and changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Without any reference to the purpose of the proviso, it seems clear to the Chair that the proviso changes existing law by authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to assign to the Chief of Naval Operations public quarters under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department in the District of Columbia which may not now be available for that purpose. There is no showing that it would be a retrenchment of expenses under the Holman rule or that it is a limitation upon an appropriation in the bill, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I have a further amendment, to strike out, on page 44, line 22, the words "Provided, That there may be detailed to the Bureau of Navigation not to exceed at any one time five enlisted men of the Navy."

That proviso provides for the detail of five enlisted men to the Bureau of Navigation, and I understand it was in contemplation that they would be needed by the new occupant of the quarters involved in the other proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, line 22, after the word "authorized," strike out all down to and including the word "Navy" in line 25.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, the impression of the gentleman from New York as to the five enlisted men in the Bureau of Navigation is entirely incorrect. There are 24 enlisted men now doing work in the Navy Department, and members of the committee feel that the number should be reduced, and that we ought to employ civilians to do the work. It will be cheaper to do so. On the other hand, the department feels that it ought to have about five men from the enlisted personnel who would be available for work in the department that the civilians could not be used for so satisfactorily, and the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation requests us to continue not more than five.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, on the statement made by the gentleman from Idaho, chairman of the subcommittee, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read to the end of line 7, page 46, of the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I dare say that every Member in this House is cognizant of the fact that for a number of years past a chain of very powerful and influential newspapers, in the way of forming public opinion, have incessantly thundered at the idea that it was entirely inconsistent with a well-organized Naval Establishment to continue to build battleships.

I believe that the editorial utterances of these papers—the Hearst papers—have had a decided effect on the minds of many millions of people throughout the country. These utterances have been elaborated by Members of Congress on the floor of the House. I believe the impression exists in a great many sections of the country that the Naval Establishment has not that equipment which could meet successfully the equipment of other countries that depend upon the navy for supremacy in world affairs.

It has occurred to me that there must be some advisory board in existence which might counteract the influences of these newspapers that are apparently honest and sincere in their comments on the establishment of the present Navy if that influence is misdirected or erroneous. It appears to me it might be good policy if we had an advisory board—and, of course, we do have one—to let the country know once in a while that the Nation has a well-balanced Naval Establishment for the standpoint of battleships, if they be necessary, and why they are so, of cruisers, of airplanes, and of submarines. Because it is all important that we should have such an establishment. As the eloquent Bourke Cockran said on the floor of the House on several occasions in speeches which apparently carried intellectual if not political conviction, that a second-class navy was like a second-class poker hand—it led to the destruction of the possessor, because under the belief that he has a better hand than his opponent he will go to defeat with his second-class hand. That is a matter of which the country should be informed. And, if it be consistent with public policy, it appears to me that it should be the duty of any advisory board which may be in existence, or through those that are in confidence of that advisory board on the floor of this House, to make some authoritative statement that would counteract the influence of these great newspapers that are able to crystallize public opinion, and public opinion rules in this country. I believe it was a celebrated literateur who said, "I care not who writes the laws of the country, if you will permit me to write its songs," and along those lines, I care not who makes the laws of the country, if I am in possession of the newspaper facilities that interpret those laws journalistically, which is more effective than judicially with the reading public, and get that interpretation to the country. It is not entirely in the interest of the Naval Establishment to have go uncontradicted the idea that we are not in a well-balanced position, that we are overmanned from the standpoint of battleships which are as obsolete as tapestry, that serve no useful purpose other than to make for the financial gain of the shipbuilders of the country, and it is not well for the people who make up the bone and sinew and the backbone of the Nation to be under the impression that the Navy is not a fighting machine so much as it is an instrumentality to cater to the powerful political interests that are in control of the shipyards. I think that if there is an advisory board, it would be a patriotic act to inform the country that we have a Navy well equipped, well balanced, a fighting machine modern in every respect and able to discharge the duty that we believe is its obligation. [Applause.]

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CHINDBLOM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12286) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not the Chair will put them en gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments?

The amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A. H. VEAZEY

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, it is with much pride that I call to the attention of the House the fact that the honor goes to my district of furnishing the master teacher of agriculture in the South. Mr. A. H. Veazey, of the Rosewood High School, in Wayne County, N. C., in a recent contest was chosen as the master teacher of vocational agriculture of the entire South.

North Carolina has taken its place as one of the leading States of the Nation and it is holding its own along agricultural lines, and Wayne County is one of the most fertile agricultural counties in the country.

The teaching of agriculture and home economics in the rural high schools of this Nation is one of the most effective means of bettering the conditions of our rural population as well as one of the most popular activities yet inaugurated.

There is pending legislation in Congress at the present time to supplement and encourage these activities. This legislation should pass at this session of Congress. It is known as the George-Reed bill.

ADDRESS OF HON. M. H. THATCHER, OF KENTUCKY

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by having printed therein an address delivered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THATCHER] before the Ohio Valley River Improvement Association at Huntington, W. Va.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by Hon. H. M. THATCHER.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE OHIO RIVER

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. President, Governor Morgan, members of the association, ladies and gentlemen, I am very glad to be with you this afternoon and to participate with you in this meeting. I am very grateful, also, for the kindness shown me in permitting me to say what I have to say to-day. I am on my way home to Louisville by auto, where I have some important appointments, and I am anxious to get on, but I didn't want to miss this meeting.

At the outset I want to express to you the assurance that so far as I am concerned, not only as a Member of Congress, not only as a Representative of the district in which Louisville is situated, but personally, as well, I am heartily in favor of the earliest possible completion of the Ohio River project; and, also, whenever and wherever and to the extent it may fairly be done, I believe that there should be extension of that system on the Ohio River tributaries.

Now the great Ohio River Valley, as has so often been said, is the most wonderful industrial region in the world. There is nothing like it in all the bounds of the earth. No river flows through such a great industrial country. No river flows through so wonderful a region of wealth, actual and potential, as does the Ohio, and its tributary streams. What you say of the Big Kanawha is true. What you say of the Monongahela is true, and these things are true, in more or less degree, of certain other tributaries of this river, like the Kentucky, and Green River, and the Big Sandy, and the Cumberland River. It is all one great system, and we are now getting back to first principles in transportation matters.

Some time ago I read with much interest the story of the Midland Trail, how in the early days, when it was necessary for the pioneers to drive and trudge across the mountains and through the valleys, when that great stream of migration went westward, there were good roads built through certain stretches here and there—plank roads, turnpikes, and the like; and then came the railroads through these great valleys, and the old Midland Trail fell into more or less disuse. Later came the automobiles, and the old Midland Trail was built anew, better than ever before. In the same way we are going back to the first principles of navigation, and the first principles of transportation; especially so as regards our heavy, nonperishable products of factory and mine.

Two years ago it was my pleasure to be on the great Yangtse-Kiang River in China. I also saw canals everywhere I went in China. They have no roads, but everything there is transported by river and canals. China would die within 24 hours, except for water transportation. They have found that to be the cheapest, and for their purposes, through all ages the most effective method. We are getting back to that condition as to our heavy freights.

I think the country at large is absolutely sold upon the idea of the improvement of the Ohio River Valley. I don't think that Congress needs education on that subject. I think Congress is practically a unit. Of course, I can not speak for all the 435 Members. You know it is sometimes said that a Congressman can hardly speak for himself; but I believe it is the temper of Congress to make appropriations, and to make them as rapidly and as expeditiously as may be necessary, to complete this project. There was a little hitch two or three years ago, of which, I trust, I may not inappropriately speak at this time. I remember when the Bureau of the Budget cut off $10,000,000 from the rivers and harbors appropriation, estimates submitted by the Chief of Engineers, it was my pleasure to join with some other Members of Congress who are interested in this great river here, and in the Mississippi River project—men like former Congressman Newton, of St. Louis, who is interested, as you all know, in all these waterways propositions, and we aided in securing a restoration of this necessary sum. The Director of the Budget, I am glad to say, when he examined the subject further submitted to Congress a supplemental estimate therefor. As a result the full amount needed was appropriated that year and the great Ohio River improvement work, and other important river and harbor enterprises, went on without interruption or delay, and, therefore, with the greatest economy of expenditure.

You will find the Chief of Engineers to-day, just as his predecessors have been, sympathetic with the idea of this improvement, because as men of experience, as men of skill, they have known the great value of the early completion of this great work. I believe that I can assure you that adequate appropriations will be made, because this is the temper of Congress. The Members of Congress realize the absolute importance of the completion of this work at an early date. "On to Cairo by 1929" is not a false slogan. It is a true slogan, and in my humble judgment will be fully realized.

Also, I believe you will find Congress sympathetic with the idea of flood control as a national problem, because it is a national problem. There is not too much water on the earth if we know what to do with it; but that question has to be approached carefully, thoughtfully, and in the light of the best judgment, and the best skill, and the best experience, because it is going to cost a tremendous lot of money to work it out; but, to repeat it, it is national in its scope, and Congress should approach it as a national question.

I am glad to be with you this afternoon. I am glad to be with the men here who for 30 years—some of them, at least—have stood shoulder to shoulder in this great work, and have helped to educate not only Congress but the Nation at large, not upon any false promises, not upon any false statements of fact but upon the naked truth about this great waterway.

It was my great pleasure to travel on the great River Rhine this summer. I traveled by steamer all the way from West Baden down to the city of Cologne, and I was absolutely amazed at the amount of shipping on that river. I can now understand how those great industrial countries, Germany and France, might be perpetually at strife or in rivalry over the control of that great stream. We met hundreds and hundreds of barges, and innumerable tows of steel and coal and iron and other commodities going up that river. That was typical of practically every day of the year as I was told, and yet we have a greater river here, a stream of greater potential wealth! I believe that only on the lower stretches of the Monongahela River is the tonnage on the Rhine exceeded anywhere on the rivers of the earth. But we will have in this great valley, in this great region, with all of its great wealth, within two or three years incomparable the greatest river system in the world; and this dream of dreams will come true; and when it does come true, nobody will deserve more credit for it than the Ohio Valley Improvement Association and its officers and members. I thank you. [Applause.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Calendar Wednesday, to-morrow, the order of committees be changed so that the Committee on Foreign Affairs will be called next, instead of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that on Calendar Wednesday next the Committee on Foreign Affairs shall have the call ahead of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK of New York. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman know whether the so-called Burton resolution respecting an embargo on arms is to be called up?

Mr. TILSON. It is understood that it is not to be called up to-morrow.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. And this is agreeable to the chairmen of the two committees?

Mr. TILSON. This is done at the request of the committees directly concerned, and it will save Calendar Wednesday for Calendar Wednesday business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9663. An act authorizing Herman Simmonds, jr., his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Tampa Bay from Pinellas Point, Pinellas County, to Piney Point, Manatee County, Fla.;

H. J. Res. 126. Joint resolution to provide for the entry under bond of exhibits for display at the Pacific Southwest Exposition to be held in commemoration of the landing of the Spanish padres in the Pacific Southwest and the opening of the Long Beach, Calif., world port, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 245. Joint resolution to make immediately available the appropriation for a road across the Kaibab Indian Reservation.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1279. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to compromise and settle certain suits at law resulting from the subsidence of First Street east, in the District of Columbia, occasioned by the construction of a railroad tunnel under said street;

S. 2310. An act supplementary to, and amendatory of, the incorporation of the Catholic University of America, organized under and by virtue of a certificate of incorporation pursuant to class 1, chapter 18, of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia; and

S. 3387. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to lend War Department equipment for use at the Tenth National Convention of the American Legion.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the following dates they presented to the President of the United States for his approval bills of the following titles:

On March 24, 1928:

H. R. 340. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Anchorage, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction and equipment of an additional school building, and for other purposes; and

On March 27, 1928:

H. R. 9860. An act to amend the act of April 25, 1922, as amended, entitled "An act authorizing extensions of time for the payment of purchase money due under certain homestead entries and Government-land purchases within the former Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian Reservations, N. Dak. and S. Dak.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes, p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 28, 1928, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. TILSON submitted the following tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Wednesday, March 28, 1928, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

(10 a. m.)

To provide for the eradication or control of the European corn borer (H. R. 10377).

COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINING

(10 a. m.)

Authorizing an appropriation for development of potash jointly by the United States Geological Survey of the Department of the Interior and the Bureau of Mines of the Department of Commerce by improved methods of recovering potash from deposits in the United States (H. R. 496).

COMMITTEE ON WORLD WAR VETERANS' LEGISLATION

(10 a. m.)

To consider proposed legislation governing insurance.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

(10 a. m.)

To amend the immigration act of 1924 (H. R. 8540).

Amending the immigration laws as applied to Porto Rico (H. R. 10956).

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

(10.30 a. m.)

To require the prompt rendition of accounts (H. R. 12180).

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

(2 p. m.)

To amend the act entitled "An act to create the Inland Waterways Corporation for the purpose of carrying out the mandate and purpose of Congress as expressed in sections 201 and 500 of the transportation act, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1924 (H. R. 10710).

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

420. Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriations pertaining to the legislative establishment, United States Senate, for the fiscal year 1929, in the sum of $100,000 (H. Doc. 207), was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. SNELL: Committee on Rules. H. Res. 148. A resolution providing for the consideration of S. J. Res. 113, S. 716, and H. R. 12407, bills relating to immigration; without amendment (Rept. No. 1056). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SNELL: Committee on Rules. H. Res. 149. A resolution providing for the consideration of H. R. 279, a bill relating to Howard University; without amendment (Rept. No. 1057). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MICHENER: Committee on Rules. H. Res. 150. A resolution providing for the consideration of H. R. 8927, a bill to amend the act to promote export trade; without amendment (Rept. No. 1058). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SEARS of Florida: Committee on Roads. H. Res. 117. A resolution authorizing the United States Bureau of Public Roads to make a survey of the uncompleted bridges of the Overseas Highway from Key West to the mainland, in the State of Florida, with a view of obtaining the cost of the construction of said bridges, and report their findings to Congress; with amendment (Rept. No. 1059). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAWLEY: Committee on Ways and Means. H. J. Res. 253. A joint resolution authorizing certain customs officials to administer oaths; without amendment (Rept. No. 1060). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. H. R. 12407. A bill to authorize the refund of visa fees in certain cases; without amendment (Rept. No. 1061). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KENDALL: Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. H. R. 57. A bill to enable the Postmaster General to authorize the establishment of temporary or emergency star-route service from a date earlier than the date of the order requiring such service; with amendment (Rept. No. 1062). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12394) granting an increase of pension to Emma Steer; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12395) for the relief of Greenville News Co.; Committee on Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GRAHAM: A bill (H. R. 12441) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act in reference to writs of error," approved January 31, 1928, Public, No. 10, Seventieth Congress; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BRIGHAM: A bill (H. R. 12442) to provide for the transfer to the Department of Labor of certain forfeited vehicles; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona: A bill (H. R. 12443) authorizing improvements at the Fort Mohave Indian School, Arizona; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 12286) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BOARD OF REGENTS OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under authority of section 5581 of the Revised Statutes, the Chair appoints the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] as a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution to fill the vacancy in the term expiring March 3, 1929, caused by the death of Hon. WOODBRIDGE N. FERRIS, late a Senator from the State of Michigan.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by the Yale Republican Club of the sixth assembly district of Queens County, Ridgewood, N. Y., protesting against the abolition or relocation of the Brooklyn Navy Yard, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Flanders, Riverhead, and vicinity, in the State of New York, praying for the passage of legislation granting increased pensions to Civil War veterans and their widows, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAINE presented the petition of Mary Lediger, of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for the passage of legislation granting increased pensions to Civil War veterans and their widows, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from Charles T. O'Neal, vice president Fort Smith & Western Railway Co., Fort Smith, Ark., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Dale bill, being the bill (S. 2107) to provide for steel cars in the Railway Post Office Service, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. WILLIS presented a petition numerously signed by sundry citizens of Senecaville and vicinity, in the State of Ohio, praying for the passage of legislation for the fair settlement of disputes now existing between the miners and operators in the coal industry, so as to relieve that industry from its present depressed condition and bring relief to the many distressed families of the Ohio mining communities, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. BRUCE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., praying for the passage of legislation to curb alleged unfair and destructive trade practices of chain stores, stating that by selling highly advertised items below cost they create an impression of cheapness and prices which undersell their neighbors, etc., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of sundry owners and operators of power boats in the State of Maryland, remonstrating against amendment of section 4426 of the Revised Statutes requiring inspection of the hull and boilers of certain steam-propelled vessels, and further requiring compliance with certain provisions before a certificate of inspection shall be issued, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SURVEY FOR A NICARAGUAN CANAL

Mr. EDGE submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) authorizing an investigation and survey for a Nicaraguan canal, which was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO FLOOD CONTROL BILL

Mr. THOMAS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3434) for the control of floods on the Mississippi River from the Head of Passes to Cairo, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WILLIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 11577, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 19, line 22, after the word "regulations," insert the following additional proviso: "Provided further, That out of the money hereby appropriated no payment as indemnity shall be made for any animal condemned for slaughter if the indemnity value of such animal is fixed by any arbitrary maximum, or is not arrived at by some well-recognized and equitable method of appraisal."

Mr. BARKLEY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,889,994 for the relief of the State of Kentucky, to restore and recondition the roads and bridges damaged or destroyed by floods in said State in the year 1927, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 11577, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MEXICAN OIL REGULATIONS

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I rise to ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD an article by Mr. Walter Lippmann, appearing in the New York World of this morning, covering very fully the terms and conditions of the oil settlement with Mexico. I think the matter of sufficient moment to ask to have it inserted in the RECORD.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?
There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW OIL RULES END LONG FEUD BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND MEXICO—REGULATIONS AGREED UPON BY PRESIDENT CALLES AND AMBASSADOR MORROW WIND UP A PERENNIAL CONTROVERSY—FULL UNDERSTANDING WITHOUT BARGAINING—COMPANIES MUST NOW ACCEPT THE LAW OR FIGHT A LONG AND LOSING BATTLE

[Walter Lippmann, chief editorial writer of the World, obtained the important information given below on his recent visit to Mexico for the North American Newspaper Alliance, of which the World is the New York member. His is an authoritative statement of the situation.]

MEXICO CITY.—The Mexican Government has issued the new oil regulations. This marks the end of a controversy which for more than 10 years has endangered peaceable relations between Mexico and the United States.

The oil companies have until January 12 next to make up their minds whether they will accept the amended law and regulations. But there is little doubt the United States Government has made up its mind that the law and regulations protect every legitimate American right.

It may be assumed that henceforth the oil companies either accept the law or, if they choose to fight it, fight without diplomatic or moral support of the Government.

WORK OF CALLES AND MORROW

This result has been reached by President Calles and Ambassador Morrow in negotiations covering a period of about four months. In that period no notes have been written, but there have been an exhaustive and painstaking reexamination of the whole question and protracted personal negotiation.

Questions of principle have been dealt with by President Calles and Ambassador Morrow. Technical matters have been dealt with by Reuben Clark, Salt Lake City, a member of Ambassador Morrow's staff, and officials of Secretary of Labor Morones's department. There has been constant consultation with local representatives of the oil companies.

The upshot of it all is that the Mexican law and regulations have been amended in certain important respects and the demands of the United States Government have in certain important respects been modified.

NO BARGAIN OR COMPROMISE

Neither Government has had to yield on vital principles. Both Governments have yielded on matters which were ill-considered, irritating, and of no real value to claimants. The result is neither a bargain nor a compromise. It is an understanding reached by liquidating the accumulated controversy of a decade.

This controversy has been described by those who were ill informed as turning upon whether the Mexican Government has the right to pass retroactive and confiscatory laws affecting American property. As a matter of fact, the Mexican Government has never claimed such a right The constitution specifically says that "No law shall be given retroactive effect to the prejudice of any person whatever."

The real question has been whether the laws and regulations since 1917 have in fact been retroactive and confiscatory. The problem has not been whether Mexico could deprive Americans of rights. It has been to determine what rights Americans possessed before 1917, and whether any of them have been taken away.

DOES OIL GO WITH LAND?

More specifically, the question has been whether the owner of a piece of land also owned all the oil under the surface of that land. The Mexican position has been that he never owned the oil under the surface, but that he could own it if he took definite steps, known as "positive acts," to get out the oil.

The American position has varied. At times the United States has argued that the oil in the ground belonged to the surface owner, whether he had taken steps to get it out or not. At other times the United States has seemed to accept the Mexican legal theory. The settlement now reached is based on this theory.

A company which acquired land before 1917 is regarded as the owner of the oil under the surface, provided it had taken certain definite steps before 1917 to exploit the land as an oil property. If it had not done this, it does not now and never did own the oil under the surface.

There is some doubt whether the United States State Department ever committed itself completely to the claim that the owner of the surface owned the oil underneath. But it has at times talked about such a claim. The present settlement jettisons it, and so it may be said that the essential American concession to obtain an agreement has been the tacit acknowledgment that Americans had acquired rights to oil only if they had taken definite steps to exploit oil.

BASED ON OLD SPANISH LAW

The decision to narrow the American position was reached after an independent and exhaustive study of Spanish and Mexican law by Reuben Clark. This study goes back at least as far as royal ordinances of the King of Spain in 1783, in which it is stated plainly that minerals in the ground belong not to the owner of the surface but to the King. This law was recognized by the United States Supreme Court in a decision handed down after the Mexican War in a case affecting former Mexican territory which was incorporated into the United States.

The theory that minerals in the ground belong to the Government and not to the surface owners is therefore not a new notion invented by revolutionists. It is the ancient law of Spanish-Americans.

There would have been no question that it was still law while American companies were acquiring their properties had it not been for certain statutes passed under Porfirio Diaz The language of these laws is inexact and difficult to translate, and out of them grew a very subtle and complicated legal debate. But once the United States Government had accepted the ancient Spanish legal theory the question reduced itself to this: What did the owner of the surface have to do to establish his right to oil under the surface?

UNITED STATES OBJECTIONS MET

The Mexican law of 1925 and regulations of 1926 attempted to answer that question. The United States Government developed three main objections to the law and regulations.

It contended that the definition of steps the owner had to take to become the owner of oil underneath was too narrow, and contrary to the Warren-Payne agreement of 1923, which preceded the recognition of Obregon. The Mexican Government has conceded this point in new regulations just issued by defining positive acts in the same language as used in the Warren-Payne agreement.

The second objection of the United States was that the law limited the rights of the owner to 50 years. The United States argued that to change perpetual rights to 50 years was retroactive and confiscatory. The Mexican Government, following the opinion of its supreme court, has amended the law, removing the 50-year time limit.

The third objection of the United States was that Mexico proposed to issue a concession to the owner. The United States argued that it ought to acknowledge his right and not take his right away and then concede it to him again. The Mexican Government has agreed.

Thus it may be said that this settlement has been reached by the acceptance by the United States of the Mexican legal theory that ownership of the surface does not automatically create ownership of the oil under the surface, and by the Mexican Government's making three important changes in its law and regulations which enforce this principle. It is a settlement both Governments can accept without sacrifice of principle or loss of dignity.

SO ENDS THE CONTROVERSY

There is little doubt this ends the oil controversy between the Governments. The position of the United States Government from now on will undoubtedly be that, except in case of a denial of justice, it has no further formal official connection with the Mexican oil dispute.

If the oil companies refuse to apply for confirmatory concessions of the type agreed upon, their lands, after next January, will, in the eyes of the law, be vacant and open for exploitation by others. There is little likelihood the United States Government will help them if they decide to continue the controversy on questions of principle.

If the oil companies should decide to fight further, they will assume grave risks. They will risk forfeiture of their property, they will miss the greatest opportunity in modern times to reach a friendly working arrangement with the Mexican Government, and they will deeply prejudice their future, not only in Mexico but in South America. For the future of the industry depends not upon properties acquired before 1917 but on concessions still to be acquired in competition with European interests.

It will not help the companies to obtain new concessions if they take the position that a settlement which seems fair to men as conservative as President Coolidge and Ambassador Morrow is not good enough for them. [Copyright, 1928, in all countries, by North America Newspaper Alliance.]

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1271) to more effectively meet the obligations of the United States under the migratory bird treaty with Great Britain by lessening the dangers threatening migratory game birds from drainage and other causes, by the acquisition of areas of land and of water to furnish in perpetuity reservations for the adequate protection of such birds; and by providing funds for the establishment of such areas, their maintenance and improvement, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to have Senate bill 3740, the flood-control measure, taken up, and in this connection I want to ask the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] what he would like to have done with the unfinished business. I feel that I should get up the flood control bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I trust that the Senator from South Dakota will consent to lay aside or to have superseded for the present the so-called migratory bird bill, in order that the Senate may take up for consideration and action the flood control bill. Let me say to the Senator from South Dakota that I appreciate fully the situation in which he is placed with respect to the bill that is now the unfinished business of the Senate; but, as I stated a few days ago, it seems to me that, comparing the two measures in relative importance, the migratory bird bill and the flood control bill, the latter is entitled to precedence at this time.

I want to assure the Senator from South Dakota that if he finds it consistent to cooperate in a movement to bring forward at this time, without any clash of will, the flood control bill, I shall be glad to do anything I can to help him again to bring the migratory bird bill before the Senate, after the flood control bill and perhaps the farm relief bill shall have been disposed of.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I appreciate the difficulties of the Senator from Arkansas and his friendly attitude toward this important conservation measure. The big flood brought disaster and despair to many of the citizens of his State, and he is naturally anxious that the congressional relief be granted without further delay. I am going to cooperate with him. I can not refrain, however, from stating that I consider the migratory bird bill very important. I will not withdraw same. I will simply accept another position in the order of business. If our migratory birds are to be saved from extermination, legislation along this line can not be long delayed. The encroachment of man's activities on nesting places and breeding places of migratory birds threatens their extermination. Our swamps are being drained, our streams and our bays are being polluted with oil and chemicals. The main purpose of this bill is for the Government to acquire by purchase as large acreage as is possible for permanent sanctuaries in order to prevent further disaster.

The treaty between Canada and this country and the legislation supporting same which became a law 10 years ago, was a most important conservation measure and did substantially slow down the slaughter and destruction.

Some have hoped that the States would provide sanctuaries, but migratory birds nest in one State and are hunted in others. It is not a State problem but a National problem—and international. The legislation referred to provided for a limited warden service, it cut down the bag limits, and closed certain seasons for hunting, and was in many ways beneficial; but unless sanctuaries are provided, this bird life can not be saved.

Some are discouraged at the fact that progress is slow along this line, but we should cheer up when we recall that the fight for the migratory bird treaty covered a period of at least 13 years. The sanctuary bill has been before Congress only half that long.

We admit there is a wide difference of opinion regarding certain features. The scarcity of birds is more apparent in the interior of the country than it is on the Atlantic seaboard, which lies on one of the main routes of flight. There is a high concentration in Chesapeake Bay and other places, and people in those sections do not fully realize the danger. They would actually like more hunting privileges and the right to sell migratory birds in the market. Some would insist on this privilege until the last goose is shot, just as was done with the passenger pigeon, which has become wholly extinct, the last bird having passed away a few years ago.

This measure has a great deal of support from the country at large. It is indorsed by the National Isaak Walton League, by the Audubon Society, and I think by every conservation society in the United States.

It has passed both the House and the Senate at different times, but did not pass both Houses at the same session.

It is supported by the State game departments from different sections of the country, including Montana, Minnesota, Virginia, Maryland, and South Carolina. There is nothing sectional about the demand for this measure.

The arguments advanced upon this floor in this debate have been varied and interesting. One very able Senator and a member of the bar, has asserted boldly that it is unconstitutional and therefore should not pass. The only answer that I can give is that the Supreme Court of the United States has already passed on the questions involved. I am not a lawyer, but my understanding is that this court has the last guess on legal questions; and being as they have spoken, we might as well stop arguing that phase of it. To those who object to the license fee as a means of raising the necessary funds, I will say that is universal experience of the States that funds for game preservation and protection could best be secured in that way. This bill follows a beaten path in that respect.

One Senator who has vigorously objected to the establishment of sanctuaries has signified his willingness to vote for same if the money is taken out of the Treasury instead of securing same through the sale of game licenses. I would prefer to have Federal appropriations, but the experience of the last seven years has fully convinced a majority of the Members of Congress that such a hope is futile. Many efforts have been made. Only one has been successful—that of the upper Mississippi game refuge.

The license fee would provide a definite annual income to carry on the work. The appropriation would be very uncertain and generally fail.

For a quarter of a century there has been a widespread national feeling that the Government should take heroic means to save our timber supply. All admit there are only a few years' supply in sight. Something has been done by Congress, but it has been so inadequate as to be almost ridiculous. After the horse is stolen we lock the barn door. After the forests have been destroyed there will be real reforestation. After the birds are extinct we will realize our loss of opportunity.

During this very session the McNary bill passed the Senate, providing for a $40,000,000 expenditure of reforestation covering an eight-year program. This bill was fortunate in having the support of the administration and the indorsement of the Budget officer, but when it reached the House it was cut from $40,000,000 to $4,000,000, covering only a two-year program. No money is made available to take options that have been secured by the Forest Service at great effort and expense. The matter has not been taken seriously at any time by Congress. Sometimes the fault lies with the House and sometimes with the Senate.

But, Mr. President, I do not wish to stand in the way of such an emergency measure as the flood control bill. I well understand there is no disposition to displace the bird sanctuary bill. It is simply a desire on the part of the Members from the Mississippi Valley to give it another place on the Senate program. I cheerfully accept the situation. I will not only yield while we take up the flood control bill, but it is equally important that this bill be deferred until after the general farm legislation has been disposed of. I withdraw with the understanding that I will have the cooperation of the friends of this measure on both sides of the Chamber when the legislation above referred to has been considered and disposed of.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington has the floor.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE. I will ask the Senator to yield only for a few moments. I want the impression firmly fixed in the minds of the Members of this body that there is no opposition to the general proposition of authorizing the Federal Government to purchase sanctuaries for migratory game birds and make those sanctuaries inviolate. There is opposition, however, to this bill in the form in which it is presented, which opposition is expressed in terms of logic and in the interest of conservation.

I know that there are a number of amendments to be offered. I have four amendments which I wish to submit that will have a tendency to make this bill a real conservation measure. There are a number of amendments to be offered by other Senators with that same object in view, namely, to make of this proposed legislation a conservation program and not a program for the destruction of migratory game birds.

I have had it in mind that the Senator from South Dakota might be willing to have this bill recommitted to the committee. I have no desire to delay action upon the bill; I am willing to have a vote upon the bill just as soon as Senators have had an opportunity to debate it fully, but I think that we would get further and proceed faster if this bill were recommitted to the committee. I ask now if the Senator from South Dakota will agree to the bill being so recommitted?

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I wish to say that about three weeks ago I had a very good chance to secure the passage of the migratory bird bill, because there was then no pressing business before the Senate and there was no reason why the migratory bird bill should not go forward, as it was then in line to be taken up. However, I yielded to Members of the Senate who are opposed to the bill and agreed that the committee should hold hearings on it. That statement was made in the Senate Chamber; it was well known that hearings were being held, and everybody was invited to attend; the hearings have been held, and there are printed copies of those hearings available. I am sure I do not understand why the Senator from Wisconsin now wants to have the bill recommitted to the committee and go over it again. Do I understand that it is for the purpose of considering certain amendments? If so, I should like to know what they are. I will not agree to have the bill recommitted to the committee for the purpose of delay.

Mr. BLAINE. I think it is very probable that if this bill shall be recommitted to the committee that its objectionable features can be eliminated. I am willing to have the amendments which I shall propose printed—I can not speak for other Senators; they perhaps will be willing to do the same thing—and let those amendments go to the committee, and give the committee an opportunity to revise and redraft the bill and take out of it the iniquities that are in it.

I repeat I do not wish to delay a vote upon this measure. If the Senator from South Dakota thinks that the bill can not be expedited by a recommital to the committee, I am not asking that it be recommitted at this time. I was just inquiring whether or not he would be willing to do so.

Mr. NORBECK. I appreciate the frankness of the Senator's inquiry.

Mr. BLAINE. In my opinion, I think that we could get much earlier action upon this bill if it were recommitted to the committee.

Mr. NORBECK. If I understand the Senator's view correctly, he will not under any circumstances support a bill that provides for the $1 hunting license; but I know of no other way in which to secure the necessary funds for the establishment of sanctuaries. The main question is, How can the funds be secured? I am sure every Senator understands this matter fully, and the question can be decided by a vote of this body. We must also keep in mind that the committee has considered this bill off and on for seven years. These various provisions have been carefully thrashed out in committee. I realize, of course, the Senator from Wisconsin has not been here during all that time, but the members of the committee have heard so much about this bill that I am sure they consider further hearings unnecessary. The Members have expressed themselves very often and very frankly.

Let me say, however, if the Senator from Wisconsin has in mind some plan that will prevent extermination of our migratory birds I hope he will introduce a bill covering the plan he has in mind. I shall be glad to confer with him at any time, but for the present I can not agree to have the bill recommitted to the committee.

I would appreciate it if the Senator would present his amendments and give the Senators an opportunity to study same.

I may state that there has developed some sentiment against certain features of this bill, especially the one requiring everybody to take out the migratory bird license prior to hunting. I have already introduced an amendment exempting boys up to 16 years of age from this burden. In that way this bill will conform pretty generally to the practice in the different States as to other hunting licenses.

Some Senators have expressed the opinion that if the Federal warden service is greatly enlarged by this bill that the law should limit their work as far as possible to the State of their residence. I accept the suggestion and have offered an amendment accordingly.

I am interested, first of all, in the establishment of bird refuges, and will sacrifice any other provision if need be. There is, in my judgment, however, a great need for better enforcement of the Federal game law. Twenty-eight Federal wardens can not cover 48 States, as they are now attempting to do.

It has also been suggested that no hunting whatever should be permitted on Federal game sanctuaries even when a great surplus of game accumulates. Personally, I have no objection to making the sanctuaries 100 per cent inviolate instead of permitting hunting on a small part when surplus game accumulates, as provided in this bill.

The shooting-ground provision was incorporated into the bill with the thought that it would strengthen the bill and give the general public, who pay the license fee, a chance to shoot the surplus birds. The wealthy have their shooting clubs. The poor man has no place to go.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I am convinced from the remarks of the Senator from South Dakota that if this bill shall be recommitted to the committee the things that he expresses as his desire may be accomplished, and the vicious and iniquitous features of the bill may be eliminated. The committee will then have an opportunity to report amendments that will perfect the bill as a conservation measure. However, I have no desire to delay action upon these other two important questions—the question of flood control and the question of farm relief.

The existing laws as to migratory birds are effective and efficient. There is no popular demand for this character of legislation. It is not approved by the real conservationists of the country. It is approved only by those who want to create sanctuaries to which migratory birds may be enticed and seduced for the purpose of killing them for sport, and for the replenishment of those birds in the interest of private shooting clubs.

Mr. President, the question of flood relief is tremendously important. I believe that question is paramount. The weeks are only short when another catastrophe may threaten the lower Mississippi Valley and the people living there. The flood waters will soon begin to rise in the upper reaches of the Mississippi Valley to inundate the communities and the people of the lower Mississippi Valley. Therefore there should be no delay in the consideration of the measure relating to flood control.

Moreover, the question of farm relief is also of paramount importance. Demands have been made upon Congress for legislation that will place agriculture on a parity with other industry, and yet there seems to be those coming from the agricultural areas in our country who are willing to consume the time of Congress in an endeavor to create sanctuaries for migratory game birds for the benefit of the few.

I do not propose to debate the migratory bird bill at this time, but I am sending to the clerk's desk an editorial from the Forest and Stream magazine, of the March, 1928, issue. This was the publication which started the movement which led to the founding of the Audubon Society and prompted the migratory bird law which we now have. I send the editorial to the Secretary's desk and ask that it may be read at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

BLIND POOL JOKER IN MIGRATORY BIRD LAW

The blind pool refuge bill is again before Congress. It has a good chance of being passed. The bureau officials in Washington, allied with the professional protectionists of New York City, have succeeded in tacking it onto the migratory bird law. The latter is a meritorious piece of legislation. The joker they have attached to it strikes at the heart of self-government. It throttles the splendid State game commissions that have been built up in many States and are being developed in others.

The bureau chiefs in Washington and their adroit associates in New York are intent upon getting into their own hands the game funds of the country. They have enlisted the support of Senator NORBECK, from South Dakota, chairman of the Agricultural Committee. The bill, through his influence, has been sent to the Senate.

If this bill is passed it will confer lawmaking powers upon the clerks of the Biological Survey. It clearly provides that the rules and regulations which they may make should have the force of law. It confers police powers upon the Secretary of Agriculture and his employees—something that was not even remotely contemplated when his department was organized.

If this bill is passed it will deny the citizen the right of trial in his own community. It authorizes a petty Federal official to drag a reputable citizen hundreds of miles for trial before a Federal official located in another State. The bill authorizes Federal officials to arrange settlements without trial. This provision is an incentive to dishonesty. It encourages petty officials to practice petty annoyances upon sportsmen whom they may find afield.

If this bill is passed it will enable a group of men in Washington to remove hundreds of thousands of dollars from the State in which it was collected and disburse it when and where they will.

This bill, in practically the same form, was defeated in the Sixty-seventh, Sixty-eighth, and Sixty-ninth Congresses.

Mr. Mondell, the Republican floor leader, in denouncing the game refuge bill, said: "I believe the measure is so far-reaching in its consequences, it would be so tremendously harmful in the long run to my country and to its people, that I can not support it or any part of it."

Mr. GARRETT, the Democratic floor leader, said he was opposed to the legislation, and asked: "How long do you think we can continue to yield to the blandishments, the propaganda, and the temptations of expediency in measures such as this."

Judge Ward, the Congressman from North Carolina, scored the bill as the crowning infamy of them all.

Ex-Senator Wadsworth, of New York, in a recent address said, "There has been built up at Washington a bureaucracy so vast and complicated that no one can understand the operations of the Government of the United States as it exists to-day. It is a bureaucracy which is not responsive to public sentiment. We are whittling at the structure established by the forefathers, and if we whittle long enough we shall destroy it."

Mr. Keith McCanse, State game commissioner of Missouri, says: "It is all wrong for the double license to be inflicted upon the hunters of the United States in order to create a tremendous fund for use of bureaucracy. Do we want to create in Washington another powerful Federal bureau, with its agents nosing into every nook of the land?"

If this bill becomes a law it will be because the sportsmen of this country and their representatives in Congress do not understand its far-reaching influence. (Editorial from the Forest and Stream Magazine of March, 1928, founders of the Audubon Society and the migratory bird law.)

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me for about two minutes?

Mr. JONES. Very well; I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am anxious to see the migratory birds protected. I have been in favor of that for a long time, but the bill now before us has some very objectionable features in it. The bill must be amended so that it will not discriminate against the boys and others who live out in the States along the creeks and lakes and rivers. It must not be drawn in favor of the big hunting clubs with their automatic guns. The bill has some provisions in it now that would work hardships upon those in the various States who would like occasionally to shoot a migratory bird, but so many birds have been included in the terms of the bill and in the list of so-called migratory birds that there is hardly any kind of bird left out of the bill for the average man out in the States to shoot at.

I read a story in a magazine a few days ago about a negro who was being tried for shooting a yellowhammer. The judge of the Federal court asked if he had shot a yellowhammer and the negro said, "Yes, sir." The judge said, "Then you plead guilty?" "No, sir." The judge said, "But the yellowhammer is a migratory bird." "No, sir," said the negro, "he is a yellowhammer." "Yes," said the judge, "but this fool law we have makes him a migratory bird." He said, "Judge, it ain't got no business making him a migratory bird. God Almighty made him a yellowhammer, and we have been knowing 'em as yellowhammers and shooting 'em as yellowhammers all our lifetime. Is you going to fine me for shooting a yellowhammer?" "Well," he said, "under this fool law I will have to fine you, but I am going to give you the lowest fine that is possible under the law"; and then he turned to the marshal and said, "Take this nigger out in the hall and let him get away." [Laughter.]

FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I appreciate very much the considerate attitude of the Senator from South Dakota, and I know that those who are especially interested in flood-control legislation appreciate his attitude.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3740) for the control of floods on the Mississippi River from the Head of Passes to Cape Girardeau, Mo., and for other purposes.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand that the migratory bird bill is withdrawn as the unfinished business if this motion is agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The migratory bird bill is not withdrawn as the unfinished business.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? The Senator from South Dakota, however, has expressed his willingness that for the present that the unfinished business may be superseded by the bill in charge of the Senator from Washington, known as the flood control bill.

Mr. SACKETT. That also includes the farm relief bill, following that, as I understood the Senator?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. He indicated that he would be willing to have the farm relief bill taken up when the flood control bill is disposed of.

Mr. SACKETT. Then, after those two bills are disposed of the migratory bird bill takes its place as the unfinished business?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No.

Mr. SACKETT. I wanted to understand from the Chair what the situation is.

Mr. MOSES. Is the bill to be displaced as the unfinished business?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly. The Senator from Washington has made a motion to proceed to the consideration of the flood control bill, which, if agreed to, will displace the unfinished business.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, as I understand, the migratory bird bill can not come back before the Senate unless the Senate orders it brought back.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understand the desire is to go on with the flood control measure, and if it is disposed of within the next day or two the agricultural appropriation bill will be taken up next, and then the farm relief bill; and it is the hope that the steering committee will suggest that the migratory bird bill shall be taken up afterwards.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the disposition of the flood control bill is going to take very long would it not be satisfactory to lay it temporarily aside and take up the agricultural appropriation bill? The reason why I ask the question is because there are some appropriations in that bill which ought to be made available just as quickly as possible.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me for a brief statement?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The bill that is to be brought before the Senate upon the motion of the Senator from Washington, if that motion prevails, represents the results of many conferences and compromises, and in my judgment will not require more than a few hours' debate. I think it entirely possible, if debate to-day is confined to the flood control bill, that the bill may be finally disposed of before the end of the present calendar day. I am certain that there is no disposition upon the part of any Senator on either side of the Chamber to prolong unduly the debate on the flood control bill, and I am morally sure that in any event the bill may be passed before the end of to-morrow.

In that view of the matter, I do not think the friends of the bill ought to be asked, before the bill has been brought before the Senate, to agree to lay it aside, either temporarily or otherwise, for the consideration of other measures. In my opinion, the flood control bill is of greater emergency importance than the agricultural appropriation bill. The latter bill is, of course, of great consequence; but I think the time has come when both Houses of Congress ought to devote themselves to the consideration and enactment of flood-control legislation.

We are nearing the probable end of this session. After the Senate has passed the Jones flood control bill it yet remains to be considered by the House of Representatives and in conference; and the best we can hope for is the passage of an adequate flood control bill at some time before the end of the present session.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield for a moment?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have not the floor. I return the floor to the Senator from Washington, and thank him for yielding to me.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no intention of asking that the flood control bill, if made the unfinished business, shall be temporarily laid aside to permit the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill. The Senator's anticipation was without foundation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the suggestion, or rather request, was made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. I realize that the Senator from Utah has not charge of the agricultural appropriation bill; but I wanted him to understand the situation, in view of his influence in legislation here.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I want to conclude in just a word my statement of the purpose as I understand it.

If the flood control bill is made the unfinished business and occupies only a few days, assuming that it is three or four days, I shall make no effort or request to have the agricultural appropriation bill considered during that time. As soon as that bill is disposed of, which I think will be done with considerable expedition, I shall ask to take up the agricultural appropriation bill; and at its conclusion I shall ask to have the farm relief bill made the unfinished business.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I thought the flood control bill was going to take some time, and that was the reason why I suggested—not requested—that when it was up for consideration if it could be temporarily laid aside it would not take very long to pass the agricultural bill. I have no desire to request it under the circumstances. If I had known that the bill was likely to be passed to-day or to-morrow, I would not have said a word about it.

Mr. STEPHENS and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. STEPHENS. I simply desire to say, in this connection, that several Senators who are deeply interested in flood relief, and who are quite anxious to have this bill passed as soon as possible, have agreed that so far as they are concerned the debate will be very short. I am sure no long speeches will be made on this subject; and as it has been suggested that we may be able to pass the bill some time to-morrow, I certainly think that is entirely probable.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, what is the use of borrowing trouble? Let us run along with the bill, and when something comes up we will meet it. Nobody is asking to lay it aside now, before it is laid before the Senate. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." If an attempt is made to lay it aside for the consideration of some other matter, we will consider that when we get to it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The first thing to do is to get the bill before the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3740, the flood control bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3740) for the control of floods on the Mississippi River from the Head of Passes to Cape Girardeau, Mo., and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. We had better have the bill read.

Mr. HARRISON. Everyone has read the bill.

PAVING OF INTERNATIONAL STREET, NOGALES, ARIZ.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I share the hope that the flood control bill will be passed speedily. I believe the control of the Mississippi River is a national problem and that the cost thereof should be paid by the United States. But even at the risk of delaying that bill for a couple of minutes, I am obliged to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business 641, Senate bill 2004, which is in the nature of an emergency bill and which was reported to the Senate last evening.

Mr. JONES. Will there be any discussion on it?

Mr. ASHURST. I am certain there will be none.

The bill proposes an appropriation of $60,000 to authorize the paving of the Federal strip known as International Street, at Nogales, Ariz. I ask leave to include in my remarks the report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which was submitted yesterday by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], the chairman of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The report (No. 633) submitted by Mr. KEYES on the 27th instant is as follows:

Mr. KEYES, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, submitted the following report on the bill introduced by Senator ASHURST (to accompany S. 2004):

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2004) authorizing the paving of the Federal strip known as International Street, adjacent to Nogales, Ariz., having considered the same, reports favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

This bill, if enacted, provides for the grading and paving of the "Federal strip," belonging to the United States, and known as International Street, along the international boundary line between Mexico and the United States and adjacent to the city of Nogales, Ariz.

No objection to the proposed legislation is made by the Secretary of the Treasury, whose letter, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, regarding this measure, is herewith appended.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 3, 1928.

CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
United States Senate.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Reference is made to your request of January 7 for a report on bill S. 2004, authorizing the paving of the Federal strip known as International Street, belonging to the United States, along the international boundary line between Mexico and the United States and adjacent to the city of Nogales, Ariz., with the necessary retaining walls, storm sewers, and other items necessary in connection with the paving and including lighting standards, at a cost not to exceed $60,000.

The estimated cost of the work as covered by the bill referred to is $60,000.

It may be added that the Director of the Bureau of the Budget states that the action of this department in advising the committee as to the estimated cost of the work, without recommendation as to the merits of the proposed legislation is not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

Very truly yours,

A. W. MELLON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds also referred this measure to the Department of Labor for an opinion, and the reply of that department is herewith appended and made a part of this report:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECOND ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, February 18, 1928.

Hon. HENRY W. KEYES,
Chairman Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR KEYES: In response to your letter of the 7th ultimo, addressed to the Secretary of Labor, requesting the views of the Department of Labor relative to bill S. 2004, authorizing the paving of Federal strip known as International Street, adjacent to Nogales, Ariz., I have the honor to advise that while this department does not feel disposed to urge the passage of the bill, it concurs in the views expressed in the letter received from the immigration inspector in charge in Nogales, dated January 21, 1928, a copy of which is inclosed.

Sincerely yours,

W. W. HUSBAND,
Second Assistant Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
IMMIGRATION SERVICE,
Nogales, Ariz., January 21, 1928.

DISTRICT DIRECTOR,
Immigration Service, El Paso, Tex.:

With reference to bureau letter No. 55606/894, of December 28, 1927, forwarded to this office under your indorsement No. 5002/1095, of the 3d instant, concerning an appropriation of $60,000 for the purpose of paving and improving the Federal strip at Nogales, Ariz., between the east side of Nelson Avenue and the top of the hill beyond West Street, there are inclosed herewith three copies of blue print showing the Federal strip, the boundary line, and the part of Nogales, Ariz., and Nogales, Sonora, Mexico, adjacent to the boundary.

By the proclamation of the Presidents of the United States of June 25, 1897 (30 Stat. 1765), and May 27, 1907 (35 Stat. 2136), there was reserved from entry or settlement and set apart as a public reserve the 60-foot zone adjacent to the international boundary line referred to above as the "Federal strip," and such zone is reserved from every use except as a highway. Such action was taken on the recommendation of the International Boundary Commission and in order to clear the zone from buildings, some of which were partly in Mexico and partly in the United States, officials of the Department of the Interior, which it is understood has charge of the zone, had to appeal to the Federal court, which sent the United States marshal and his deputies to Nogales to clear the zone. The zone is policed by the city of Nogales. The zone is known as "International Street." The city and State courts exercise jurisdiction over International Street.

By reference to print, it will be noted that the 60-foot strip on the Mexican side adjacent to the boundary line is known as "Calle Camou." There are no buildings on this zone.

The city of Nogales desires Congress to appropriate $60,000 for the purpose of paving and improving the Federal strip, or International Street, as it is called, from the east side of Nelson Avenue to the top of the hill beyond West Street, a distance of approximately 2,225 feet, as shown on the blue prints. It was decided by an election held in Nogales, Ariz., on November 8, 1927, to enter upon an improving and paving program at a cost of about $750,000; the program calls for the paving and improving of all the streets running north and south and terminating at International Street. The paving to be laid will be 5½ or 6 inches thick and will be laid on top of the present dirt streets. The elevation of Nogales, Sonora, Mexico, is higher than that of Nogales, Ariz.; consequently, when it rains in Nogales, Mexico, the water flows into Nogales, Ariz. The matter of paving Calle Camou is being considered by the Mexican Government, and it is not known at this time whether it will be paved or not. In any event, if International Street is not paved, it would become a mudhole during the rainy season, owing to the flow of the water from Mexico, and during the dry season it would naturally become dusty.

There are two crossings in the city of Nogales through which aliens enter from Mexico, i. e., the Morley Avenue crossing and the Grand Avenue crossing; these crossings never close and are guarded by immigration officers and employees 24 hours each day. The inspectors refer aliens to be inspected to the immigration inspector quarters, which are located in the Southern Pacific station building, between Morley and Grand Avenues, as indicated by the words "Department Immigration." Aliens going from the Morley and Grand Avenue crossings to the inspection quarters must necessarily traverse International Street. If this street is not paved and drained it will be muddy during the rainy season and dusty at other times of the year, unless the city of Nogales continues to sprinkle it. Immigration, customs, and officials of the Federal Horticultural Board on duty at the Morley and Grand Avenue crossings necessarily walk back and forth in front of the "garitas" from the east to the west side of the streets in performing their duties, making it highly desirable to have the streets paved so that it will not be necessary for them to walk in mud or dust. The collector of customs concurs with the writer that the immigration, customs, and other officials serving on the line could render more efficient service if International Street were paved. The collector favors the paving and improving program.

At the present time there is a wire fence along the boundary line about 2½ feet north of the line on the American side, constructed by the War Department. In many places this fence is in bad condition, making it possible for persons easily to enter the United States through the fence. In some places the line is rough and uneven, and it is difficult to keep the fence in repair; in many places the wires have been cut, and from the appearance of travel many people evidently enter through such places. As a part of the proposed improvement, a well-constructed, substantial, durable fence should be erected to discourage illegal entries.

Aside from any benefits accruing to the Immigration Service by reason of the proposed improvements and paving, International Street should be paved to harmonize with the paving which will be done by the city of Nogales. From a civic standpoint, therefore, it is highly desirable to have International Street paved and improved.

R. M. COUSAR, Inspector in Charge.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill referred to by the Senator from Arizona—Senate bill 2004?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2004) authorizing the paving of the Federal strip known as International Street, adjacent to Nogales, Ariz., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the grading and paving of the Federal strip of land known as International Street, belonging to the United States, along the international boundary line between Mexico and the United States and adjacent to the city of Nogales, Ariz., said paving to extend from the east side of Nelson Avenue to the top of the hill beyond West Street, with the necessary retaining walls, storm sewers, the installation of an ornamental lighting system, and other items necessary in connection therewith, at a limit of cost of $60,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FLOOD CONTROL

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3740) for the control of floods on the Mississippi River from the Head of Passes to Cape Girardeau, Mo., and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, it has been suggested that most of the Members of the Senate have read the flood control bill, and that it is not necessary to take the time of the Senate to have it read. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the project for the flood control of the Mississippi River in its alluvial valley and for its improvement from the Head of Passes to Cape Girardeau, Mo., in accordance with the engineering plan set forth and recommended in the report submitted by the Chief of Engineers to the Secretary of War dated December 1, 1927, and printed in House Document No. 90, Seventieth Congress, first session, is hereby adopted and authorized to be prosecuted under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers: Provided, That a board to consist of the Secretary of War, the Chief of Engineers, the president of the Mississippi River Commission, and two civil engineers to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, whose compensation shall be fixed by the President and be paid out of the appropriations made to carry on this project, is hereby created; and such board is authorized and directed to consider the engineering differences between the adopted project and that recommended by the Mississippi River Commission in its special report dated November 28, 1927, and after such study, and such further surveys as may be necessary, to determine the action to be taken upon the same, and its decision upon all matters considered by it shall be followed in carrying out the project herein adopted: Provided further, That if after considering any controverted problem between the Mississippi River Commission project and the project herein adopted the board shall be of the opinion that a new method should be followed, it shall submit its recommendation thereon to Congress: Provided further, That such surveys shall be made between Baton Rouge, La., and Cape Girardeau, Mo., as the board may deem necessary to enable it to ascertain and determine the best method of securing flood relief in addition to levees, before any flood-control works other than levees and revetments are undertaken on that portion of the river: Provided further, That all diversion works and outlets constructed under the provisions of this act shall be built in a manner and of a character which will as fully and amply protect the adjacent lands as those protected by levees constructed on the main river. The sum of $325,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated for this purpose.

SEC. 2. That it is hereby declared to be the sense of Congress that the principle of local contribution toward the cost of flood-control work, which has been incorporated in all previous national legislation on the subject, is sound, as recognizing the special interest of the local population in its own protection, and as a means of preventing inordinate requests for unjustified items of work having no material national interest. As a full compliance with this principle in view of the great expenditure estimated at approximately $292,000,000, heretofore made by the local interests in the alluvial valley of the Mississippi River for protection against the floods of that river; in view of the extent of national concern in the control of these floods in the interests of national prosperity, the flow of interstate commerce, and the movement of the United States mails; and, in view of the gigantic scale of the project, involving flood waters of a volume and flowing from a drainage area largely outside the States most affected, and far exceeding those of any other river in the United States, no additional local contribution to the project herein adopted is required.

SEC. 3. Except when authorized by the Secretary of War upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, no money appropriated under authority of this act shall be expended on the construction of any item of the project until local interests have given assurances satisfactory to the Secretary of War that they will (a) maintain all flood-control works after their completion, except controlling and regulating spillway structures, including special relief levees; maintenance includes normally such matters as cutting grass, removal of weeds, local drainage, and minor repairs of main river levees; (b) agree to accept land turned over to them under the provisions of section 4.

SEC. 4. Just compensation shall be paid by the United States for all property used, taken, damaged, or destroyed in carrying out the flood-control plan provided for herein, including all property located within the area of the spillways, flood ways, or diversion channels herein provided, and the rights of way thereover, and the flowage rights thereon, and also including all expenditures by persons, corporations, and public-service corporations made necessary to adjust or conform their property, or to relocate same because of the spillways, flood ways, or diversion channels herein provided: Provided, That in all cases where the execution of the flood-control plan results in benefits to any person, or persons, or corporations, municipal or private, such benefits shall be taken into consideration by way of reducing the amount of compensation to be paid.

The Secretary of War may cause proceedings to be instituted for the acquirement by condemnation of any lands, easements, or rights of way needed in carrying out this project, the said proceedings to be instituted in the United States district court for the district in which the land, easement, or right of way is located. In all such proceedings the court, for the purpose of ascertaining the value of the property and assessing the compensation to be paid, shall appoint three commissioners, whose award, when confirmed by the court, shall be final. When the owner of any land, easement, or right of way shall fix a price for the same which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, is reasonable, he may purchase the same at such price; and the Secretary of War is also authorized to accept donations of lands, easements, and rights of way required for this project. The provisions of sections 5 and 6 of the river and harbor act of July 18, 1918, are hereby made applicable to the acquisition of lands, easements, or rights of way needed for works of flood control: Provided, That any land acquired under the provisions of this section shall be turned over without cost to the ownership of States or local interests.

SEC. 5. Subject to the approval of the heads of the several executive departments concerned, the Secretary of War, on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, may engage the services and assistance of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Geological Survey, or other mapping agencies of the Government, in the preparation of maps required in furtherance of this project, and funds to pay for such services may be allotted from appropriations made under authority of this act.

SEC. 6. In an emergency, funds appropriated under authority of this act may be expended for the prosecution of such works for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River as have heretofore been authorized and are not included in the present project; or for the maintenance of any levee when it is demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War that the levee can not be adequately maintained by local interests.

SEC. 7. That the sum of $5,000,000 is authorized to be appropriated as an emergency fund to be allotted by the Secretary of War on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, in rescue work or in the repair or maintenance of any flood-control work on any tributaries of the Mississippi River below Cape Girardeau, Mo., threatened or destroyed by flood.

SEC. 8. The project herein authorized shall be prosecuted by the Mississippi River Commission under the direction of the Secretary of War and supervision of the Chief of Engineers and subject to the provisions of this act. It shall perform such functions and through such agencies as they shall designate after consultation and discussion with the president of the commission. For all other purposes the existing laws governing the constitution and activities of the commission shall remain unchanged. The commission shall make inspection trips of such frequency and duration as will enable it to acquire first-hand information as to conditions and problems germane to the matter of flood control within the area of its jurisdiction; and on such trips of inspection ample opportunity for hearings and suggestions shall be afforded persons affected by or interested in such problems. The president of the commission shall be the executive officer thereof and shall have the qualifications now prescribed by law for the Assistant Chief of Engineers, shall have the title brigadier general, Corps of Engineers, and shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier general while actually assigned to such duty: Provided, That the present incumbent of the office may be appointed a brigadier general of the Army, retired, and shall be eligible for the position of president of the commission if recalled to active service by the President under the provisions of existing law.

SEC. 9. The creation of any material obstruction not affirmatively authorized by Congress to the flood-discharge capacity of such portion of the alluvial valley of the Mississippi River below Cape Girardeau as is embraced in the project adopted by section 1 of this act is hereby prohibited, and it shall not be lawful to build or commence the building of any levee or other structure in said portion of the alluvial valley or in any flood way therein that will materially affect the flood flow in said alluvial valley or in any flood way therein unless the work has been recommended by the Chief of Engineers and authorized by the Secretary of War. Any person or corporation who shall violate any provision of this section is guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,500 nor less than $500 or by imprisonment (in the case of a natural person) not exceeding one year, or by both such punishments, in the discretion of the court; and the removal of any structures, or parts of structures, erected in violation of this section may be enforced by injunction or other process in the district court of the United States in the district in which such structures may exist, and proceedings to this end may be instituted under the direction of the Attorney General. The provisions of section 17 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, are hereby made applicable to this section.

SEC. 10. That it is the sense of Congress that the surveys of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, authorized pursuant to House Document No. 308, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, be prosecuted as speedily as practicable, and the Secretary of War, through the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, is directed to prepare and submit to Congress at the earliest practicable date projects for flood control on all tributary streams (including such of their main tributaries as may be deemed necessary) of the Mississippi River system subject to destructive floods: Provided, That before transmitting such reports to Congress the same shall be presented to the board created in section 1 of this act, and its conclusions and recommendations thereon shall be transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of War with his report.

SEC. 11. That the Secretary of War shall cause the Mississippi River Commission to make an examination and survey of the Mississippi River below Cape Girardeau, Mo., (a) at places where levees have heretofore been constructed on one side of the river and the lands on the opposite side have been thereby subjected to greater overflow, and where, without unreasonably restricting the flood channel, levees can be constructed to reduce the extent of this overflow, and where the construction of such levees is economically justified, and report thereon to the Congress as soon as practicable with such recommendations as the commission may deem advisable; (b) with a view to determining the estimated effects, if any, upon lands lying between the river and adjacent hills by reason of overflow of such lands caused by the construction of levees at other points along the Mississippi River, and determining the equities of the owners of such lands and the value of the same, and the commission shall report thereon to the Congress as soon as practicable with such recommendation as it may deem advisable.

SEC. 12. All laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the above are hereby repealed.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I agree fully with the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] a few moments ago, and I am going to take very little of the time of the Senate in discussing the bill. I think it is scarcely necessary to take the time of the Senate to describe the flood conditions of 1927; but it may not be amiss to call attention to the peculiar situation of the Mississippi Valley.

Everybody knows that the Mississippi River drains about two-thirds of the territory of the United States. From the summit of the Rockies on the west, and from the summit of the Alleghenies on the east, the waters of the rains that fall and the snows that melt find their way to that great drainage channel known as the Mississippi River. These waters converge into one channel at Cairo, Ill., and sweep on to the Gulf of Mexico, added to by the St. Francis, the White, the Arkansas, the Red, and the Atchafalaya from the west, and the Yazoo from the east. If the high waters of all these streams should occur at the same time, the devastation would be appalling.

The flood of 1927 did not come from the headwaters of the Mississippi and its upper tributaries, but largely from an abnormal rainfall on its middle and lower reaches, together with an abnormal and unusual volume of water in its western tributaries below Cairo.

The most immediate and pressing need for flood control is on the stretch of the river from Cairo down to the Gulf. This grows out of the natural conditions thus briefly described. This is the phase of the problem we especially seek to deal with in this bill. In addition, we take those preliminary steps necessary to a wise treatment of flood problems on the tributaries and further reaches of the Mississippi.

The problem is a very complicated one. Communities are affected in diverse ways. Individual and corporate interests very naturally want the fullest possible protection from damages and loss. Natural selfishness leads all interests to seek the fullest possible protection and complete reimbursement for actual or anticipated loss and injury. The methods proposed to do this are many and diverse. The committee has tried to give all phases of the problem patient, careful, and considerate study.

Very likely we have not wholly pleased anybody, but we have sought to work out a reasonably fair, just, and adequate way to meet the situation from Cairo down so far as it can be met locally. What we propose to do will coordinate with any further development that may be deemed wise and desirable. The bill provides for the most pressing unit of any general flood-control plan for the Mississippi River system that may be found wise and desirable to carry out.

The solution of the problem of flood control is largely an engineering one to be worked out by experts. When this disaster came, and as soon as it was possible to proceed, the President directed the engineering agencies of the Government to study the problem and submit their plans for its solution as soon as possible. This was done. Two plans were submitted, one by the Corps of Engineers of the Army through its chief, General Jadwin, and one by the Mississippi River Commission. Each had the study, advice, experience, knowledge, and ability of civil as well as Army engineers. Fundamentally they agree, but they differ over very important details.

The committee is not composed of engineering experts. So far as I know, there is not an engineer on it. Speaking for myself alone, I frankly say that I am not competent to pass upon these differences.

The committee adopted the plan of the Army engineers, commonly referred to as the Jadwin plan, which was recommended to Congress by the President. Believing that the recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission are entitled to great weight, not only because of the engineering experience of its members but because of their intimate knowledge of the Mississippi River situation, and that it is highly desirable to get the best possible solution of this most important problem, we have provided a board to work out the engineering differences between these two plans, as well as to pass upon other matters not directly involved in this particular situation. This board is composed of the Secretary of War, the Chief of Engineers, the president of the Mississippi River Commission, and two civil engineers. The two civil engineers are to be selected by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Their compensation will be fixed by the President. It will not be necessary for them to devote all their time to this work, but they will be called in from time to time to consider the differences between the two engineering plans, and to pass upon these various phases of the problem as they arise or may be reached in the progress of the work. Under these conditions it will be possible for the President to secure the services of the best engineers in the country.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. I think the Senator's statement just now has cleared up an objection that has been made by some very high talent in the civil engineering world. For example, the vice president of the American Civil Engineering Association lives in my town and is regarded as a great authority on matters of this kind; in fact, he built the Dayton-Miami conservancy plant, as the Senator knows. I have had many conversations with him, in the course of which he said that when he started first on that plan he had a certain well-defined view in mind. Later on he had to change his view to an entirely different one from that which he originally entertained. He has been criticizing our plan for not identifying with the commission some talent outside of the Army. I understand now that has been done under the terms of the bill?

Mr. JONES. Yes; that has been done. There will be two civil engineers on the board of five members.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator will permit me, I have a letter from the gentleman to whom I have referred, in which he said that he has examined the bill. But evidently the bill originally did not include two outside civil engineers?

Mr. JONES. Originally the bill included but one civil engineer outside of the Army.

Mr. FESS. He makes the statement that one suggestion he would like to make is that the board should have a representative from civil engineering talent of the country outside of the Army. That suggestion has been met, as I understand the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. That has been met. I may say that when the bill was first introduced by me there was an effort made to carry out directly the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers. That bill did not provide for this board at all. Then in another bill, after further consideration, we provided a board to be composed of the Chief of Engineers, the president of the Mississippi River Commission, and one civil engineer. On further consideration by the committee and after studying the whole problem more carefully, we finally unanimously reached the conclusion that the board should consist of five members, with two civil engineers upon it. That seems to be, so far as I can learn, generally satisfactory.

Mr. FESS. Knowing the talent of this gentleman as I do, he having lived in my home town for years and having been identified in that region for many years with this character of work, I was impressed with his objection that we ought not to limit the membership of the board to the Army engineers, although without a criticism of that body of men, of course. Since he has made that as his only objection, and since that objection has been removed, I have not anything further to say because I do not have any expert knowledge on the subject and I am only desirous of voting for the measure after it shall have been whipped into final shape.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. I want to be clear as to the jurisdiction of the board which it is proposed to set up. Am I to understand that it is the final court of appeal, that the board will decide what engineering process shall be followed where there is a conflict between the two reports, and that that decision will settle the matter?

Mr. JONES. The bill provides that their decision upon those differences shall be final.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to his colleague?

Mr. JONES. I am glad to yield.

Mr. DILL. I may preface my question by saying that I have not been able to give much attention to the proposed legislation as yet. I would like to know whether the plan proposed by the Army engineers and approved by the terms of the bill now before us is what might be called a reservoir plan, or a levee plan, or just what kind of method is proposed to control the flood waters?

Mr. JONES. The Senator did not hear my opening statement, I assume. We deal with the problem only from Cairo down. The Army engineering plan provided for levees and spillways. The Mississippi River Commission plan agreed fundamentally with the Army engineering plan. There is no dealing with reservoirs in the bill, except a provision for surveys upon the tributary streams, which will doubtless bring in a recommendation, either favorable or unfavorable, as to reservoirs, but under the project adopted by the terms of the bill there are no reservoirs to be constructed.

Mr. DILL. And none are provided to be constructed at all?

Mr. JONES. No; just the survey.

Mr. DILL. But no plans?

Mr. JONES. No plans and no work.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, may I inquire what the plan provides with respect to surveys?

Mr. JONES. I shall come to that a little later. I am going to take up the bill now, rather section by section, so as to give Senators a general idea as to the terms of the measure.

Mr. DILL. I thought the Senator had finished his statement.

Mr. JONES. No; I have not finished.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator intend to discuss the question of cost?

Mr. JONES. I am going to mention that right now. The bill authorizes the appropriation of $325,000,000 to carry out the project. I want to say frankly to the Senate that in my judgment the cost will be considerably greater than that. The Chief of Engineers gave an estimate as to what the cost would be with the Mississippi River Commission plan and the Jadwin plan harmonized. His estimate is from $305,000,000 to a little over $500,000,000. The estimate of the Mississippi River Commission for the project which it recommends is about $407,000,000. The report which it submitted suggested a broader project, the ultimate cost of which is estimated to be about $775,000,000, but it did not have the data necessary to adopt that proposed project as a definite one. So it recommended a smaller project, the estimated cost of which, as I understand it, will be $407,000,000.

That indicates the range of the possible cost that the proposition may be to the Government. It may run to $500,000,000. In the bill we authorize the appropriation of $325,000,000. I have no doubt whatever, as the work is carried on, if we pass the pending bill and adopt the project, that it is going to be completed. Congress will not hesitate to authorize any additional sum that may be necessary to complete this very vital work. I have not any question about that at all, so if it requires $500,000,000 Congress will authorize that amount of money.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Washington if this is a straight authorization or a straight appropriation?

Mr. JONES. It is just an authorization. We do not attempt in this bill to make the actual appropriation.

Mr. OVERMAN. When the appropriation bill comes before the Senate before we adjourn at this session, we will undoubtedly appropriate the entire amount which is authorized by the bill now before us?

Mr. JONES. Oh, no. The Mississippi River Commission plan, my recollection is, estimated that they would get $25,000,000 the first year, and then $40,000,000 a year. Under General Jadwin's plan it will be about the same amount.

Mr. OVERMAN. Therefore the Committee on Appropriations will recommend an appropriation of twenty-five to thirty-five million dollars—as much as estimated—for the work to be done the first year?

Mr. JONES. I would think so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Do the limits of cost suggested by the Senator include the cost of the overflow of from a million to two million acres of land and the purchase of rights of way or easements over the same?

Mr. JONES. Yes; the Mississippi River Commission plan includes in the estimate of $407,000,000 damages for rights of way, flowage, and so on. The General Jadwin plan submitted to Congress, which estimated the cost to be, I think, about $290,000,000, differed very materially from the Mississippi River Commission plan in that particular. That accounted for the much lower estimate they originally submitted.

We have provision in the bill for condemnation of rights of way, flowage rights, and so on. We feel that under the constitutional provision no private property can be taken for public use without compensation. We could not avoid that if we desired to do so. We have put a provision in, which I will explain, as the Senator has asked the question, expressly requiring that benefits shall be offset against damages found. We feel that is as far as Congress could possibly go. If we sought to pass legislation authorizing the taking of private property without compensation, the courts would not uphold such a provision.

Mr. KING. Does the bill provide that there shall be no contributions by States or by irrigation districts?

Mr. JONES. I am coming to that proposition right now.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has indicated that under the Mississippi River Commission plan, actually recommended, the cost would be something over $400,000,000.

Mr. JONES. I think $407,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. But the Mississippi River Commission outlined a much broader program.

Mr. JONES. That is what I said—that it would cost about $475,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. And we would authorize in this bill the survey of the various schemes that are involved in this general proposition.

Mr. JONES. It even goes further than that.

Mr. SIMMONS. If there are favorable reports in the end, the whole project will cost something near $700,000,000.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, in the end the cost may be even far greater than that. The entire cost of taking care of the whole flood situation in the Mississippi Valley will cost more than that. We must face that. But the adoption of further projects will rest entirely with Congress. As I said a moment ago, we are dealing with the very essential unit of any general flood control.

It may be found that after this is properly dealt with it may not be necessary to go much further. It may be found that we will have to go very much further, with increased cost, of course.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is this a proposition for the reclamation of lands, or merely for the purpose of controlling the waters of the Mississippi River so that they shall not inundate contiguous territory?

Mr. JONES. I think I can state that it is for the latter purpose the Senator has mentioned. It is to control the floods of the Mississippi River from Cairo down.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me—and I am asking for information—I am not able to understand how there could be such a great disparity between the minimum and the maximum costs indicated. An able Senator speaking a few days ago, as I understood him, said that the cost might be a billion dollars, and the Senator from Washington, who now has the floor, has stated that a plan has been suggested which will cost $775,000,000, and perhaps more.

Mr. JONES. That is for going away up the tributary streams, especially up the White and the St. Francis and the Arkansas Rivers.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. As to the tributaries, the bill directs that plans be made for the control of floods on tributary streams of the Mississippi and their main tributaries as and when deemed necessary. It follows that the plans for the various respective tributaries will be prepared and submitted to the Congress. In addition to that, they must be submitted to the board created under the provisions of the bill and transmitted to Congress for its future action. It is not possible, in my judgment, to determine now what plans will be presented for the tributaries and, consequently, what costs will be involved.

Mr. KING. I thank the Senator, but if I may say so—and the Senator will pardon me—some of us who have not had the opportunity of studying this question as have the able Senator from Arkansas and others, when we are confronted with a proposition where the maximum and the minimum costs are so widely variant, as already indicated, we are anxious to know what we are about to commit the Government to, and we are trying to ascertain just what the plan now is and what it possibly might culminate in, and if it should cost a billion dollars ultimately just what the plan would be that would call for such an enormous expenditure.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator's question can not be answered in complete detail, for the simple reason that the plans as they will affect the tributaries have not been prepared, and it is therefore impossible to determine what works they will contemplate and what the cost of those works will be.

Mr. KING. I can comprehend that. I would like to ask one other question. Leaving out the tributaries and considering only the work which General Jadwin and other engineers who have given this subject attention think are necessary, what will be the cost?

Mr. JONES. As I said a moment ago, fundamentally there is but little difference. The Mississippi River Commission estimated the cost of its smaller project at $407,000,000. General Jadwin estimated the cost of what he originally proposed at something like $290,000,000. There was a difference between the two plans in one particular of about $100,000,000. General Jadwin, on what is known as the Boeuf spillway, one of the important parts of this project, estimated only a little over $7,000,000 to take care of damages to rights of way and matters like that. In other words, his contention is that there is a natural flowage right there, and that the people have no legal right to claim any damages if the Government floods it. The Mississippi River Commission estimated the damages there at something over $100,000,000. That accounts really for a hundred million dollars difference between the two plans.

Mr. KING. I confess that I was startled when I was told by a Senator that it might be necessary to submerge at times, and to acquire, therefore, an easement over 2,000,000 acres of land. Those lands heretofore in some sections have not been of very great value, and in other places they have been of great value. There is no doubt that if the Government seeks to condemn them they will have great value. The necessity of the purchase by the Government of 2,000,000 acres of ground, or the purchase of the right to overflow it, will entail an enormous cost; and I was wondering just what proportion of these large estimates being submitted by the Senator was to cover the cost of acquiring lands in fee or easements over the same.

Mr. JONES. We have to get these rights of way and, as I said, there is a difference of a hundred million between the two plans in the very particular the Senator is talking about.

Mr. KING. I confess, not being familiar with the matter, I was startled by the suggestion that we would need 2,000,000 acres of land. I thought we were shoring up and leveeing, if I may use the expression, the banks of the river so as to make it navigable and to protect the lands contiguous from being overflowed.

Mr. JONES. The proposition the Senator has in mind is involved in what is known as the Boeuf flood way, which would be a spillway to divert water from the Mississippi River and flow it, I think, 150 or 160 miles. According to the Jadwin plan, the flood way would be several miles wide, while under the Mississippi River Commission plan there would be levees constructed to bring it, my recollection is, about 3 miles wide; but for a distance of 140 or 150 or 160 miles. Under the Jadwin plan it would cover, I think, over 2,000,000 acres of land.

General Jadwin contends that that land is overflowed now, and that therefore there is a sort of natural flowage right, and there would be a question there for the courts to determine.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. It occurred to me, in reference to some inquiry by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that it perhaps had already been pointed out that it would not be feasible for Congress to specify in legislation the exact lines that the levees and spillways should take, and rather than to make a hard and fast requirement like that this board is to be created, composed of the Secretary of War, the Chief of Engineers, the chairman of the Mississippi River Commission, and two civilian engineers, to settled the differences that exist between the Jadwin plan and the commission plan. They are authorized, if they find that some new method different from either of those plans may be required, or in certain instances improvements may be made, to report to Congress, and then Congress will determine upon any further or different plan.

Under that arrangement it remains for experience to show and for demonstrations to indicate exactly what is the best method to pursue in solving the problem. Therefore we can not fix a limit of final cost, but we know what we are going to require to begin with pretty well, and as the work progresses we will be in a position to get reports from this board, which will perhaps modify both the Jadwin plan and the Mississippi River Commission plan.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida has partially answered the question I was going to propound. I want to see if I correctly understand the scope of the pending measure. Would the authorization of the appropriation of $325,000,000 limit the activities of the Government to work up as far as Cairo and not permit the engineers, even though the board decided it to be wise, to start in and work along the tributaries?

Mr. JONES. If the board decides, as the Senator from Florida has just said, that the proposition should be dealt with in an entirely different way from that suggested by the Jadwin report or the Mississippi River Commission report, then it must submit its conclusions to Congress.

Mr. EDGE. In other words, if they discover, after they undertake the proposal as outlined here, that it is not the wisest thing to do, before they could actually spend any of this money attempting to control tributaries it would be necessary to come back to Congress. Is that correct?

Mr. JONES. Yes; it would be necessary. They will not go into the tributaries at all except as we have required them to do so under this survey provision.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is it not true, I ask the Senator from Washington, that two specific plans have been suggested? We adopt the Jadwin plan, then we appoint this board, and the board can change the Jadwin plan in any particular that they desire within the limitation of the other plan presented by the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. JONES. This board is supposed to have it.

As I said a while ago, fundamentally the two plans are the same. They differ, however, in important details, and it is the purpose of this board and its function to harmonize those differences; in other words, their action might finally make this project substantially the same as that recommended by the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. SIMMONS. Exactly; but it can not go any further; this harmonizing board is held within and is to act within these limitations.

Mr. JONES. If in harmonizing the differences they say, "We can not approve either the suggestion by the Army engineers or by the Mississippi River Commission, but we think in this particular problem a new plan should be followed," then they must report back to Congress.

Mr. EDGE. But they are authorized, and very properly so, if I am correct in the analysis, to make further surveys?

Mr. JONES. They are authorized to make any further surveys that may be necessary to enable them to reach a correct conclusion as to the differences.

Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], I see, has been called from the Chamber, and I intended to refer, and I will now refer, to the question of contribution.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Washington goes into that, in regard to the reservoir question, I desire to say that it was represented to me that certain sections of the valley that had been reclaimed and are now populated, should be regarded as normally or really swamp sections, that they may be permanently below the safety level and should be used as reservoirs; for example, where one tributary enters the river there may be a large area which should be secured as a permanent reservoir. We usually speak of reservoirs at the source of the river; but this is a case where lowlands have been reclaimed which are naturally too low to be in the sphere of habitation. Is the commission authorized to do anything along that line?

Mr. JONES. Within the limits of the differences between the Mississippi River Commission and the Jadwin plan; but neither of those plans suggests anything that the Senator refers to. The bill, in section 2, affirms the principle of contribution; but the committee have come to this conclusion: We find that the people of the States below Cairo immediately affected have already contributed for levee and other protection work almost $300,000,000; so the bill makes a declaration to the effect that that is ample contribution upon the part of those people, and that no further contribution should be required of them.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me further?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Contribution is one of the important features of the permanent policy. It seems to have been the judgment of the House of Representatives and of the Senate as to all matters of Federal aid that there ought to be at least a small contribution so as to recognize the principle, on the theory that the States would not ask for as much if they were making contributions as they might ask if there was no obligation of that kind. That seems to have been the principle we have been working on; and I have had in mind that there ought to be a recognition of that principle in this instance. Generally speaking, of course, this is a national problem, and I would not hesitate to vote for the Government undertaking its solution; but, according to the statement of the Senator from Washington, that principle has not been abandoned.

Mr. JONES. It has not been.

Mr. FESS. The contribution has already been made?

Mr. JONES. That is the declaration of the bill, and that was the conclusion of the committee.

Mr. President, I realize that there may be very sharp differences of opinion with reference to the principle of contribution, and I am not going to argue that proposition. I hope that we shall avoid it, because there is room for endless discussion with reference to it. I do not think, however, that it is involved in the problem with which we are confronted. We find those people have contributed, as I have stated, almost $300,000,000, and the committee say that is enough. That whole question will probably be opened when we come to pass upon the expansion of the reclamation work; when we come to consider other projects that may be proposed. But so far as the immediate problem is concerned, the principle of contribution has been fully complied with, in our judgment.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, right there I desire to say that I am inclined to agree with the Senator on the proposition he has just stated, but he indicates—and I want to see if I have made a correct interpretation of what he meant—that should the work contemplated be extended into the tributaries, not alone for the purpose of controlling possible floods but more or less for development as well, he would not consider that the policy very properly set forth in this bill for the purpose of controlling floods should be maintained.

Mr. JONES. I myself am strongly for that, but there is a difference of opinion as to that question, and I do not think it is necessary for us to raise the question in connection with this bill, because under the project proposed the work will not go into the tributaries.

Mr. EDGE. That is as I understand the Senator, and that is the reason I have asked these direct questions, in order to be absolutely clear about it.

Mr. JONES. That is correct. I want Senators to feel perfectly free to ask any questions that they may desire, and I wish to answer such questions as fully and as well as I can.

I think probably I ought to say right here that the other bill which was reported by the committee required the communities to contribute up to the extent of what is known as the 1914 commission standard or grade. Under that plan they have been contributing a third of the levee construction cost. Most of the levees have been brought up to that standard; some of them have not been brought up to it; but the committee thought—and that seemed to be agreeable at the time to Senators from the States affected—that the communities should contribute whatever was necessary in the future to bring the work up to the standard. That would have meant, according to the Chief of Engineers, additional burdens upon the people there as follows:

If the Jadwin plan were adopted, it would mean a little over $4,000,000 additional contributions; if the Mississippi River Commission plan were adopted, it would mean a little more than $15,000,000 contributions. Now $4,000,000 or $15,000,000 are not very much when contemplating a $300,000,000 or $400,000,000 project, either when considered as a contribution or as a relief from contribution. Upon further consideration the committee decided to eliminate that phase of the contribution proposition. So we have relieved the people under the one plan of an additional contribution of $4,000,000, which, as I have said, is insignificant in the case of a project that will cost as much as this one will, and, under the other plan, of $15,000,000. I do not think, therefore, that that ought to be considered as at all vital in connection with this question.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator there?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I quite agree with the Senator, and his statement is quite clear about it, but there was a further consideration, namely, that if we had required local contributions from certain districts, we found they were unable to meet them, and we might have delayed the whole project by an exaction of that kind.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator that there was an additional reason. Not only was the inability on the part of these districts to contribute considered but, in addition to their inability to contribute, it was realized that a requirement for contribution would have necessitated legislative enactments and in a number of the States before legislative enactments could be brought about changes in their constitutions would also be necessary. Therefore, when the committee came to consider that small point of difference it realized not only the inability of the districts to contribute but the long delay which would be involved in the process of securing legislative enactments and changes in the constitutions of the States.

Mr. JONES. There were all sorts of complications possible.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] does not as yet clearly understand just what is involved in this branch of the subject. Therefore, let me say that under what is known as the 1914 commission grade standard the localities, the levee districts, or whatever organization were utilized to do the work, were required to put up one-third of the cost of levee construction.

Mr. EDGE. Was that a requirement of existing law?

Mr. JONES. I do not remember whether or not there was an express statute to that effect, but, at any rate, the plan had been agreed to and had been carried out. I think probably it was pursuant to law, although the law may not have specified a contribution of one-third, but that is what they agreed to and that is what they have been doing, except in some instances, where, as the Senator from Missouri has suggested, some of the districts and localities have been utterly unable to pay the one-third.

Mr. EDGE. And under the terms of the pending bill they are relieved of that assessment for the future, if they have paid in the past?

Mr. JONES. Yes. Section 3 requires some minor contributions.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TYDINGS in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. HAWES. While they have been relieved of this responsibility, Mr. President, it is a fact that the duty of maintenance, patrol, and preservation rests upon the States.

Mr. JONES. I was just about to call attention to section 3. That section provides that the localities must give satisfactory assurance to the Secretary of War that they will—

(a) Maintain all flood-control works after their completion, except controlling and regulating spillway structures, including special relief levees; maintenance includes normally such matters as cutting grass, removal of weeds, local drainage, and minor repairs of main river levees.

That has always been the construction of the law. In other words, if a levee breaks, the localities are not required to restore the break.

Then they must—

(b) Agree to accept land turned over to them under the provisions of section 4.

That applies where the Government condemns rights of way, and so on. That is for jurisdictional purposes.

Mr. President, section 4 provides for just compensation, and is framed on the theory of the constitutional provision that where property is taken for public use it must be paid for. As I said a while ago, we have provided here that the benefits shall be used as offsets to the damages.

Mr. EDGE. Who assesses those benefits—the commission or a court?

Mr. JONES. The bill provides for condemnation, of course, by the court, and authorizes the court to appoint a commission of three to determine the damages and assess the benefits. There are some other minor provisions in section 4.

Section 5 allows the heads of the various departments to detail from their respective departments any experts who may be necessary in connection with the preparation of maps, plans, and so forth.

Section 6 provides that in an emergency funds appropriated under this bill may be used to meet the emergency.

In section 7 there is an additional fund of $5,000,000 authorized for emergency purposes and to furnish relief. The necessity for this was plainly manifest when the flood occurred a year ago, and it is to take care of any such situation in the future that this provision is put in the bill.

Section 8 makes the Mississippi River Commission the executive agent to carry out the project that may be adopted and determined upon. This is to be done under the supervision of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers. In other words, we will have one executive head and will use the agency that is especially familiar with the conditions on the Mississippi River. The Mississippi River Commission has been directly and closely and intimately connected with the Mississippi River for a great many years, and its members are probably more familiar with those conditions than anyone else. The president of the commission is by the terms of this bill made the executive head or executive officer.

Mr. EDGE. In other words, the commission is to administer the act.

Mr. JONES. It is to execute and carry out the project as it may be determined upon.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, how long is it estimated that it will take to complete this project?

Mr. JONES. From 8 to 10 years.

Section 9 is intended to carry out the provisions of our general river and harbor legislation with reference to the creation of obstructions unless affirmatively authorized by Congress, to provide penalty for violation of it.

Section 10 is quite an important section of the bill. In the last river and harbor bill we adopted a project that contemplates the surveying of the principal rivers of the country and their tributaries, and the submission of projects for flood control, power, reclamation, and navigation. That survey project would cost something over $7,000,000. We express the sense of Congress that this survey should be carried on as rapidly and expeditiously as possible, and in the last military bill we appropriated $1,500,000 to carry on that survey; but it was thought that we should have a special provision calling attention to and urging the need of special reports on flood control in the Mississippi Valley, so we adopted the following additional language to this section:

And the Secretary of War, through the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, is directed to prepare and submit to Congress at the earliest practicable date projects for flood control on all tributary streams (including such of their main tributaries as may be deemed necessary) of the Mississippi River system subject to destructive floods: Provided, That before transmitting such reports to Congress the same shall be presented to the board created in section 1 of this act, and its conclusions and recommendations thereon shall be transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of War with his report.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. The language which the Senator has just read is taken from the so-called Robinson amendment, is it?

Mr. JONES. It is.

Mr. NORRIS. It does not follow that amendment all the way through?

Mr. JONES. No. A couple of paragraphs that were not really necessary are left out, because there was a provision in that amendment increasing the appropriation $5,000,000.

Mr. NORRIS. There was a provision in it that referred specifically to particular streams.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. That was omitted?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. The general language covers it all; does it?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. It is the intention of the committee that it shall cover all tributaries?

Mr. JONES. All important tributaries that they deem necessary. It is really broader in its language than the original Robinson amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. The modification, after all, leaves it to them, so that they can in their discretion exclude any one they want to?

Mr. JONES. That is true—that they deem necessary. Of course, the purpose of this measure is to provide all flood control that is necessary.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I want to do; but it occurs to me that we are leaving that matter to a board that to begin with does not believe in this flood-control plan.

Mr JONES. No; it is left to the Secretary of War.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it?

Mr. JONES. Yes. Let me read it to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. The present authorities, as I understand, starting with the President and going clear down—the President, the Secretary of War, the Army engineers, and everybody—are really opposed to this flood-control suggestion, and do not believe in it. Is not that true?

Mr. JONES. Oh, I do not think so. I never have had any impression of that sort—not at all. I think they are in favor of flood control and whatever is the wisest course to follow.

Mr. NORRIS. That is, to build dams where there are natural reservoirs to hold back the flood waters of the tributaries?

Mr. JONES. If they feel that they will do it in an effective and economical way, yes.

Mr. NORRIS. But is it not true that they feel that they will not do it? That is what they say.

Mr. JONES. I do not think so.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it not true that the President is opposed to what is known as tributary flood control?

Mr. JONES. I do not think so; at least, I have no such impression.

Mr. NORRIS. I shall be very glad indeed if my information is erroneous. I had that understanding.

Mr. JONES. I have never had any such understanding. I have never gotten any such understanding from the President.

Mr. NORRIS. What can the Senator say about the attitude of the Government engineers on that subject? They did not recommend anything of that kind. Have they not really been opposed to it?

Mr. JONES. I do not think so. I have no reason to think that they are, or that they are for it, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, the facts are that the Government engineers made preliminary surveys for reservoirs; but, according to my recollection, they ran up into hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. NORRIS. Why, of course they would. The cost is enormous.

Mr. HAWES. So that is the reason why they were eliminated from the bill at this time. It was because of the enormous cost of the reservoirs.

Mr. NORRIS. The point I am trying to make, or upon which I want information, is this: I am afraid the language that the Senator has read from the bill submits the matter to those who are unfriendly to it, and I do not criticize any man because he is unfriendly to it. I realize that there are two schools of thought here; that there are those who say that we will never accomplish anything by building dams and holding back the flood waters; that that will not make any difference; that we ought to confine ourselves to levees and to spillways farther down. I am not questioning their honesty or their fairness in making that contention——

Mr. JONES. I understand.

Mr. NORRIS. But, to my mind, that never will reach the problem; it never will solve it; and I should hate to have the question of the location of dams for holding back flood waters on the tributaries submitted to men who themselves do not believe in it and expect to get a favorable report from them.

Mr. JONES. Let me call attention to the fact that we require here, after the Secretary of War makes these surveys, and so forth, that the projects that he adopts, or the results of his surveys, must be submitted to this board, upon which there are two civil engineers.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. JONES. And they make their recommendations, and those must be transmitted to the Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. But the civil engineers, I suppose, will be divided, like the Army engineers; and those civil engineers, as I understand the bill, are appointed by those who do not believe in tributary flood control; so we would naturally expect to get civil engineers who were likewise unfriendly to that part of the project.

Mr. JONES. I have never had any impression that the President was opposed to control of floods by reservoirs, or that the Army engineers were. As the Senator from Missouri says, so far as they have made the surveys, they find the cost so great that they feel that the floods can be controlled more economically in another way.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not questioning any one's right to feel that way and to be just as honest in his conviction as I am in mine.

Mr. JONES. I understand that; and I hope I did not say anything to indicate the contrary.

Mr. NORRIS. I have understood that the President and the Army engineers are not favorable to tributary flood control. I have talked with men who have talked with practically all of them, and if I am wrong about it I shall be delighted to learn that fact, I assure the Senator. As I look at it, however, if we do nothing but build levees and spillways down there, we will never solve this problem. I realize that tributary flood control will involve an immense expense, but it will be the only part of this whole thing that will bring in any return. If properly handled it will bring in a big return, because the water that does damage down the Mississippi Valley will do a whole lot of good in some parts of the country where it can be used for irrigation, and those who use it will pay for it; and in other places power will be developed, and those who get that power will pay for it.

Regardless of all that, however, if we are going to prevent the Mississippi River from overflowing and from floods, we can not stop because of the cost. If we decide to do it, we must go through with it; and in my judgment the only practical way ever to go through with it is to combine the two plans; to build levees and spillways, if you want to—I am not objecting to that—but also to build dams and hold back the flood waters. We have got to do all these things regardless of cost.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. JONES. Just a moment. Under this provision we will get the reports of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers and this board upon the proposition of the construction of flood-control works of every kind on the tributaries. Under the general survey authorized in the last river and harbor bill a year ago they are directed to survey all the important tributary streams and report not only upon flood control but upon reclamation, water power, and navigation. We put in this additional provision to emphasize the need of an early and prompt report on flood control. That does not exclude or interfere with their work covering all the propositions to which the Senator has referred—reclamation, water power, and navigation—as well as flood control. It was felt, however, that this flood-control proposition is so pressing and so important that we wanted them not to wait for all of these things to be done but to submit their recommendations.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not finding fault with that. I agree that that is wise. I do not want to stop anything where there is an emergency. I am agreeable to that all the way through; but, incidentally, I happen to know of places—one is in my own State—where the Government has surveyed a reservoir site in all its details. It was authorized to be built and developed by a bill that passed the Senate at one time, but failed in the House.

In the investigation of Muscle Shoals that has been going on for several years I have come to a knowledge of one particular dam, away down in the Tennessee River, where nature has provided a wonderful place for the storage of flood waters. To my mind, we ought to build that dam. It has not been completely surveyed. It ought to be in friendly hands, too. Incidentally, that particular one will develop considerable power and will make the property of the Government in Dam No. 2 worth nearly twice what it is worth now; but it is a flood-control proposition. The power that can be developed is small compared to its value as a flood-control proposition; or, if not exactly a flood-control proposition, it ought to be owned by the Government because of the Government's ownership of Dam No. 2, and it ought to be utilized not for the purpose of getting the maximum amount of power out of it but for the purpose of getting the maximum amount of flood control. That means that there will be times every year when they will empty it out completely, so that they can hold back the flood of the next year. If it were being used only as a power proposition, that would not be done; it would be kept full of water all the time and develop a primary power which would be more valuable.

So it seemed to me, when I got into it, that here is a place where, under the law, if a private party should develop that great dam and endeavor to make money out of it—which he would be justified in doing, and doing for the very best of purposes—he would not help flood control very much; but if the Government did it, on the other hand, especially owning Dam No. 2, what it would lose on the loss of power there it would make up by an increase of power at Dam No. 2, and could completely control the flood situation of the Tennessee River.

Those things are all over the country; and in the West, where this water can be used for irrigation, there are places, I presume, on every tributary of the Mississippi River where there are very valuable natural reservoirs, where by the building of dams an immense amount of flood waters can be controlled.

The Pathfinder Dam, built in Wyoming on the North Platte River, was not built as a flood-control proposition at all. Nobody thought of it when they built the dam. The engineers never thought of it. These things developed years afterwards, and now on the Platte River, several hundred miles this side of that dam in Wyoming, the high water on an average year after year is 45 per cent lower than it was before the construction of that dam; and at low seasons, when the river ordinarily would be almost dry, it is, I think, 47 per cent greater in volume than during the low seasons formerly, thus showing what flood control can do.

I do not want to interfere with what is necessary in an emergency way farther down, and I am willing that the Federal Government should do it; but I do not see why we can not make these things dovetail together. I should like to see the matter in the hands of a friendly board that would carry out that idea, and go into it with a view of getting the maximum amount of flood control, the maximum amount of irrigation, and the maximum amount of power. They will all work right in together, and lessen the expense in the aggregate by a very great amount.

Mr. HAWES. May I say to the Senator that I am thoroughly sympathetic with his point of view and I am sympathetic with his implied criticism of the lack of vision of the Army engineers. There is a report which the Senator will find on the matter of reservoirs. The people of my State and the people of the lower valley are friendly to the thought of the reservoirs, but the cost is prohibitive so far as this particular problem is concerned.

Personally I wish we had the vision of the valley all the way up and its tributaries, but in a spirit of compromise, as the chairman of the committee will tell the Senator, the project was confined to the lower reaches of the valley and then confined to the immediate expensive subject of flood control. Those expenses will run from $300,000,000 to $600,000,000. If the reservoir proposition were taken up at the same time it would have added $200,000,000 or $300,000,000 to that sum.

I think the Senator is right, and I want to say there are a great many members of the committee who are entirely sympathetic with his point of view, but it could not be placed in the bill at this time.

Mr. JONES. I do not think there is any substantial difference between the Senator from Nebraska and myself. Wherever it is possible to develop the reservoir plan in the control of floods, as well as for reclamation and water power and navigation, I want to see it done.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I will yield in just a moment. We have got to place some reliance in governmental agencies. I do not think we could provide a commission which we would expect to be in accord with our individual views in every particular. We could not find a commission composed of men of those views. I feel that the Army engineers and the Secretary of War and the president of the Mississippi River Commission and the two civil engineers will give Congress the benefit of their honest judgment with reference to the problem submitted to them. If we do not agree with them we are at perfect liberty, of course, to disagree and pass legislation providing for what we think ought to be done.

It is not out of place either, I think, to suggest that nobody knows what the composition of the board will be a year from now. We will have a new administration and possibly a new Secretary of War, so that I think we can safely depend upon the board, as well as the Army engineers, to give the Congress at least their honest judgment as to what should be done and to give their reasons for it, the facts upon which it is based, and then, if we do not agree with them, we, of course, can take a different action.

I yield now to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS. I am especially interested in section 10 of the flood control bill. I think section 10 contains the only provisions that pertain especially to my State of Oklahoma, which is a tributary State. The flood waters of a part of Kansas, Colorado, New Mexico, and Oklahoma drain across my State down through the Red River, the Canadian, and the Arkansas. The record shows that last year a million acres in my State were covered with water and approximately $25,000,000 of damage done. I take it that Oklahoma, being a tributary State, is like other States situated in a similar manner. Section 10 is the only section that offers any hope of Federal interest in or help in the matter of flood control in tributary States.

I desire to ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] this question: Based upon the reports submitted by the engineers and the hearings before the committee, what does the committee reasonably expect to have done in the matter of flood control for a tributary State such as I have just outlined under the provisions of section 10?

Mr. JONES. We expect to have sent to Congress projects which will, in the judgment of the Secretary of War and this board of engineers, meet the problem on the tributary streams. We have not any report before us at this time showing what should be done. There were some surveys of a preliminary character with reference to possibilities for reservoirs up the White and the St. Francis, I think, and possibly up the Arkansas. But those surveys were not of such a character as to warrant a definite recommendation upon them. The very purpose of the provision is to get that information.

Mr. THOMAS. That being true, and this being the first bill upon the flood-control situation, it occurs to me that if the bill is passed in its present form, with the title of the bill remaining as it is and the first section remaining as it is, the country will probably get a misconception of the intent of Congress in dealing with the problem. We all appreciate the problems the committee has had to confront, and I do not desire to criticize in any particular the work accomplished, because I am for the bill. Yet I am wondering if the Senator would agree to a broadening of the title of the bill, so that it will not appear to be strictly a limitation of improvements on a certain portion of the lower Mississippi River, and then would agree to a broadening of the first section; for example, striking out of line 4, page 1, the words "in its alluvial valley," which localizes this proposed improvement, and to insert in lieu of those words the following: "Its navigable tributaries and all waters that enter therein and the waters that enter the Gulf," so as to make it in the first instance a declaration on the part of Congress that we expect to consider the entire field of flood control not only on the lower Mississippi but likewise on all the rivers which flow into the Mississippi. I would like to see the bill so amended as to contain the idea that the Congress expects to deal with the flood-control problem in a comprehensive manner, not alone in the lower Mississippi Valley but in addition as relating to its tributaries.

Mr. JONES. I think that is very clearly indicated in the terms of the bill. So far as I am concerned, I could not consent to the adoption of the language suggested by the Senator. We adopt a particular project for immediate construction. I think section 10 clearly indicates the purpose of Congress not to stop with that one project, but to go on to whatever extent may be necessary for the control of the floods of the rivers.

I think it would be very unfortunate from various standpoints to make the changes that the Senator suggests. I do not think they are necessary. I do not think they would help matters any. I do not think they would give to the country a different impression from what it will get from the bill as it is now drawn, but it would very seriously affect all proposed legislation at the present time.

Mr. THOMAS. It appears to me that if the bill is passed in its present form the country will get the impression, and rightly so, in view of the statement just made, that section 10 is merely a gesture, and that nothing is contemplated or even expected to come out of the provisions of section 10 as included in the bill.

Mr. JONES. I can not imagine what I said that gave the Senator that impression. I consider section 10 as one of the very important features of the bill. I do not consider that the development of the project from Cape Girardeau down ends our activities toward controlling floods.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I think on the contrary we are indicating that we do propose to consider every phase of the matter in order to bring about real, genuine, efficient flood control, not only from Cape Girardeau down, but upon the tributaries to the river.

I yield now to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The provision in section 10 relating to flood-control works on the tributaries was incorporated by the Committee on Commerce only after the matter had been considered at length and discussed fully. The amendment that finally went into the bill was a modification of an amendment proposed by myself, something like a month ago, and substantially the same thing in purpose. The provision referred to in the bill is an express mandate to the Secretary of War, through the Corps of Engineers, to prepare plans for flood control on the tributaries of the Mississippi and on their main tributaries when deemed necessary. It is as specific and as definite as Congress could go, unless it said that the department is authorized to prepare and execute plans for flood control on the tributaries.

The committee quite naturally were hesitant to approve projects in advance of their preparation.

It has not been the custom of Congress to do that and it might result in very great confusion. Under this provision, if it becomes law, the solemn duty is imposed on the Secretary of War, through his Corps of Engineers, to work out the plans and, after they have been submitted for its recommendation to the board created in the bill, to present them to the Congress for its action. When those plans come back here there will, in all probability, be considerable discussion of their provisions. Congress will have the power then to modify them, as it has the power now to modify the pending project. But the plans will be reported to Congress, either including work on several tributaries or a single tributary at a time, the direction being that plans shall be made and reported as speedily as possible.

Now, there is no basis, in my judgment, for saying that this is a provision of slight importance. In my judgment, it is one of the very most important features of the bill. Without this provision in the bill I would be unable to give my support to the pending measure, but I feel that while it does not settle the whole problem of tributaries, it takes a forward step in that direction, and that if it passes it will result, in the end, in a complete system of Federal control of floods on the tributaries without which no plan for flood control in the Mississippi Valley can be adequate or acceptable.

Mr. THOMAS. My suggestion is greatly reinforced by what the Senator from Arkansas has just said.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. CARAWAY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska, who, I believe, rose first.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I rose before the Senator from Arkansas did, as a matter of fact, but I am glad the Senator yielded to him first, because I think he has fortified what I would like to say.

I agree with one of the suggestions made by the Senator from Oklahoma, and it seems to me the committee ought to accept it; that is, as to the title of the bill. I understand how the bill was before this new amendment was put in, but since that is in, it broadens the scope of the bill and the title does not meet the provisions of the bill. The title is "For the control of floods on the Mississippi River from the Head of Passes to Cape Girardeau, Mo., and for other purposes."

It does not affect the legality of it at all, but the title ought to express, as nearly as we can in words, the real object of the bill. Since the amendment has gone in, as it has been so fairly stated by the Senator from Arkansas, why should not the title be amended to something like this: "For the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries"? Would not that cover it all?

Mr. JONES. "And for other purposes."

Mr. NORRIS. "And for other purposes." That would give in one sentence the general idea as to just what we are trying to do and would strengthen the idea that section 10 is just as important as anything else in the bill, while the present title would not indicate that.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. I think there was something in the suggestion of the Senator from Oklahoma. It might be thought, as the Senator has suggested—and I know that is not the intention of the bill—that the language meant that we should extend flood control to the tributaries only as those tributaries affected floods in the alluvial valley. That is not the purpose, but that is the idea that was in the mind of the Senator from Oklahoma. If there is any question about it, the language could be so clarified that the intention would be perfectly apparent.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. HAWES. I want to say to my friend the Senator from Oklahoma that the matter of tributaries was the subject of very earnest discussion. It is of vital interest to my State and to other States. We had presented what was called the Robinson amendment, which was further amended. If the Senator will follow the philosophy of this bill, he will find that it approves what is called the Jadwin plan, and then a board to reconcile that with the Mississippi River Commission plan. Then, in addition to that, under section 10, is this entire new subject of the tributaries.

Two methods are provided in this one section for bringing the subject before Congress. It may be brought before Congress by the Secretary of War, it may be brought before Congress by the commission, and, for the first time, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], after some vigorous contention, we have civilians who will compose this forum before which we can be heard.

I want to call the attention of the Senator from Oklahoma to the presence of these two civilian engineers, forming a board of five men before which may appear advocates of the improvement of the tributaries. They have never had such an opportunity before. They have never had a forum. They have never had a place where they could tell their story.

This section provides for such a hearing and for two distinct methods of bringing the subject before Congress. So it carries out more than a hope, it provides a forum, and it directs both the board and the Secretary of War to report to Congress.

I do not believe we could go much further, because, as the chairman of our committee will tell the Senate, the custom of Congress in the past has been to pass only upon completed projects, where estimates are presented to Congress for the particular problems. No such estimates have been made, no such surveys have been made, and no particular project could be presented to Congress at this time; but the machinery will be written into the law for the first time to do that for the tributaries.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think I have gone over the important features of the bill.

I want to take this opportunity to express my appreciation of the earnestness with which the members of the committee have worked over this problem. There has been a spirit of compromise all through the consideration of the measure, and that is especially true of the Senators from the States that are more directly affected than any other States. I do not think there is a Senator who has not made concessions, some of them of very considerable importance. We have all, I think, appreciated the importance of this legislation, the complicated problems in it and surrounding it. We have felt that it would be nothing short of a calamity for Congress to fail to legislate on this important matter at this session. So concessions have been made by everybody.

This bill does not satisfy anyone in every particular. We feel, however, that it is a measure that will take care of the immediate, pressing situation; that it will also bring to Congress a plan for the future, covering the whole Mississippi Valley, in which everybody is vitally interested.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, are we to understand that the Senators from the flood-stricken districts are generally satisfied with the measure?

Mr. JONES. I think I may say that the Senators from the flood-stricken districts are all behind this bill. They are not thoroughly satisfied. As I said, everybody made concessions in the interest of getting legislation.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator, too, that the representatives from the three States vitally interested—that is, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Mississippi—in their meeting indorsed this bill?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the point I raise is that I have not been able to to go into the bill in detail. I have assumed from the beginning that it would be considered by those who knew the problem from the standpoint of the great disaster, and, of course, if Senators from that section are fairly satisfied with what is done, that is all I want to know. I am ready to vote.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President——

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let us vote.

Mr. STEPHENS. I rose to address the Senate, but if a vote can be taken, I shall be glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I have called to the attention of the Senator from Washington and which I hope he will accept.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, line 4, after the word "advisable," insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That inasmuch as the Mississippi River Commission made a report on the 26th day of October, 1912, recommending a levee to be built from Tiptonville, Tenn., to the Obion River in Tennessee, the said Mississippi River Commission is authorized to make a resurvey of said proposed levee and a relocation of the same if necessary, and if such levee is found feasible, and is approved by the board created in section 1 of this act, the commission is authorized to build same out of appropriations hereafter to be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I have a very brief amendment that I want to offer, which I understand is agreeable to the chairman of the committee, and I sincerely hope that after this amendment shall be agreed to the vote will be taken on the bill immediately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, page 3, line 8, after the word "river," add the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That pending the completion of any flood way, spillway, or diversion channel, the areas within the same shall be given the same degree of protection as is afforded by levees on the west side of the river contiguous of the levee at the head of the said flood way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. JONES. On that question let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEFLIN (when Mr. BLACK's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] is absent, attending the funeral of the late Senator FERRIS. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. HOWELL's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. HOWELL] is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. I am informed, however, that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I am at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL]. I understand if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote, and therefore I feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL] is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. KING. I have a general pair on this bill with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HAWES. My colleague [Mr. REED of Missouri] is absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BLEASE] is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS] is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. GLASS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN]. Having reason to suppose that he would vote as I have voted, I will let my vote stand.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WALSH of Montana] is necessarily detained from the Senate in attendance upon the funeral of the late Senator FERRIS. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS. My colleague the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] is necessarily detained from the Senate with other Senators attending the funeral of the late Senator FERRIS. If he were present and permitted to vote, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] is necessarily absent. He has a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], who is also absent. If present, the Senator from Delaware would vote "yea." I am not advised as to how the Senator from Pennsylvania would vote.

I desire also to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] are absent in attendance on the funeral of the late Senator FERRIS. If present, those Senators would vote "yea."

Mr. JONES. I wish to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], who is attending the funeral of the late Senator FERRIS.

I also wish to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] for the same reason. I am informed that if present, the Senator from Iowa would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 70, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the title of the bill which has just been passed. I move to amend the title so that it will read as follows:

A bill for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, that amendment, if agreed to, would not enlarge the scope of the bill, and I have no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to the title of the bill.

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

Mr. JONES subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask that Calendar No. 464, being the bill (S. 3434) for the control of floods on the Mississippi River, from the Head of Passes to Cairo, and for other purposes, that having been the first flood control bill which was reported by the committee, be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted at the Chicago Flood Control Conference, June 4, 1927, where I had the honor to be chairman of the committee which reported the resolution. That conference was called by Mayor Thompson for the purpose of considering the great problem of flood control. Thousands of individuals attended from all over the central portion of the country, and from that conference radiated an influence which I feel quite sure was largely helpful in producing the beneficial results to-day so fortunately obtained under the leadership of the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana?

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution

The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the Chicago Flood Control Conference June 4, 1927:

"Whereas the time is here for the Federal Government to attack the flood problem in a broad and comprehensive way because of the present Mississippi Valley disaster, the greatest of its kind in the Nation's peace-time history, resulting in an incalculable amount of damage to life and property; and

"Whereas the need for a comprehensive plan of national flood control is made apparent by this disaster and there are in general three major proposals for flood relief set up by competent authorities, viz, levees, spillways or by-pass outlets, and storage reservoirs, all of which should be considered; and

"Whereas it is contended that this problem can not be adequately met by the application of any single remedy and that levees, spillways, and reservoirs should be used in combination where practicable, together with such additional remedies as may from time to time be developed; and

"Whereas floods in the Mississippi Basin have not only brought disaster to those immediately concerned but have resulted in economic loss to the whole Nation, and the people of this country now demand that effective and permanent remedies be applied and they will willingly approve the expenditures of the public money necessary to this end: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the flood-control conference, assembled at Chicago, Ill., does hereby declare that the control of the flood waters of the Mississippi River and all its tributaries is a national problem and that the sole responsibility therefore should be assumed by the National Government; and

"Resolved further, That we urge immediate and effective relief be extended to all present sufferers; that the measures which may be recommended by existing Federal agencies for relief to the lower valley so as to protect it against a recurrence of the present disaster be carried out promptly, and that the necessary appropriations therefor be made; and

"Resolved further, That, without delaying the carrying into execution of such imperatively necessary measures as may be recommended by existing governmental agencies, the President of the United States is requested to call a conference for the purpose of formulating, in conjunction with such governmental agencies, a comprehensive plan for navigation and permanent flood control; said conference to be composed of Army engineers, civil engineers, conservationists, geologists, financiers, agriculturists, and other experts representing the various interests of our country; and

"Resolved further, That the conference petitions the President of the United States and the Congress to energetically undertake and carry to a speedy conclusion comprehensive and effective measures for permanent flood control of Mississippi River and all its tributaries."

Mr. KING. The so-called flood control bill which has just been passed was reported to the Senate on the 24th instant. The bill, I am told, is a compromise measure, embodying features of numerous bills which have been introduced in both branches of Congress. I feel sure that but a limited number of Senators have had opportunity to read this compromise bill, or the voluminous report accompanying the same. Scarcely more than an hour has passed since the bill was taken up for consideration. The chairman of the committee has made a statement, but there has been no discussion of and, in my opinion, no full presentation of the questions involved or the policy to which the Government is being committed, and the commitments which are being entered into. I was advised that the bill was to be discussed, and a number of Senators informed me that they intended to speak upon the bill and explain its provisions and point out just what the measure would accomplish and what responsibilities were to be assumed by the Government under its terms. A few minutes ago I was called from the Chamber and shortly thereafter heard the call of the Senate indicating that a roll call had been ordered. Upon entering the Chamber a few seconds ago, I found that the roll was being called upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. President, I regret that a measure of such vital importance and one which directly and indirectly commits the Government to a policy from which it can not recede and to expenditures which may reach the stupendous sum of a billion dollars, should receive the approval of this body without fuller discussion and more detailed explanation of its provisions and purposes.

As I understand this bill, it inaugurates a policy at variance with that heretofore followed by the Government in dealing with the Mississippi River and its tributaries. In effect, it relieves the States interested in the districts affected by the flood waters of the Mississippi River and its tributaries of responsibilities or burdens, and devolves upon the Federal Government the entire cost of flood control within the area drained by the Mississippi River. As stated, the bill before us was reported to the Senate less than four days ago, and no one conceived that it would be disposed of until some time next week. In my opinion, few, if any, Senators, aside from members of the Commerce Committee, have studied the bill, and yet we have been compelled to vote upon a measure announcing a national policy of far-reaching consequences and one which will entail upon the Government hundreds of millions of dollars of expenses.

In my opinion, Mr. President, this bill should have received further consideration at the hands of the Senate. What it proposes to do and what it will accomplish and the manner in which the purposes sought will be accomplished, together with the costs to the Government—these and all cognate matters should have been carefully considered by the Senate. That there should be legislation dealing with the Mississippi River problem is universally conceded, but there have been sharp differences as to the character of the legislation and the distribution of the burdens incident to the program which should be adopted. I would have been glad to vote for a measure which I fully understood and which I believed to be just and fair. I am not a member of the Commerce Committee and have been denied, because of work upon other committees, opportunity to study the testimony which has been given before the Committee on Commerce and the various measures which have been submitted and the technical reports which have been made by engineers. From what the chairman of the committee has stated, the bill does not limit or restrict the obligations of the Government to the $325,000,000 authorized to be appropriated. Indeed, the statements of the Senator in answer to questions I propounded to him indicate that the measure may call for more than $750,000,000. Indeed, he has stated that the project to which the Government is now committed may impose a liability upon the United States exceeding $750,000,000.

Mr. President, much as I regret differing from my colleagues, I have been unable upon this short notice and with the limited discussion which has taken place to vote for the passage of this bill. I have announced that I was paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. If I had not been paired, I should have voted "nay."

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President and Senators, on behalf of the people of the lower Mississippi Valley I wish to express the heartfelt thanks of all those who live in that great section to Senator JONES, chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and to Representative REID of Illinois, chairman of the Flood Control Committee of the House, for the truly splendid work they have done in connection with the Mississippi flood control bill.

I served on the Commerce Committee with Senator JONES, and can testify to the remarkable patience, kindness, persistence, and wisdom which he showed in conducting the hearings on this great bill and in preparing its difficult details.

Representative REID began hearings on flood control before his committee on the 7th of last November and conducted them with conspicuous ability and tireless energy until the 1st of February. Hundreds of witnesses testified at these hearings, and the great publicity given by the press to their practically unanimous support of flood control by the Federal Government did a great deal to make the American people realize the national character of the problem and the duty of the Nation to pay its entire cost.

The bill we have just passed will hereafter be known as the Jones-Reid flood control bill, and it will live in the hearts of the people in the valley as one of the greatest pieces of legislation ever enacted in our country.

I wish also to mention the noble part President Coolidge played in connection with the awful floods of last year. He has done infinitely more to assist the people of the valley than any other President. When the terrible floods of 1927 began, Mr. Coolidge expressed again and again through the public press his deep concern and earnest desire to help. He sent the Secretaries of Commerce and War and many other Government officials to the stricken areas as his personal representatives, and assisted the victims of the flood to the limit of his ability through the various department agencies. At the opening of this Congress he recommended a comprehensive plan for the ultimate control and prevention of floods on the Mississippi and insisted that legislation be enacted to prevent their recurrence. I did not agree with all of the President's recommendations, but feel that he has been a real friend to the people of my section, and is entitled to their lasting gratitude. I predict that in future years President Coolidge will look back with more pride upon the passage of this bill than any other during his administration.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, at the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], chairman of the Committee on Commerce, I had been recognized by the Chair for the purpose of addressing myself to the question of flood relief in the Mississippi Valley. Just as I was beginning my remarks many Senators indicated that they were ready to vote, and without hesitation I stated that I was glad to yield for that purpose.

I want to say that nothing ever pleased me more than to yield at that time. I have practiced law for many years. I have never been inclined to argue my case when the court intimated or suggested that the court was ready to decide the case in my favor. I knew the sentiment of the membership of this body. I had no doubt that the bill would pass almost without a dissenting vote. I am delighted that not a vote was cast against the bill.

Mr. President, I have really risen to say just a word or two with regard to some gentlemen who do not live in the Mississippi Valley, who are not intimately affected by the great destruction that came to that valley, who do not have the same reason for feeling an interest in the subject that many of us have, and yet who have shown the greatest sympathy, the strongest desire to bring relief and protection to the people in that flooded section.

First, I want to say that I appreciate the conduct, the efforts, the sympathy, the kindness of the chairman of the committee; and I approve of and applaud what the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] said about him. Although the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] lives in a State far removed from the Mississippi Valley, he has demonstrated that he possesses a great heart, a splendid mind, a patriotic spirit; that he is capable of looking out for the Nation as a whole, and recognizing that the States are members of one body; that he realizes that the interest of one is the interest of all; and that he has had the courage to rise above the littleness and narrowness of local interest and partisanship.

In the valley's hour of distress he visited it. I had the pleasure of going into the flooded areas of three States with him. His desire to acquaint himself fully with conditions was evident. His study of the situation was careful and thorough. The people were delighted that he came. They were deeply appreciative of his visit. Knowing that as chairman of the committee he would be influential with regard to legislation, they asked me many questions about him. I said many a time, "He is a splendid man. He has a great heart and a strong intellect. He will do the right thing as he sees it. If he is convinced that this is a national problem and that the Nation should take over the control of the river and do the work, he will not hesitate to say so. With him it will be only a matter of following his judgment and conscience in an effort to do the right thing."

Mr. President, I did not misjudge the Senator from Washington. The people of the valley will always remember him in the kindliest way for the great work that he has done in their behalf.

I feel that I should like to refer just for a moment to some others—some in this body, some on the outside.

I recall the interest that has been evidenced by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the Republican leader in this body, how anxious he has been to have the matter expedited and proper legislation enacted.

I recall the great interest of the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. I remember that when the waters were raging over the valley and destroying life and property the mayor of Chicago, William Hale Thompson, called a great convention to consider the matter; and he should be commended for his efforts to bring relief to that flooded section. At that great meeting the Senator from Indiana was chairman of the committee on resolutions. He not only wrought well there, but he has spoken a good word for the valley here and yonder as he has had opportunity. He appeared before the Flood Control Committee of the House and made a strong statement there. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], who is a member of the Committee on Commerce, has also been sympathetic and helpful.

Mr. President, there are many others. I want to express my appreciation of the efforts made by the chairman of the Flood Control Committee of the House, Mr. REID, and his colleagues. Early action was taken by that committee in order that sentiment might be developed throughout the Nation by educating the people in every section, letting them know what the conditions really were in the valley, letting them be informed with reference to the needs of the Nation in this regard, to convince them of the fact—and it is a fact that can not be successfully disputed—that this is a great national problem; that in the interest of commerce, in the interest of navigation, in the interest of business generally, in the interest of national defense, the mail service, and for other reasons, it is without question a national problem.

Mr. President, there are many others whom I should like to call by name and express my appreciation of their efforts. I shall conclude by saying that, although there have been differences of opinion, from no Member of this body have I heard any expression but that of the broadest sympathy for the distressed people in the alluvial valley of the Mississippi. I express my appreciation to my good friend the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] for making the suggestion that he did this afternoon. I say that nothing has been done in a long time that could bring more of encouragement to the great body of the people in the valley than this action. When this news goes down through the valley I feel sure that many a heart will be made glad and that the number who will rejoice over this action will be practically as large as the number in that section who rejoiced in 1918 that the armistice had been signed that brought to an end the World War.

I thank every man in the body and outside of the body who has contributed to this great work.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I very cheerfully supported the flood control bill, which was so ably presented to the Senate by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. He deserves great credit for helping to engineer that measure through. But I want to pay a word of tribute to one who lives in the Mississippi Valley, who, in my judgment, has done more than anyone else to bring about this particular kind of settlement.

There were two propositions presented, one to tax the people locally to help build this great Government system of levees, which was entirely wrong. Those people who have been afflicted by the flood should not in their desperate condition be called on for financial aid in solving this great national problem. The other plan was to relieve the local people of tax burdens in this matter, and that plan has just been adopted by the Senate. I believe in paying special honor to whom such honor is due. I have in mind the able Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES], who from the outset ably and convincingly advocated the latter plan. I congratulate him and those who have assisted him on the splendid work done for flood control in the Mississippi Valley. This Government has no right to lay the hand of special taxation upon the flood-afflicted people of the Mississippi Valley and add to their already heavy burden by collecting taxes from them to aid this great Government in doing its simple duty toward solving a purely national problem.

The able Senator from Missouri has rendered signal service in this matter.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the purpose of my address is simply to supplement what the Senator from Alabama and what the Senator from Ohio have so well said in connection with the splendid legislation which the Senate has unanimously passed to-day.

There has been much complaint to the effect that the Senate is not able to transact business; but to-day, in a few hours, the Senate made one of the greatest advances which has been made for years looking to the development of our country. It was in relation to a problem that has been disturbing Congress ever since I have been here—since 1892. With all the diverse opinions, with all the sectional feeling, with the feelings of economy and feelings of extravagance, at least, by cooperation, by conciliation, by sensibly trying to settle the problem outside, and not on the floor of the Senate, a bill has been passed which received the unanimous approval of the Senate.

I think this is one of the greatest works that has been accomplished in years for the industrial development and the betterment of our country in a financial and industrial way.

First, I wish to congratulate both parties for the nonpartisan spirit in which the measure was handled, Democrats and Republicans vying as to which could do the most to settle a difficult problem, and aid a distressed section of our country, so that there could never be a recurrence of the evil. The two leaders, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the leader of the majority, and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the leader of the minority, are deserving of congratulation for combining their influence and their efforts and their intellects to accomplish this great work, and divest it of all partisan considerations.

The Committee on Commerce has been especially effective, hearing all sides, in reaching a conclusion; and I want to pay tribute to all the members of that committee, who provided a measure so wise, so just, so fair, and so reasonable, that it encountered no opposition in this body.

I also want to congratulate the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], whom we all recognize as able, fair, just, and patriotic and whose influence was largely directed to accomplish the splendid results of to-day, and who was largely instrumental in that accomplishment.

We expected to be here two or three weeks at least discussing flood control. Yet, through this system of cooperation, nonpartisanship, and a spirit of justice and fairness to all sections, we have accomplished a great work; I may say, a work above criticism.

There are other men to whom I wish to pay tribute. When the Democratic caucus met, at the suggestion of the Democratic leader, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], a conference was held and a committee appointed to cooperate with Republicans and everybody in this matter, and with those who were not especially interested, to reach an agreement on a measure that would be just and fair. The good work done by the committee appointed will never be known in the future. I want to put in the RECORD the names of the members of that committee and others who did splendid work, so that in the future, as what was done increases in usefulness and increases in benefits, the men who accomplished it may be well known.

The members of that committee, who cooperated with Members on the Republican side and all interested, and who did their work splendidly, were the following:

Senator KENDRICK, of Wyoming.
Senator RANSDELL, of Louisiana.
Senator HARRISON, of Mississippi.
Senator CARAWAY, of Arkansas.
Senator HAWES, of Missouri.
Senator STECK, of Iowa.
Senator MCKELLAR, of Tennessee.

They did their work well. They accomplished it so well that we were saved about three or four weeks of debate, and I want to commend them, and I want to have their names displayed in the RECORD so that in the future people may read the names of those who did this splendid work. They were cooperated with by Senator BARKLEY and Senator SACKETT, of Kentucky, Senator REED of Missouri, Senator BROUSSARD, of Louisiana, and Senator DENEEN, of Illinois.

These men worked incessantly, talked over the differences, got cooperation and a consensus of opinion as to what was wise and just and proper for the country.

In addition, the Committee on Commerce did its work splendidly, and they settled the differences among the committeemen themselves so as to accomplish a great result unanimously in this body, with results the like of which in the many years I have served in the House and in the Senate I have never seen equaled, the matter being handled so efficiently and so satisfactorily.

I desire to have the names of the members of the Committee on Commerce inserted in my remarks, so that in the future these men may get the credit and honor which properly belong to them for their accomplishment of the splendid results of to-day.

I believe this work is great; I believe it means great betterment to the country; I believe it means great development; and I know full well that it means that in the future we will not have a recurrence of the distressful incidents that occurred last year from the overflow of the Mississippi River and all the floods incident to that great disaster.

I ask that the names of the members of the committee be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the names were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE, UNITED STATES SENATE

Wesley L. Jones, of Washington, chairman.	Bronson Cutting, of New Mexico.
Charles L. McNary, of Oregon.	Duncan U. Fletcher, of Florida.
Frank B. Willis, of Ohio.	Joseph E. Ransdell, of Louisiana.
Hiram W. Johnson, of California.	Morris Sheppard, of Texas.
Porter H. Dale, of Vermont.	Furnifold McL. Simmons, of North Carolina.
Arthur R. Gould, of Maine.	Hubert D. Stephens, of Mississippi.
Frederic M. Sackett, of Kentucky.	William J. Harris, of Georgia.
Robert M. La Follette, jr., of Wisconsin.	Royal S. Copeland, of New York.
	Harry B. Hawes, of Missouri.
Gerald P. Nye, of North Dakota.	Lawrence D. Tyson, of Tennessee.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senate was so highly efficient to-day that the speeches prepared by many of us are going to waste, and many of them were very good speeches.

There are times in this body when partisanship runs wild and things are said that we are sorry for after they are said. The spirit evidenced on both sides of the aisle to-day in the passage of this very important piece of legislation ought to convince the country that in times of great emergency, when necessity calls, party lines are forgotten and common action invoked.

I indorse everything that has been said by Senators since the passage of the flood control bill praising the individual work of various Members of this body. I shall not repeat the fine encomiums paid the chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. JONES] and the members of his committee, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], and others who do not represent portions of the stricken lower valley, for the fine cooperation they have shown in the passage of the bill.

Mr. President, there are, however, a few names which have not been mentioned, which should be mentioned by one who comes from a State that has suffered but whose constituents this afternoon will hear "the glad tidings of good news" with praise and thanksgiving. This scene is so impressive, my heart is so warm, that my thoughts revert to the scenes of last year.

I saw the crevasse when it opened just north of Greenville. I saw the houses floating on a torrent of water a hundred miles wide and 600 miles long. I saw the levees as they were alive with refugees, many of them poor white people, but the large majority of them colored people.

I wish that some one possessed of proper talent could portray vividly and correctly the scenes that then occurred and the fine heroism displayed by the colored people as well as the white people of the stricken valley. They worked throughout the night and day against dangers that looked as though they would sweep them out of existence every moment, battling to keep the levees intact by throwing up bags of sand; they maintained peace and order, and did everything that was required of them during those months when they were in the refuge camps or occupied in working for the common cause.

We shall never forget how the newspapers of the country carried columns and columns and pages and pages of news chronicling the events of that time. Many of the great newspapers of the country sent special correspondents down into that flooded section in order that they might write news stories and give them to the reading and waiting public. The New York Times in particular rendered great service in arousing the sentiment of the people to the necessity of governmental action.

Mr. President, while I know that some criticism at that time fell upon those in high places for not calling an extra session of Congress to consider and enact legislation to take care of the emergency, I have always believed and still believe deeply that there was not a man connected with the administration here in Washington, from the President down, whose heart did not go out in sympathy to that stricken area. I came to Washington; I talked with the President; I talked with him many times about the flood situation, and no later than yesterday morning I talked with him. I know that the sympathy of the President of the United States has gone out to the people of the Mississippi Valley, and he is interested in behalf of the passage of this legislation. I know I violate no privileges of White House conference when I say that only yesterday morning, in the presence of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], General Jadwin, and myself, the President expressed the hope that such a measure would be passed as soon as possible, so that it might be written into law. He did not indorse this particular bill; he did not indorse any bill; but expressed the hope that this session of Congress should not adjourn until legislation should be passed taking care of the situation.

The Secretary of War, the Chief of Engineers, the Secretary of Commerce, all went to the stricken valley and performed a great service. Our people are and will always be grateful to them. Not only that, but my colleague the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] has referred to the mayor of Chicago. He called a great conference out in that western city. Representative men came there from every part of the country. I have never seen a conference called to promote a great project which was more successful than was the Chicago flood conference. I have wired my congratulations and thanks as one who lives in the stricken valley to Mayor Thompson for the interest that he has taken and the fine services that he has rendered in this matter. And, Mr. President, I do not want to take my seat without also expressing at least my personal appreciation and, I know, the appreciation of the people of the lower valley for the interest that was manifested and the fine services that were rendered from beginning to end by another man. Not only did he attend the Chicago conference, where he was the mouthpiece of Mayor Thompson in laying the plans, in writing the program, in making the conference the success that it was, but he has come to Washington and he has remained here, giving his fine talent and personality to helping along in this matter. I refer to the man who was once denied a seat in this body—William Lorimer.

I have said this, Mr. President, because my heart prompts the expression, and I know my people would have it so.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I merely wish to say, while this delightful interchange of compliments and congratulations is going on, that it seems to me that Members of the Senate generally who have given their approbation to the passage of the Mississippi flood control bill should also receive some degree of recognition. Most of us, of course, were not members of the committee which considered and reported the bill and had no opportunity to participate in the deliberations of the committee; but, after all, let me remind you, if I can do so without too much self-complacency, that we constituted the solid phalanx that voted for the bill and put it through.

The only physical connection that the waters of the State of Maryland have with the Mississippi River is the Youghiogheny River, a comparatively small stream, which finds its way from western Maryland into the waters of the Ohio, and then into the waters of the Mississippi, and ultimately into the waters of the Gulf of Mexico.

I imagine it is not realized by one out of a million people in the United States that any such stream forms a nexus between the State of Maryland and that great Gulf. Limited, however, as is the relationship of the watersheds of Maryland to the Mississippi River when Maryland was asked to come to the relief of our brethren in the basin of the Mississippi, she did not selfishly exclaim, "Are not the waters of Abanah and Pharpar better than all the waters of Israel?" but like her sister States sped to the succor of those brethren.

Not only did the remainder of us who are not members of the committee vote for the passage of that bill but I venture to say that never did Senators vote with a more extraordinary degree of promptitude for the passage of any bill recommended by a Senate committee than did we for the passage of that bill. We accepted the conclusions of the committee, because of the high degree of confidence that we entertained in it and because we knew that it had given the most painstaking and searching reflection to the whole subject involved in the bill. However, in conclusion, let me repeat in a poetic way what I have already said in ordinary speech. I adopt the words of John Milton, who tells us in one of his wonderful sonnets that—

They also serve who only stand and wait.

We Senators who are not members of the committee by which the Mississippi flood control bill was favorably reported can at least claim the satisfaction of feeling that we also served the fortunes of that bill though we had only the opportunity to stand and wait for the opportunity at once to give it our approval when reported.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I happen to reside on the Mississippi River at Memphis, and I have just a word which I desire to say on this occasion. I wish to thank each and every Member of this body who has voted so generously and so fairly and so justly to provide this measure of protection for the valley country that was overflowed last year. I join in all that has been so well said by those Senators who have taken part in promoting the passage of a flood relief bill; but there is one organization, Mr. President, that seems in some way to have been overlooked which I desire especially to mention. That organization is known as the Red Cross, presided over by Hon. John Barton Payne. I was on the scene at the time the relief work by the Red Cross was performed, and I know of the care that the representatives of this splendid organization gave to those in distress, to those who were sick, to those who were hungry, and to those who had to be clothed.

I wish to say that no organization in this country ever performed a task intrusted to it better than did the Red Cross in the time of the great flood. They spent their money with a generous hand fairly and justly to everybody who was in want. So I desire not only to thank the members of this body for the splendid work that they have done here to-day, but to pay this very inadequate and hasty tribute to the great Red Cross organization which helped us in the hour of need. Its representatives were on the scene at once. They were at work all the time, early and late, giving aid and comfort and succor to all. The organization raised much money. All parts of our country were generous in their contributions, and I do not know what many of our people, white and colored, would have done but for the Red Cross. We are all deeply grateful to this wonderful organization. And we are deeply grateful to the Senate for its generous action to-day. I do not recall the passage of any bill during the 11 years I have been in the Senate which has given me so much genuine satisfaction as has the passage of this bill. Flood control on the Mississippi is indeed a national problem, and if this bill becomes the law, as I have every reason to believe it will, the Federal Government will meet and do its duty fully. Again, gentlemen of the Senate, I thank you.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Agricultural Department appropriation bill for the year 1929.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11577) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. McNARY. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The bill just having been taken up, and many of us not knowing that it would be reached to-day, and many not having seen a print of the bill, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if he would be willing, after it has been laid before the Senate, to postpone the further consideration of it until to-morrow.

Mr. McNARY. I want to be fair in the matter and give every Senator an opportunity to read the bill and the report. I thought perhaps the bill might be read, and then we would wait until to-morrow to take up the consideration of the various amendments.

Mr. KING. That will be agreeable.

TAXATION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I desire to address the Senate for a few minutes on the matter of the fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, again we face the question whether Congress will do justice to the people of the District of Columbia and to the citizens of the United States in maintaining, improving, and beautifying the Capital City of the Nation. It should not be necessary to consider that question at this late date, 50 years after a fair, definite, and satisfactory plan for the financing and development of the city of Washington was adopted by solemn act of Congress. Again, it should not be necessary to face the problem at this time because the existing substantive law, approved by the Senate and the House of Representatives, has settled the matter on a basis which, while not entirely equitable, would permit Washington to keep her high place among the capitals of the world. However, we must face the same old question, as we have year after year, because the wise provisions of the organic act of 1878 have been set aside, because the substantive law of 1922, which is still in full legal force and effect, has been deliberately flouted, so that for the past four years Washington has been wronged and its progress has been halted. The trend is now toward a city of which, in the space of a few years, none of us may be proud. I measure my words, but the situation demands plain language.

Within the past few years, unintentionally or otherwise, Congress has assumed an attitude toward Washington which, if carried to its logical conclusion, will utterly destroy the partnership between the District of Columbia and the Federal Government, for the mutual benefit of both, which has existed for many decades. We are now following a policy, if it can be dignified by that term, which if continued will frustrate all those cherished plans held by the people of the United States from the very inception of the District of Columbia, those plans which would make Washington in architecture, in art, in learning, in all modern civic methods, the leading capital city of the world.

OBJECT AND METHOD OF FINANCING WASHINGTON

At the outset we must remember that Washington is altogether under the control of the United States Government, a condition which has existed for more than 50 years. Its administrative and executive officials are appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate. All its laws are enacted by the National Congress. Its policies have been shaped by that body. For that matter, there has been no serious disagreement between Congress and the people of the District as to the main course to be pursued. Its inhabitants are largely Government employees and officeholders, many of whom maintain a legal residence elsewhere, but all of whom concur in the plan of the fathers to make Washington one of the most beautiful spots in America and in the entire world. This program does not have, as its primary purpose, the pleasure or the amusement of the curiosity seeker, the idle visitor, or even the lover of beauty. Its object is to establish in the heart of the country a sacred shrine at which our people may renew their vows of citizenship and consecrate once more their love and devotion to their native land. The program is needed in order that the Government may conduct its important business amid seemly surroundings. It is required in order that the Capital of the United States may present to the nations of the world, who send their representatives here, that simple but impressive dignity which befits a country as great and powerful as ours.

Our own President Coolidge has expressed this same thought in better language. At the opening of the second session of the Sixty-ninth Congress in December, 1926, he said:

> If our country wishes to compete with others, let it not be in the support of armaments but in the making of a beautiful Capital City. Let it express the soul of America. Whenever an American is at the seat of his government, however traveled and cultured he may be, he ought to find a city of stately proportion, symmetrically laid out and adorned with the best that there is in architecture, which would arouse his imagination and stir his patriotic pride. In the coming years Washington should be not only the art center of our own country but the art center of the world. Around it should center all that is best in science, in learning, in letters, and in art.

It necessarily follows that expenditures for public improvements in the District of Columbia have been inordinate as compared with those of other communities having approximately the same population. It follows also that such expenditures must be continued in the future on substantially the same basis. The fact that this has been done without loading on the people of Washington an oppressive burden which would break their backs is due to the sharing of expenses by the Federal Government, which owns hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of real estate and personal property in the city on which taxes can not be levied, and to the wise provision of previous Congresses whereby there has been a just division of contributions between the local and the Federal authorities.

These expenditures, of course, have been authorized by the National Legislature, in which the District of Columbia has neither voice nor representation. The theory is that such appropriations should be made upon the recommendation of the District Commissioners, who are Federal officials in that they are appointed by the President, subject to the confirmation of the Senate. Sometimes they have been bona fide local residents and citizens of Washington; sometimes not. As Senators know, the board of commissioners consists of three men, one of whom is an Army engineer temporarily stationed here. This board makes its annual recommendations for the consideration of Congress. In some cases the estimates and suggestions are followed; in others the Senate and the House, exercising a rightful prerogative, refuse to follow such recommendations and appropriate more or less than desired—generally less—and for different purposes.

For over 40 years, from 1878 to 1921, 50 per cent of the expense of maintaining the District, as a rule, was borne by the Federal Government and 50 per cent came from the taxpayers of Washington. I say "as a rule," because appropriations for the last 14 years of this period, from 1908 to 1920, inclusive, without regard to water rates, ranged from $11,371,000 to $19,700,000, and during this time the District paid on an average $250,000 per annum more than the United States. However, the 50–50 rule was generally followed, as this proportionate basis of contribution was established by the organic act of June 11, 1878.

In 1922 Congress changed the proportion. The annual appropriation act, approved on June 29 of that year, established substantive law for the 60–40 plan of appropriating for the District. In other words, it provided that the share of the United States should be only 40 per cent and that of the local taxpayer should be 60 per cent. Note that, as in the case of the actual appropriations themselves, these percentages have been fixed by the National Legislature, in which the citizens of Washington have no voice. The total funds available during this period ranged from $20,500,000 to $27,200,000, and under the new plan the United States contributed from $8,081,000 to $10,762,000, or an average of $9,237,000 per annum.

During the entire period of proportionate contributions, or at least until the war, the program of city beautification was carried out, and for many years prior to 1914 the District was in debt to the Federal Government. Then came the war period, when, owing to scarcity of labor and high cost of materials, further civic development was restricted, and yet no reduction was made in the rate of tax assessments. Such receipts increased, and a large surplus was deposited in the United States Treasury, due, it will be noted, from failure to continue the development of street improvements, the building of public schools, and the upkeep of other city activities corresponding to the growth of Washington, which might be considered abnormal. This District surplus and the difficulty experienced by local citizens in obtaining proper benefits from the money paid by them as taxpayers into the Treasury of the United States is a story unto itself. Suffice it to say that for several years Congress refused to recognize the justice of a claim which should have been obvious, and that even now the District has not yet received the full benefit of such funds, which are not being matched by the United States on the same 50–50 basis under which they were collected. I shall advert to this matter later.

Beginning with the fiscal year 1925 the substantive law of 1922, which established the 60–40 plan of appropriations, was ignored by Congress and rendered inoperative by the annual provision of a lump-sum contribution of $9,000,000 on the part of the Federal Government, plus a proportion of certain miscellaneous revenues which under this fiscal arrangement the United States has released to the District of Columbia. Since that time total appropriations have ranged from $31,170,000 to $34,894,000, and the National Government has contributed only this $9,000,000 per annum, in round figures.

At this point may I quote for the information of Senators the language contained in the appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, to which I have already referred and which established substantive law for the 60–40 program. It provides—> that annually, from and after July 1, 1922, 60 per cent of such expenses of the District of Columbia shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia derived from taxation and privileges, and the remaining 40 per cent by the United States, excepting such items of expense as Congress may direct shall be paid on another basis.

It goes on to stipulate that, within a period of five years, the District must be put upon a cash basis as to the payment of expenses, and provides for a tax rate "on the full value and no less of all real estate and tangible personal property subject to taxation in the District of Columbia," which will not only pay the local proportion of annual expenditures but will also create a surplus fund sufficient to enable the District to get upon a cash-paying basis by the end of the fiscal year 1927. Almost any business man will agree with me that these provisions, instead of being lenient, are rather harsh, if anything, especially when we take into consideration the fact that there was also levied, under the provisions of the act, a tax on intangible personal property of five-tenths of 1 per cent of the full market value thereof.

Yet the substantive law has been ignored and disregarded since 1925, although it has never been repealed, should not be repealed, and, in my humble opinion, can not be repealed. By legislative indirection there has been substituted for the fixed ratio of 60–40, which percentage was inserted upon the insistence of certain Members of Congress for a change and accepted by the entire Congress and the people of the District of Columbia in good faith as a permanent fiscal policy, there has been substituted, I say, an annual lump-sum contribution of approximately $9,000,000, which has remained stationary, while the expenses of administration of the District and the many millions paid annually by District taxpayers have grown by leaps and bounds.

Note the figures. It will be seen that from 1920 to 1928 total annual appropriations for maintenance and improvements have increased over $14,000,000; that the District's proportion of $9,900,000 in 1920 has mounted to $24,800,000 in 1928; and that the United States' proportion of $9,700,000 in 1920 has dropped to $9,000,000 in 1928. In other words, there has been an increase of over 70 per cent in annual appropriations during this period of nine years, and yet the United States is paying less to-day (excluding consideration of certain divisible items of miscellaneous revenue) by $700,000 than it did in 1920. Of course, this great increase in annual expenditures has been met by heavier tax burdens, largely upon real property.

Aside from the legal situation, which I believe we are in honor bound to respect until or unless the law is changed, I respectfully submit that the proportionate system of contribution should be followed in the future as it was until the year 1925, and that the lump-sum system, if it can be dignified by that designation, is unsound in principle and vicious in actual practice.

LUMP SUM UNSOUND IN PRINCIPLE

I repeat that the present temporary expedient adopted from year to year, merely to prevent a deadlock between the two Houses of Congress on the annual District appropriation bill, a deadlock which might tie up practically all the necessary functions of the local civic government, is unsound in principle. In the first place, such contributions are contrary to the plan of financial partnership between the District and the Federal Government. They make the United States appear in the rôle of voluntary and benevolent donor, thereby placing the District in a false light before the people of the country. It is far easier to justify proportionate contributions than lump-sum gifts. The inevitable tendency—I will not say the purpose—of this plan would be a gradual reduction in the amount of the lump-sum payment, until at last the District taxpayer would be staggering under the whole burden of maintaining Washington, not only for himself but also for all the people of the United States.

Again, it is freely admitted that, in part at least, the contribution of the United States, whatever it may be, is in lieu of taxation on public property, the real estate being roughly appraised at almost $500,000,000. As this is one of the chief reasons for that contribution, it should vary in accordance with total expenditures. There is no justice in contributing $9,000,000 in 1925, when a total of $29,000,000 was required for all District purposes, and the same sum in 1929, when $39,000,000 is to be spent. If the advocates of the plan believe that $9,000,000 was fair in 1924, how can they claim that the same sum is fair in 1929? It is neither equitable nor just practically to double the burden upon one taxpayer and to make no change in the contribution of the other. To resort once more to figures, which tell their own story, in 1920 the District paid $9,990,000 and the United States $9,718,000. That was under the 50–50 plan. In 1924 the District paid $12,424,000, as against $8,081,000 for the United States, or 60–40. But in 1928, which is the last year for which appropriations have been made, the District has paid $24,872,000 and the United States has only paid $9,001,125. Where is the justice in such an arrangement? Where the equity?

In the third place the lump-sum arrangement destroys the safeguard of the unrepresented partner, the District, against excessive and unjust exaction of contributions by the national partner, which is the Federal Government. All of the taxing power is in the hands of Congress, and theoretically there is no limitation upon the amount which the District may be required to pay. Practically it is only limited by the District's ability to pay. Therefore a provision whereby the amount of money paid out by the National Government increases in proportion to the total amount appropriated appears to be a wise safeguard against undue or excessive expenditures.

Finally, the lump-sum arrangement is unsound in that it settles nothing and only invites annual disputes. Congress is reminded each year that a large cash "donation" is given to the Capital, and each year there must be a wrangle as to the amount. This is just as unfair to the House and Senate as it is to the people of the District of Columbia. It takes time; it provokes argument; it settles nothing. In its very nature it must be subject to revision each year, which should not be necessary, as the underlying principle and its actual application can easily be established or reestablished at this time. These vexatious and annoying questions can be disposed of almost at once if Congress will but put its hand to the task. Eventually we must return to the fixed ratio basis of appropriating for the District of Columbia. This is true for many reasons, of which I have named only a few. Why not do so now?

LUMP SUM VICIOUS IN PRACTICE

My second general proposition is that the lump-sum arrangement is harmful and vicious in actual practice. Since its informal adoption by Congress, the plan has brought none of the blessings claimed for it. Instead it has proved a curse to the people of Washington and to the people of the Nation, who are interested in the proper development of their Capital City. In 1924, one of the principal arguments of the lump-sum advocates was that, if the United States contributed a definite amount, irrespective of what the total annual expenditure might be, the commissioners in charge of District affairs could be given a free hand in deciding how much should be expended each year for the upkeep of the city. Actual practice gives the lie to this argument. We find that the commissioners' estimates, after careful revision, are arbitrarily reduced by the Bureau of the Budget, while the Appropriations Committee of the House further decreases the total allowances before permitting the bill to be approved. I quote from a letter dated March 9, 1928, written at my request by the District Commissioners:

> For the fiscal year 1929 the recommendations of departments for appropriations totaled $51,238,543. The commissioners in submitting their tentative estimates to the Budget Bureau on July 15, 1927, asked for $41,969,297. The commissioners were thereafter notified by that bureau that the final estimates should not exceed $38,804,780, plus $1,082,300, the latter sum representing items which the commissioners had contemplated submitting as supplemental estimates for the fiscal year 1928, but which the bureau decided should go in the 1929 estimates. This made an allowable total submission for 1929 by the commissioners of $39,887,080, with the privilege of recommending any further necessary estimates which the commissioners would be unable to include in the allowable total. The total final estimates submitted to the Budget Bureau by the commissioners on September 15, 1927, amounted to $42,447,810, a sum nearly $9,000,000 less than the departments deemed necessary. In recommending this amount of $42,447,810, the commissioners were guided by the intention to continue the $1.70 tax rate of 1928 as the tax rate for 1929, and on this basis they felt that the District—with the provision of $9,000,000 by the United States—could take care of that amount.

Carrying this a step further, the Budget for 1929 as actually submitted to Congress provides for a total of $40,431,186, which is nearly $11,000,000 less than recommended by the heads of departments, and $2,000,000 less than the final estimates of the District Commissioners. Obviously the highest figure of $51,000,000 represented actual needs, but the Commissioners could not insist upon that sum with the United States only contributing $9,000,000 and the balance to be raised by still heavier taxation upon District residents.

This is only a case of history repeating itself. What is happening for the fiscal year of 1929 has occurred during each of the last 10 years, at least. Take 1928, on which the total recommendations of department heads to the District Commissioners are still available. Such estimates for that year totaled $47,269,616. Yet the amount appropriated in the annual supply act of the District of Columbia was only $36,717,185. In other words, the amount actually appropriated by Congress was $10,552,431 less than the estimates recommended by department heads for the fiscal year 1928. There is no doubt that the total sum desired represented actual needs.

As to previous years, detailed figures are not available, but I desire to quote a statement submitted to me by Maj. D. J. Donovan, who has been auditor of the District for over 30 years. It is as follows:

> In my opinion, a very conservative estimate shows that the annual appropriations on an average for the eight years were $6,000,000 less each year than the estimates of appropriations recommended by department heads. Using this average for the eight-year period would mean that the total appropriations for the eight years were about $48,000,000 less than the total estimates recommended by department heads. Adding this total to the definitely ascertained difference for the fiscal years 1928 and 1929 would mean that during the past 10 years the appropriations carried in the annual appropriation acts of the District of Columbia have been approximately $70,000,000 less than the estimates of appropriations recommended by department heads to the commissioners.

What has happened? During the past few years the development of Washington has been impeded, its growth stunted, and most of the money raised has been devoted to maintenance and operating expenses or to seminational projects in which local citizens are hardly interested to a greater extent than are people in other sections of the country. In 1928 over 75 per cent of the total appropriations went into maintenance and operating costs, and estimates indicate that this percentage will be increased in 1929. Such costs in themselves are greater because Washington is the Capital City of the Nation, for streets must be wider, larger police expenditures are required, and so on down the line.

A comparison with other American cities proves that, by reason of the present fiscal policy, available funds in Washington are mostly needed for maintenance costs, and that expenditures for permanent improvements, as a rule, are considerably less, in proportion to population. The following table which lists six other comparable cities is enlightening in this regard:

Comparison of permanent improvements for 1926

	Population	Permanent improvements
Washington	528,000	$7,852,000
Cleveland	960,000	21,697,000
Baltimore	810,000	13,760,000
San Francisco	733,000	13,015,000
Milwaukee	520,000	15,687,000
Pittsburgh	631,000	15,685,000
Detroit	1,242,000	61,100,000

What are the necessary and desirable improvements proposed for the city of Washington? The District Commissioners inform us that items totaling $53,902,000 should be incorporated in an expenditure program during the next five years. Of course, practically none of them can be undertaken as long as the present fiscal arrangement continues. Here are the principal ones:

Airport for air mail, air commerce, and civilian air activities of the United States, $1,500,000.

Farmers' produce market, $600,000 to $1,000,000.

Main and intercepting sewers, $2,810,000.

Sewer service for houses now without same, $4,000,000.

Site and construction of incinerators for city refuse, $650,000.

Garage and shop for city refuse division, $150,000.

Needed bridges, $2,366,000.

Land and buildings for municipal center, $19,000,000. This is needed because the present building and site are to be taken over by the United States.

Extension of streets and avenues, $4,000,000.

Extension program for free public library, $1,696,000.

Hospitals and industrial homes, $4,550,000.

Old cell wings of District Jail, which have been condemned, $500,000.

Public schools—five-year building program, $11,000,000.

Elimination of grade crossings, $680,000.

None of these proposed expenditures are for unreasonable purposes. In fact, American citizens generally will be shocked to learn that Washington is so far behind in its school program, its sewerage system, its street and library development that it will require five years to secure the improvements actually needed for the purpose at this time, and that Congress still refuses to make the necessary appropriations.

The District Commissioners also furnish a list of desirable improvements which will soon become actual needs. These include water-front development, bridges, and parks, the total cost being placed at an additional $29,209,000.

Mr. President, I ask permission to insert, at the close of my remarks, an illuminating letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, dated March 9, 1928. This contains the figures I have quoted, but discusses them in greater detail, and also gives the list of necessary improvements, together with the list of desirable improvements above mentioned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[The letter appears as Exhibit A at the conclusion of Mr. PHIPPS's speech.]

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, but it may be argued that this deplorable condition is not the fault of the lump sum. Unquestionably, the responsibility lies at the door of Congress, and I maintain that it can largely be traced to the lump-sum system, which was advanced as a cure-all for the District's ills and which has proved to be a quack remedy indeed. The situation is due to a disposition prevailing in Congress for the last 10 years to assess against the District taxpayer "all that the traffic will bear" and to reduce gradually the contribution of the Federal Government until it reaches the vanishing point. Certainly, conditions are no better than they were when the lump-sum experiment was inaugurated. The plan has failed, and the sooner Congress realizes it the better it will be for everyone. Dissatisfaction is general, and properly so. The solution is a return to that orderly system from which we should never have departed, a system which charges proper proportions of expense against the two governments, local and national, which avoids confusion, which enables plans to be made for the future and works justice both to the taxpayers of Washington and the other taxpayers throughout the United States.

TAX RATE COMPARISON WITH OTHER CITIES

Having shown that in principle and practice the lump-sum plan is a deadly poison in the vitals of the city government, I will discuss briefly the main argument against the 50-50 or 60-40 program of proportionate contributions. Some Members of Congress say in effect: "We admit that the substantive law is being violated by us each year. We admit that in theory there is no justification for the lump-sum method. We admit that, for this or other reasons, the District of Columbia does not secure the permanent improvements needed by its people. But we take our positions squarely on one point—the people of Washington, with all the privileges they are supposed to enjoy as residents of the Nation's Capital—do not pay as much in taxes as the folks back home. It may be that the District government is run more economically than other large cities of the country. It may be that there is less overhead and no graft. Whatever the reason, the people of the United States are entitled to the benefit of that condition rather than the people of Washington, and until they pay as much or more than the folks back home they have no cause for complaint. Until then they are not going to get an additional cent out of the United States Government."

That is the argument in a few homely words. It is somewhat appealing if the major premise is true. Let us see if it is. After research, conducted in many quarters, and after comparison with other cities, a comparison difficult to make, because Washington is unique, I stake my judgment as a business man of considerable experience on the proposition that it is false. I contend that the people of the District of Columbia pay well for the benefits they now receive, that the taxes levied are on a substantial parity with those of other cities, and that any greater tax burden would not only be unjust but well-nigh fatal to the city's welfare.

The present District tax rate on real property, which is $1.70 per hundred, does not appear to be excessive. In fact, compared to other communities, the rate itself is rather low. But the tax rate must be considered in connection with the assessed valuation. The percentage must be multiplied by the assessment in order to arrive at the actual amount paid by the property owner. Under the provisions of the law I have quoted, and in accordance with actual practice, real-estate assessments in Washington are made on the basis of true value. It has been estimated that the average is about 96 per cent of actual value in the District of Columbia, so that the requirement of the law is substantially fulfilled. It must be admitted that real estate in other cities is not assessed for its full valuation, whatever may be the law on the subject. One reason, I presume, is that in Washington the assessor is responsible to Congress, the taxing power, whereas in other cities his office is elective and he is responsible to the voter, who is the taxpayer.

Whatever the reason, there can be no question as to the fact. Washington real estate, privately owned, is assessed at $1,137,000,000, as compared to an assessment of $1,403,000,000 on Chicago real estate. Although the population of Pittsburgh is at least one-fifth more than that of Washington, and despite the industrial wealth of the Pennsylvania city, District of Columbia assessments exceed those of Pittsburgh by $70,000,000. A comparison of 14 large cities shows that Washington's real-estate assessments are almost 50 per cent greater than the average per capita assessment of the others.

I call attention to the great increase in real-estate assessments in this city during the past 20 years, an increase altogether out of proportion to its growth. The figure of $255,325,000 in 1908 had been raised to $426,624,000 by 1920 and to $472,874,000 in 1922. This was on a two-thirds basis of valuation. Then the substantive law of 1922, already mentioned, came into effect, with the result that real-estate assessments have advanced, on a full-valuation basis, from $723,200,000 in 1923 to $1,137,193,000 in 1928. Such assessments have been compared with other large cities having populations of 250,000 to 1,368,000 people, and indicate an average of $2,154 for the 528,000 residents of the District, as against an average of $1,455 per person for the residents of these 17 cities.

The startling figures continue. Washington's increase in assessment the last year alone was greater than a three-year increase in Atlanta, San Francisco, Cleveland, Newark, St. Paul, Pittsburgh, Minneapolis, Louisville, Boston, Memphis, Milwaukee, or New Orleans. In fact, over a three-year period, the Washington increase was greater by $40,000,000 than that of nine of these cities combined. Comparisons, as I say, are difficult to make; but when we bring assessments to a common level and make deductions for bonded indebtedness, we find that Washington's taxes are above the average of the principal cities of the United States.

The Washington Board of Trade went into this subject thoroughly, obtaining figures from practically all available sources, and I desire to refer Senators to the tabulations submitted by that association and printed in the House hearings on the District of Columbia appropriation bill for the next fiscal year. These tables are enlightening. To my mind they show conclusively that Washington's real-estate taxes are high as compared to other communities, and that there is nothing to the argument that Washingtonians should be forced to pay higher taxes in order that they may be under the same burden as exists in other sections of the country. Substantially they now pay the same taxes or more; substantially they are now under the same burden or even a greater one.

TAX-EXEMPT PROPERTY

Mr. President, before leaving the subject of assessed valuations I call attention to the fact that there are other tax-exempt properties in addition to those of the United States Government which, as I have indicated, have been appraised at nearly half a billion dollars. The District of Columbia has tax-exempt real estate estimated at $50,000,000. Foreign governments, the guests of the United States, have tax-exempt real estate estimated at $4,000,000; while charitable, educational, and religious organizations own similar property appraised at $70,000,000. Certainly most of the benefits of such exempt property inure to the people of the Nation rather than to the taxpayers of the District of Columbia.

Let it be noted, also, that the Government is acquiring real estate in Washington at a rapid rate and that it has recently taken off the tax rolls some of the most valuable tracts of land in the District. No taxes are paid on the Union Station Plaza, the Mall, or on parks. The present building program of the United States, which has been approved by Congress, will take from the rolls additional real property having a value of at least $25,000,000 and will reduce local tax returns accordingly. It is altogether proper that the Government should secure such properties and own them in perpetuity. I am not complaining about that. I am merely advancing it as an additional reason why, if we are to carry out the broad plan of improvement and beautification of the Nation's Capital, we should be willing to stand a proper share of the expense.

TAX ON INTANGIBLES

When we consider the local tax on personal property, no room is left for doubt. The rate of five-tenths of 1 per cent on the full value of intangibles is clearly unreasonable and above any rate exacted elsewhere in this country, so far as I have been able to learn. Not only that, but to a large extent, the tax is actually collected. Personal property assessments for the District during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, totaled $623,818,000, which produced revenue amounting to $6,290,134. This is five times as much as was assessed in Minneapolis, with its population of 442,000; twice as much as Cincinnati; and almost four times as much as Cleveland, with a population of 960,000 people.

A 5-mill rate on intangible personal property means that in Washington a person with an income of $500 per year on a trust fund of $10,000 invested in bonds or securities would be obliged to pay $50 out of the meager $500. Observe that the tax of 5 mills is not upon the income, but is upon the market value of the principal investment; and that it must be paid whether or not the holder derives any income whatever from the securities in question. I want Senators to bear this in mind when they are told that the District is undertaxed.

So much for the argument that Washington does not pay taxes comparable to those in other sections of the country. She does. That fact has been clearly demonstrated time and again, the most recent occasion being before the House Subcommittee on Appropriations, at hearings to which reference has already been made. It is evident that District residents pay well for what they receive and, in addition, are shouldering to an undue extent the burden of building up the Nation's Capital for the benefit of all the people of the United States.

It may be popular with the folks back home to demonstrate how heavy a tax burden Washington residents are forced to pay, so as to prove that the District burden exceeds the taxes in the State. It may be good politics, but it is poor statesmanship. The people of any community should pay adequately for what they receive in public benefits; and they should pay no more, irrespective of the taxes levied in any other part of the country. Members of Congress may talk about the many advantages possessed by the people of the District that are not enjoyed by their constituents. I have listed a few that Washington does not have as she should—homely items such as adequate bridges and needed sewers. Is there any large city in your home State where grade-school children throughout the entire municipality can only attend sessions half a day because of lack of sufficient buildings? How many cities with a population of more than 100,000 inhabitants house many of their school children in portable frame buildings with outside washrooms? Irrespective of the rate of taxation, I wish to state that my home city of Denver has more adequate school accommodations than Washington, the Capital of the Nation. We have better library facilities and better-cared-for streets. We will not have to wait for five years in order to obtain sufficient schools for our children; nor will we have to beseech Congress each year for that purpose. We have those schools now. I do not hesitate to tell to the people of Denver the facts about the District of Columbia, and they do not begrudge a Federal contribution to help to provide similar advantages for the residents of Washington who are, after all, but the employees of the United States.

EXAMPLES OF INJUSTICE

I have said that the tendency is to eliminate needed local improvements and to make the District pay for national or seminational projects out of its own funds. Let me list some of the instances in which the Federal Government is not dealing fairly with the taxpayers of Washington.

First, there is the appropriation for expenditures under the jurisdiction of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission. The law specifically provides that on account of this admittedly national project the United States shall pay its definite proportion of total expenditures. Yet annual allotment of funds for this purpose is included in the District appropriation bill, which is written on a lump-sum basis rather than that of proportionate contribution. There is no suggestion on the part of those who would include such items in the District bill that the lump sum be increased accordingly so as to meet the intent of the law creating the commission. Either the proportionate system should be restored, or else all of these seminational projects should be excluded from the District appropriation bill.

Those who wish to increase the tax burden of the District do not stop with this particular appropriation bill. The Interior Department act for 1929 makes the customary annual provision for the Freedmen's Hospital, but for the first time it provides that 50 per cent of the cost of a new building for this national institution shall be paid by the taxpayers of the District of Columbia. In the case of the Columbia Hospital for Women, the original cost of the buildings, $300,000, was paid by the Federal Government, but later on Congress, in its wisdom, decided to charge half of that amount to the District of Columbia. This was done, and of course no appeal could be taken from the decision of the National Legislature.

Then there is the water situation. The aqueduct bringing the main supply of water into Washington was originally paid for by the United States, and distributing lines within the District were constructed at local expense. The cost was about equal, so that here we had a water-supply system obtained on a 50–50 basis. Now it has become necessary to install another or auxiliary system, at an expenditure of about $8,750,000. What happened? The District of Columbia is being made to pay all of the construction cost of the new work. In this connection I ask Senators to bear in mind that the United States does not pay any water rental or other charge—not a cent.

Another instance is the so-called District surplus, to which reference has already been made. By the act of February 2, 1925, Congress recognized the existence of surplus revenues in the United States Treasury belonging to the District of Columbia, and the amount finally totaled $5,257,528.75. All but $1,028.75 has been appropriated since that time. Of the total sum, $4,656,500 was for the purchase of sites and the erection of school buildings, and $600,000 was to complete the purchase of land for the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway. The park item was seminational in character, and as a matter of fact all previous appropriations had been on a 50–50 basis. Just the same, the final link in the system was purchased entirely at the expense of District taxpayers. For that matter, the United States did not participate in any of the expenditures involving the $5,000,000 surplus, notwithstanding the fact that these revenues accumulated during the period of the half-and-half plan of making appropirations for the expenses of the District.

Reference has been made to the act of June 29, 1922, which established the 60–40 ratio and which provided, in addition, that the District should be "put upon a cash-paying basis as to payment of expenses," during the succeeding period of five years. Pursuant to the direction of the act, the commissioners determined that it would be necessary to raise, over and above the annual amount needed to pay the District's proportion of appropriations, the further sum of $3,000,000 as a cash fund, this amount to be included in the tax rate for each of the five fiscal years beginning with 1923. That fund is on hand, and while expenses have materially increased, the District is ready to go ahead on a cash basis and can obtain needed improvements, without going into debt or floating bonds, if the National Government is but ready to do its share.

SUMMARY—WHO PAYS THE TAXES?

Just a moment to summarize. I have referred to the original object of developing and beautifying the city of Washington, on which we are all agreed. I have recalled briefly the history of the District's fiscal relations with the United States. I have shown that the interests of the two governments are identical, that the cost of maintenance is greater because this is our Capital, and that the cost of public improvements is much more because of the national or seminational projects which must be located here. I have proved that important local needs have been sidetracked in order to make way for these other undertakings, because there is insufficient money for all purposes under the present arrangement.

Most alarming of all, it has been shown that for the past 10 years there has been a growing tendency to charge the cost of everything—maintenance, local improvements, and national projects—against the taxpayers of the District of Columbia. The attempt, so far successful, has been conducted as follows: In spite of the fact that the total sum required for District purposes has grown by leaps and bounds, the actual contribution of the Federal Government has been reduced by changing the whole plan of Federal contribution from a systematic, proportionate basis to the arrangement for a lump sum, devoted grudgingly to District purposes as a voluntary donation or actual charity. This has been supplemented by adding materially to the list of projects for which the local government must pay. In all sincerity, I believe that the ultimate effect, if not the ultimate object, is to reduce the Government's share of expenses to nothing at all. Should anyone doubt this conclusion, let him harken to the threat in certain quarters that if there is vigorous complaint against the present lump-sum arrangement even that aid will be withheld by Congress.

I have offered figures which prove that the assessed value of taxable real estate in Washington has been increased during the last nine years by 160 per cent and that the real-property levy actually payable has been increased by 200 per cent. It is evident that such taxes can not be made greater and that personal property rates are now entirely too high. We have come to the parting of the ways. With Washington's imperative and growing needs, the present fiscal arrangement can not continue. The limit has been reached. As chairman of the Senate subcommittee on District appropriations, I raise my voice publicly in solemn warning, as I have often done in meetings with my colleagues of the Senate and of the House of Representatives.

The time has come for plain speaking. Does anyone doubt that Washington has practically reached the limit of her taxable resources and that the slight normal increase will prove grossly insufficient for public needs? Does anyone cherish the delusion that this is a city of great wealth, and that heavy taxes are levied without consequent hardship on the people who pay them? Who are the taxpayers of Washington?

The taxpayers of Washington are the public servants of the United States, the employees of the Federal Government. They are modestly paid; they are under heavy expense. The great majority of the homes here are small, for in most sections of the city every 18 or 20 feet represents a private dwelling. Many thousands of Government employees can not afford the initial outlay to buy these homes, which though humble are too costly for them, and so they rent their living quarters. But still they pay the tax. It is passed on to them, of course, as in every other city in the country; and thus we have the Federal employee standing the burden just the same.

Over in the House of Representatives hearings have just been held on a bill for a horizontal increase in Government salaries, and there has been a great deal of sentiment and sympathy expressed for such a measure. Doubtless salaries are too low in many cases. But what are we doing? We are giving the Government employee his modest wage with one hand, and we are taking it away from him, in the form of high District taxes, with the other. Is that good business? Is that statesmanship? As one who has studied this deplorable situation for many years, and who can therefore speak with some authority, I appeal to Congress to right a great wrong and to return to a just, orderly, and progressive method of doing business in the city of Washington, the Capital of the United States.

EXHIBIT A

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, COMMISSIONERS OF
THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, March 9, 1928.

Hon. LAWRENCE C. PHIPPS,
Chairman Senate Subcommittee on Appropriations
in charge of the District of Columbia bill.

DEAR SENATOR PHIPPS: In compliance with your request the commissioners submit this letter setting forth briefly their position with respect to the question of fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia.

As you are aware, the District appropriation act approved June 29, 1922, established substantive law for the 60–40 plan of appropriating for the District of Columbia. But beginning with the fiscal year 1925 and to the present time, this law has been rendered inoperative by the annual provision of a lump-sum contribution of $9,000,000 by the United States, plus a proportion of certain miscellaneous revenues which, under this fiscal arrangement, the United States has released to the District of Columbia. The District budget for 1929, as transmitted to Congress, provides for the continuance of the $9,000,000 contribution in that year.

In their report to Congress for the fiscal year 1927, the commissioners called attention to the constantly mounting annual budgets of the District, and believing that this increase will in all likelihood continue in even larger measure in the future, and believing also that further material increases in appropriations can not be provided for under existing fiscal arrangements without imposing an excessive tax burden on the community, they recommended that Congress reestablish the substantive law of June 29, 1922, and that appropriations hereafter be made in accordance with that law.

A brief study of the finances of the District in recent years will show the great increase in taxes which the community has had to pay.

In 1920, the last year under the half-and-half system, the appropriations totaled $19,709,292, the District paying $9,990,386 and the United States $9,718,906.

In 1924, the last year in which appropriations were made on the 60–40 basis, the appropriations totaled $20,505,454, the District paying $12,424,349, and the United States $8,081,105.

In 1925, the first year of the lump-sum plan, the appropriations totaled $31,183,151, the District paying $22,037,796, and the United States $9,145,355.

In 1928, the last year for which appropriations have been made, the appropriations totaled $33,873,899, the District paying $24,872,874, and the United States $9,001,125.

It will be seen that between 1920 and 1928 the appropriations have increased over $14,000,000; that the District's proportion of $9,900,000 in 1920 has mounted to $24,800,000 in 1928; and that the United States' proportion of $9,700,000 in 1920 has droppeed to $9,000,000 in 1928.

In other words, in the face of an increase of over 70 per cent in appropriations during this period, the United States is paying less to-day (excluding consideration of certain divisible items of miscellaneous revenue) by $700,000 than it did in 1920.

The major part of this great increase in appropriations has been met by increased taxation of real property.

In 1920 the assessed value of taxable real estate amounted to (on the basis of two-thirds value as then required by law) $426,623,630, the tax rate was $1.50, and the total levy, or tax collectible, was $6,399,354. In 1928, the present fiscal year, the assessed value of real estate (on the basis of full value) is $1,137,193,162, the tax rate is $1.70, and the levy, or tax collectible, is $19,169,934.

The assessed value of taxable real estate has been increased during this period between 1920 and 1928 by over 160 per cent, and the levy, or the amount actually payable in taxes, by 200 per cent.

The commissioners do not claim that the present tax rate is excessive, but they do believe that careful and competent investigation would show that the combination of the present assessment and tax rate imposes on the people of the community as great a tax as they should in justice and reason be expected to pay.

If it be granted that real estate is now assessed to its limit, and that the tax rate of $1.70 should not be increased, the commissioners are then confronted with the fact that the maximum appropriation budget which they could recommend would be about $42,500,000, with due provision for supplemental and deficiency requirements. This amount assumes a contribution of $9,000,000 by the United States. That such a sum is wholly inadequate, if the District is to properly progress both as a community and as the National Capital, must be patent when the following statements are considered:

For the fiscal year 1929 the recommendations of departments for appropriations totaled $51,238,543. The commissioners in submitting their tentative estimates to the Budget Bureau on July 15, 1927, asked for $41,969,297. The commissioners were thereafter notified by that bureau that the final estimates should not exceed $38,804,780, plus $1,082,300, the latter sum representing items which the commissioners had contemplated submitting as supplemental estimates for the fiscal year 1928, but which the bureau decided should go in the 1929 estimates. This made an allowable total submission for 1929 by the commissioners of $39,887,080, with the privilege of recommending any further necessary estimates which the commissioners would be unable to include in the allowable total. The total final estimates submitted to the Budget Bureau by the commissioners on September 15, 1927, amounted to $42,447,810, a sum nearly $9,000,000 less than the departments deemed necessary. In recommending this amount of $42,447,810, the commissioners were guided by the intention to continue the $1.70 tax rate of 1928 as the tax rate for 1929, and on this basis they felt that the District (with the provision of $9,000,000 by the United States) could take care of that amount.

The Budget for 1929 as submitted to Congress carries a total of $40,431,186 for the District, a sum nearly $11,000,000 less than recommended by the departments and $2,000,000 less than the amount contained in the final estimates of the commissioners. The commissioners, in acting upon the departments' recommendations, felt that practically all the $51,000,000 represented necessary needs, but they could not see their way clear to ask the Budget Bureau to approve and Congress to appropriate a greater sum than the present tax rate of $1.70 could raise in 1929 with the United States contributing only $9,000,000. Hence the necessity on their part of reducing the estimates of the departments by $9,000,000.

There are a great many improvements that are now needed for the proper development of Washington which may only be made if the Federal contribution is substantially increased. Transmitted herewith is a list of necessary improvements considered and approved by the commissioners, totaling $53,902,000, which the commissioners believe should be incorporated in an expenditure program during the next five years. But most of these improvements, however important and necessary, can not be taken care of under the present fiscal arrangements. There is also transmitted a list of desirable improvements amounting to $29,209,200. It is only a question of a short while probably before these, too, will become necessary needs. The lists mentioned were presented by the Washington Board of Trade before the House Subcommittee on Appropriations in charge of the District bill, and appear in the House hearings on pages 1091–1098.

The commissioners also transmit herewith a report on fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia submitted to them by the committee of delegates (appointed by them) to the Twentieth National Conference on Taxation held in Toronto, Canada, in October, 1927. The commissioners earnestly urge your careful consideration of this report.

In connection with the subject discussed in this letter it should not be overlooked that the maintenance and operating costs of the local government represent in 1928 over 75 per cent of the total appropriations for that year, and for 1929, based on the District budget as transmitted to Congress, 76½ per cent would go for this purpose. These costs are constantly increasing.

It has been suggested that the District might meet the present situation regarding needed improvements by having Congress authorize a bond issue. The commissioners do not believe that a bond issue is desirable, at least at this time, and certainly not before a more satisfactory fiscal relationship is provided than that which now prevails. A bond issue under existing conditions might result in placing the whole cost of financing, including interest and sinking-fund provision, on the people of the District of Columbia.

The commissioners feel that the entire matter of fiscal relations might well be thoroughly and systematically investigated, as there are many differences of opinion regarding this subject. It would seem to be desirable to establish some plan which would as far as possible remove the subject from the field of constant controversy. There has been suggested the appointment of a commission to thoroughly investigate the subject and from time to time report recommendations to Congress as to the proper basis of contribution between the United States and the District of Columbia.

If in the consideration of this matter by your committee no better plan or conclusion may be reached, then the commissioners would welcome the appointment of a permanent commission to inquire into the subject and from time to time to report its recommendations to Congress.

Very truly yours,

PROCTOR L. DOUGHERTY,
SIDNEY F. TALIAFERRO,
W. B. LADUE,
Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

LIST OF NECESSARY IMPROVEMENTS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, INCORPORATED IN AN EXPENDITURE PROGRAM FOR COMPLETION WITHIN A PERIOD OF FIVE YEARS

Airport $1,500,000

Under the recent legislation by Congress affecting commerce by air, the Federal Government provides emergency landing fields and lights the airways. The municipalities are required to furnish the landing fields. It is therefore essential that the city of Washington provide an adequate, safe, and convenient airport for the use of the air mail, the air commerce, and of the civilian air activities of the Federal Government. Unusual unanimity among the persons and organizations interested has been obtained on the location of the site and the kind of airport to be obtained. The figure given of $1,500,000 is believed to be an outside figure, and excludes savings which may be expected by the dumping of dredge material from the Potomac River and the dumping of ashes and other refuse from the city of Washington if and when the street cleaning department is furnished with the necessary trucks, etc., and—if it is felt advisable when the time comes—by the erection of buildings on the field by private parties interested instead of by the municipal government. This project should by all means be started immediately. The sea wall should be built, right of way obtained to the field, and roads constructed. After this is done, within the next year or so, the speed of construction of the final airport can be gauged according to the rapidity of the development of aerial commerce.

Farmers' produce market ..... $600,000–$1,000,000

Public Act 776, Sixty-ninth Congress, second session, authorized and directed the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to negotiate for the acquirement of a site for the farmers' produce market, at a cost not to exceed $600,000, and to report to Congress with their recommendations not later than December 15, 1927. It is generally admitted that it is advisable for a municipality to provide facilities for a farmers' produce market and that it is a good investment for the city, provided the total cost is held down to a reasonable sum. The present farmers' produce market is to be eliminated in the immediate future by the new building program of the Federal Government. The new facilities should, therefore, be provided without delay. The amount needed, $600,000 to $1,000,000, would depend upon final location.

Extension of northeast boundary trunk sewer, from Twenty-first and A Streets NE. to Anacostia River, just south of south lock of Lake Kingman $1,212,000

The northeast boundary sewer, one of the largest sewers in the world and carrying the combined drainage from an enormous area, extending west to Fourteenth Street NW., north to Park Road and Rock Creek Church Road, and south to Florida Avenue, discharging in times of storm at Twenty-second and A Streets NE. The discharge from this sewer is carried in a sluggish open channel into the recently created Lake Kingman. In that Lake Kingman, created in connection with the Anacostia River development, is designed to be maintained as a more or less quiescent inland lake, the discharge of even diluted sewage will create a decided nuisance.

To remedy this evil the commissioners have made studies at the behest of the Secretary of War, resulting in a proposal to extend this northeast boundary sewer to discharge at a point below the outlet of Lake Kingman and directly into the Anacostia River.

Since the original conception of this extension there has been constructed the Eastern High School at a location in close proximity to the present sewer outlet, and as the result of the location of this large school there have been many complaints as to the insanitary condition existing at the mouth of the sewer.

It has been recognized that the above sewer extension must be undertaken before Lake Kingman or this section of Anacostia Park can function as recreation centers.

Oxon Run intercepting sewer $750,000

The Oxon Run drainage area is an area comprising over 2,000 acres, and located between Nichols Avenue and Alabama Avenue on the west and the Maryland line on the east. This area is largely undeveloped. However, several communities have sprung up in this area, where streets are dedicated and houses constructed. Notable among these communities is the larger part of Congress Heights and the recent addition of Hillcrest. There are between 200 and 300 houses in the communities referred to above. Despite repeated applications by individuals and citizens associations it has been impracticable to provide sanitary sewers for any of these houses due to the lack of an outlet sewer.

The item submitted herewith is for an outlet sewer for this drainage area, which would be located in the valley of Oxon Run and located approximately parallel and close to the District line. This interceptor would eventually discharge by gravity to the site of the proposed treatment sewage plant at which point its effluent would receive treatment in common with all other treatment of sewage by the District.

For completing upper Potomac interceptor $425,000

This interceptor in its entirety will extend along the north shore of the Potomac River from Rock Creek to the District line, and is designed to intercept all sanitary drainage from the area sloping toward the river between the limits named. There are now four points in the upper Potomac River where large volumes of raw sewage are now being discharged. The construction of this interceptor will result in removing this pollution to the river and in addition will provide an outlet for future Maryland sewage now dscharged into the Potomac River just west of the District line and discharging from Edgemoor, Battery Park, a portion of Chevy Chase, Drummond, Somerset, and Friendship Heights.

A reciprocal agreement has been entered into between the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Commissioners of the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission whereby Maryland sewage may discharge through the District sewers upon the payment by Maryland to the District of the estimated cost of handling said sewage.

Fifty per cent of this entire interceptor will have been constructed upon the expenditure of funds already appropriated for this sewer.

For completing upper Anacostia main interceptor along the Anacosta River, between Benning Road and the District line $423,000

This interceptor is located to flank the east side of the Anacostia River and to intercept all sewage which now or at a later date would discharge in a crude state into said river, and the construction of this interceptor should be carried on more or less simultaneously with the Anacostia River improvement north of Benning Bridge.

At the present time there are within the limits of the District two sanitary sewers discharging raw sewage into the east side of the Anacostia River north of Benning Road. One of these sewers, in addition to carrying the sewage from approximately 5,000 persons residing in the District, also carries the sewage from an additional population in Maryland residing in Capitol Heights. A further program now being considered by the Maryland authorities proposes to contribute more Maryland sewage from Seat Pleasant, which sewage will also discharge through the existing District sewer.

This interceptor will not only intercept sewage from District sewers but is designed to be available for all of those communities lying in Maryland close to the District line, viz, Silver Spring, Takoma Park, North Takoma, Mount Rainier, Bladensburg, Hyattsville, Riverdale, College Park, Berwyn, and other smaller communities which now discharge crude sewage into the upper reaches of the Anacostia River and consequently pollute that portion of the Anacostia which traverses the District.

The Maryland sewage from the communities referred to above may discharge into District sewers by virtue of an agreement entered into between the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the commissioners of the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission, under which agreement the Maryland authorities would pay to the District an amount equal to the cost to the District of pumping said Maryland sewage.

There has already been expended on this project of flanking the east side of the Anacostia River a total of $319,500.

Sewer service for houses where privies exist..... $4,000,000

There are now being maintained in the District of Columbia 3,431 box privies. The number of such privies are increasing rather than decreasing, as is evidenced by a count which indicates that the number has increased by 682 in the past five years.

To eliminate these privies, which are considered as a source of possible disease, necessitates the coordination of appropriations for grading, for water service, and for sanitary sewers. Sewers, being water carriers, are worthless unless water is available. Water can not be made available until such time as the streets are brought to the established grade, in that it is considered necessary that water mains be laid at a constant depth below the surface.

It is felt that effort should be put forth to introduce sanitary improvements in these sections known as Deanwood, Kenilworth, Burrville, Barry Farm, etc., in which communities the majority of privies exist and which communities are practically without modern improvements.

Site for and construction of incinerators, city refuse division.. $650,000

The maximum working capacity of the trash-disposal plant is about 800 cubic yards per day. In times of heavy rains, etc., this capacity is materially reduced by the inadequacy of the incinerators to burn the wet paper which can not be baled. At such times it is necessary to place the excess on the Congressional Cemetery dump and burn it there.

In addition to this bulk, a considerable amount of the material received at the Congressional Cemetery dump from the various United States Government activities is of a combustible nature and must be burned daily to avoid the possibility of starting a general fire on the dump.

Inside of three years we will have filled all our present dumps, and by such time a start must be made to send all the material collected in street cleaning and a large proportion of the ashes to some new dumping point. The volume of the street-cleaning material must be reduced by incineration.

There is also a possibility that it may be necessary to forbid the placing of combustible material on the Bennings dump owing to the smoke nuisance.

Because of the above conditions, and the constant complaints of various citizens associations regarding burning materials on dumps, a transfer station, trash-salvaging plant, and incinerators of sufficient capacity should be constructed immediately. It is therefore recommended that $650,000 be appropriated for the acquisition of site and construction of the above plant.

Site and buildings for garage, shop, etc., city refuse division.. $150,000

The city refuse division owns and occupies a building in the interior of square 367, covering 12,500 square feet of ground. This was originally used as a stable, but is being converted to use as a garage and shops.

In the very near future the hauling equipment of the department must be entirely motorized. This is mainly due to the scarcity of dumps and the consequent increased length of haul.

The city refuse division has now reached the capacity of the present plant in which are repaired, repainted, and reconstructed all auto trucks used by that division, in addition to the building of all new truck bodies, and it is very necessary to add to the existing building. By the purchase of the balance of the plot the present ground area would be doubled, and the construction of an addition to the building would provide for a garage, shops, and storerooms in an ideal location.

New Chain Bridge..... $366,000

A new bridge is required to provide adequate capacity for traffic and to insure safety for traffic on this bridge, the carrying capacity of which is uncertain due to deterioration resulting from its age, 54 years.

Connecticut Avenue Bridge over Klingle Road..... $500,000

A bridge of greater capacity is required to take the place of the existing structure, due to the heavy traffic over Connecticut Avenue.

New Calvert Street Bridge..... $1,200,000

The replacement of Calvert Street Bridge by a bridge to conform with the treatment of Rock Creek Park is projected to afford increased capacity for traffic.

The roadway of the existing structure is inadequate and the bridge has not sufficient strength for the heavy traffic of the present day.

Twentieth Street Bridge over Piney Branch..... $300,000

A bridge of greater capacity with improved alignment is required to take the place of the existing light iron bridge.

Municipal center, purchase of land..... $9,000,000
Municipal center buildings..... 10,000,000

The act authorizing the acquisition of the triangle south of Pennsylvania Avenue for the erection of various Federal buildings authorizes the taking over by the Federal Government of the District Building and the square to the south of the present building, which was considered available for a much-needed expansion of the District Building. As a new location for the District offices will have to be obtained in order to replace the building and site to be taken over by the Federal Government, and as there are a number of District activities in rented buildings and a number of other District activities which are not now adequately provided for, it is proposed to purchase the area between Pennsylvania Avenue on the south, Louisiana Avenue, D Street, and Indiana Avenue on the north, Seventh Street on the west, and Third Street on the east, for the site of the new municipal center.

It is deemed highly desirable that the purchase of this site should be made at one time, in order that the part to be improved by the construction of new buildings will not enhance the value of the property not acquired. By purchasing the whole site at one time a material saving can be made over piecemeal purchase. It would not be necessary or desirable to proceed with the construction at a rapid rate, and present plans call for a development of square 490 as the site for a building to house the various courts of the District of Columbia, and it is expected that this would be the first part of the site developed. Provision for the construction of the building should be made at the rate of about $2,000,000 per year, and when the building on this square is completed the development of square 491, directly south of this square, should be undertaken, to provide suitable quarters for the police and fire departments, recorder of deeds office, and some other District activities.

The assessed value of the six squares included in the whole site is $6,033,236, and it is estimated that the site can be purchased for about $9,000,000. The court building will have approximately 8,068,000 cubic feet, at an estimated cost of $1 per cubic foot, while the building on square 491 will be of approximately the same size and same cost.

Opening and extension of streets and avenues..... $4,000,000

The opening and extension of the following streets and avenues is important in that they will provide better traffic conditions in their respective locations; furthermore, land values are increasing, and the longer these projects are delayed the greater will be the cost of their acquisition. Dedications have already been made to the District of portions of all of these streets.

Nebraska Avenue is the only street on the highway plan in the area west of Rock Creek Park, excepting Western Avenue, which extends directly from the Potomac River to Rock Creek Park. This street is approximately a mile east of Western Avenue and crosses Massachusetts, Wisconsin, and Connecticut Avenues, and connects up Wesley Heights, Tennallytown, and Chevy Chase.

Foxhall Road: This road connects Wesley Heights and American University with Conduit Road, and intersects Conduit Road just west of Georgetown University. A great number of houses were built along this road before the highway plan was established. Many of these houses will have to be moved when the street is widened, and, of course, condemnation would be the only procedure. As property values in this section are steadily increasing it is believed that this street should be condemned as soon as possible.

Potomac Avenue is on the highway plan from Foxhall Road to the District line, and runs along the high ground overlooking the Potomac River. This street would make a very attractive riverside drive, and for this reason it is believed that steps should be taken to acquire it for its entire length, before any building operations increase the cost of its acquisition.

Colorado Avenue, Thirteenth and Fourteenth Streets are now in process of condemnation.

Maryland Avenue is now in public ownership from Fifteenth Street and Florida Avenue NE. to the United States Capitol Grounds. The highway plan provides for the extension of this avenue to the Anacostia Park, where it will intersect with Oklahoma Avenue. The opening of this avenue will be of importance in that it will provide a direct connection from the Capitol Grounds to the northern part of the Anacostia Park.

Free Public Library, 5-year building and extension program $1,696,000

The organic law establishing the Public Library, as amended, provides that the said library shall consist of a central library and such number of branch libraries so located and so supported as to furnish books and other printed matter and library service convenient to the homes and offices of all residents of the District of Columbia.

The estimate of $1,696,000 would provide for carrying out the larger items in the five-year building and extension program for the library, in providing for sites and buildings for branch libraries as well as additions to the main library building.

Gallinger Municipal Hospital $3,000,000

In order to equip the Gallinger Municipal Hospital as a complete municipal hospital capable of accommodating all the patients that are proper municipal charges and discontinue the practice of boarding such patients in private institutions, it would be necessary to erect two additional ward buildings similar to the one now under construction. It would also be necessary to erect a suitable nurses' home, staff building, laboratory, and accessory buildings, at a total cost of approximately $2,500,000, and an isolation building for the care and treatment of indigent persons suffering from minor contagious diseases, at a cost of approximately $500,000.

District Training School $1,000,000

Additional cottages, school building, dormitory for employees, commissary and dining-room building, superintendent's residence, and the necessary roads, water and sewer mains should be provided at the District Training School as soon as possible, because the present demand would undoubtedly fill the school to a number of approximately 600.

Receiving home, division of child welfare $150,000

There should be provided as soon as possible a receiving home for the division of child welfare where children could be received when committed by the courts, given medical and mental examinations, and such treatment as necessary, and afford opportunity for study and classification before these children are sent to permanent boarding homes or institutions. Such a receiving home, properly equipped, would cost approximately $150,000.

Industrial Home School for White Children $250,000

The Industrial Home School for White Children, now housed in a group of old, dilapidated buildings, should be abandoned. If funds are not to be derived from the sale of the present property it would cost probably $250,000 to provide a proper site and buildings to reestablish the school on a new site.

District of Columbia Jail $500,000

The old cell wings of the jail have been condemned by competent authority as insanitary and unfit for the confinement of prisoners. To reconstruct the north and south wings, which contain these old cells, would cost probably about $500,000.

Tuberculosis Hospital $150,000

Congestion at the Tuberculosis Hospital requires an early enlargement of that institution. There should be an additional ward building, at a cost of approximately $100,000, and a building to house the medical staff, orderlies, and other employees, many of whom are now obliged to live away from the hospital. This building would cost approximately $50,000.

Public schools, 5-year building program $11,000,000

The carrying out of the five-year school building program, as authorized by the act of Congress approved February 26, 1925, is $3,000,000 in arrears at the present time. In addition, during the two years remaining of the period for carrying out that program $8,000,000 will be required.

Elimination of grade crossings $680,000

The grade crossings which should be eliminated to provide safety for traffic are placed in the order of importance as follows: Michigan Avenue, $275,000; Chestnut Street (Fern Street), $164,000; Eastern Avenue (Quarles Street), $153,000; Bates Road (Varnum Street), $88,000.

Total of necessary improvements $53,902,000

LIST OF DESIRABLE IMPROVEMENTS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Water-front development, Washington Channel $3,691,000

The act of Congress approved March 3, 1925, authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, authorized and directed the Secretary of War to cause preliminary examinations and surveys to be made of the water front on the north side of the Washington Channel, District of Columbia, with the view of surveying same and preparing and submitting plans and estimates of cost for the construction of an adequate terminal or terminals which would provide appropriate facilities for water transportation and for interchange of traffic between vessels and the railroads and highways, respectively, including any recommendations which may be deemed advisable for coordinating the full commercial use of said water front and the approaches, with the beautification thereof.

In accordance with the directions of Congress, the District engineer officer (United States Army Corps of Engineers), after most intensive study, has prepared and submitted a report on the improvement of the water front along the Washington Channel.

The item of $3,691,600 is an estimate by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of the cost of providing this very desirable improvement.

Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge over Anacostia River $651,000

The construction of a bridge in the line of Pennsylvania Avenue crossing Anacostia River is required to provide capacity for the heavy traffic using that bridge and also to permit dredging of the river as proposed by the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army. The piers supporting the bridge have pile platforms, the piles being cut off at mean low-water level. Provision is also required for traffic on the river by the construction of a draw span at this crossing.

Benning Bridge over Anacostia River $470,000

The construction of a bridge to take the place of Benning Bridge is required for the same reasons outlined in the above statement concerning the Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge.

P Street Bridge over Rock Creek $350,000

The construction of a bridge to take the place of the present P Street Bridge across Rock Creek is required to provide for the Rock Creek Parkway.

Watts Branch Valley storm-water sewer $950,000

Watts Branch Valley extends easterly from the Anacostia River through Deanwood, and this stream drains a large watershed located partly in the District and partly in Maryland. The stream traverses private property through the major part of its length and is located through a very flat section of the District. Freshet conditions cause this stream to rise out of its banks, inundating large areas of adjacent property.

This valley, with the exception of Rock Creek, is the largest one traversing the District, and to control that portion of the stream which lies within the District would require the construction of over 3 miles of conduit varying in size from 12 to 15 feet in span.

As to whether this important storm-water conduit should be given open treatment or a closed-conduit construction, is still a mooted question, and before final decision is reached the National Capital Park and Planning Commission will be requested to study this situation.

Sewage-treatment works $2,250,000

At the present time all District sewage is discharged in a more or less crude state directly into the Potomac River at a point some 3 miles below Haines Point.

Any impurities, such as sewage, which are discharged into a body of water become purified by oxidation. In the process of oxidation oxygen existing in the water is consumed, and if too much of this oxygen is consumed from the water fish life is destroyed, in that their life depends upon the water-carried oxygen, without which they would suffocate.

The commissioners, being cognizant of this fact, have visualized for some years that eventually further treatment must be given to the District sewage before same is discharged into the Potomac River; and with this in view they have within the past few years acquired a considerable tract of land in the vicinity of Blue Plains as a site for a future sewage-treatment plant. This site is located at the extreme southern point of the District, which is the only strategic location to which all the sewage of the District may be discharged by gravity.

Before venturing upon an expenditure of this magnitude, the commissioners propose to make a request of the Public Health Service that they conduct a survey of the lower Potomac to determine what degree of purification the sewage must undergo at this time. Moreover, the commissioners have in mind that before actually making expenditures for these works they would request authority for appointing a commission of well-known sanitary engineers to make a detailed study, with report, as to the best type of treatment works to install.

Key Bridge approach $200,000

Certain desirable improvements should be made in the north approach to the new Francis Scott Key Bridge, to the end that the "bottle-neck" situation which now arises under heavy traffic conditions may be eliminated and a more adequate approach to the bridge proper may be provided.

National Zoological Park $1,145,000

This is an estimate of improvements recommended by the Director of the National Zoological Park and includes provision for the construction of new exhibition buildings for animals and birds, remodeling of and additions to exhibition buildings, open barless pit for polar bears, monkey pit, three stone-arch entrances to the park, and a fence around the park.

Public buildings and public parks $4,501,600

This is an estimate of improvements recommended by the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital, and includes provision for construction of two additional bathing pools, $900,000; Meridian Hill Park, $400,000; Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway, roads and bridges, $2,000,000, and sea wall, $180,000; repairs to Tidal Basin wall, $7,500; East Potomac Park, walks, $13,000, and widening roads, $65,000; lighting around reflecting pool, Lincoln Memorial, $6,100; and improvement of the Mall, Second to Fifteenth Streets, $930,000.

National Capital Park and Planning Commission $15,000,000

To carry out a desirable plan of development of the National Capital during the next five years it is estimated that the above sum will be required by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Total of desirable improvements	$29,209,200
Total of necessary improvements	53,902,000
Total	83,111,200

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11577) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, because I shall be unable to be in the Chamber to-morrow when the Agricultural appropriation bill is under consideration, I proceed perhaps somewhat out of order, because the bill has not yet been read officially, as I am advised. But I nevertheless want to direct the attention of the Senate to certain provisions in the bill and to an amendment which I have already offered and asked to have printed, lie on the table, and which I trust may be called up by some one else in my absence.

The amendment relates to the provisions found on page 19 of the bill, a portion of which I read:

Provided further, That out of the money hereby appropriated no payment as compensation for any animal condemned for slaughter shall exceed one-third of the difference between the appraised value of such animal and the value of the salvage thereof; that no payment hereunder shall exceed the amount paid or to be paid by the State, Territory, county, and municipality where the animal shall be condemned; that in no case shall any payment hereunder be more than $25 for any grade animal or more than $50 for any purebred animal, and that no payment shall be made unless the owner has complied with all lawful quarantine regulations.

That is in the bill as it stands. The amendment I have offered proposes to add, at the end of line 22, on page 19, after the word "regulations," the following language:

Provided further, That out of the money hereby appropriated no payment as indemnity shall be made for any animal condemned for slaughter if the indemnity value of such animal is fixed by any arbitrary maximum, or is not arrived at by some well-recognized and equitable method of appraisal.

Mr. President, I desire to explain the difficulty sought to be remedied. I have here a compilation which I have procured to be made and which I shall ask to have printed at the close of my remarks. It is a summary of the State laws regarding the payment of indemnity in cooperation with the United States Government for cattle slaughtered on account of tuberculosis. I ask that this may be printed at the close of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit A.)

Mr. SWANSON rose.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the Senator desire to interrupt me?

Mr. SWANSON. No; not at all.

Mr. WILLIS. I thought the Senator desired to do so, because I know that his colleague, the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], is very much opposed to any appropriation on this subject, feeling that it is a futile expenditure and an unwise use of public money. I do not join whatever in that feeling.

Mr. SWANSON. No, Mr. President; I did not know what subject the Senator was discussing. I have just entered the Chamber.

Mr. WILLIS. An examination of the State laws shows that the regulations in the different States and the requirements of the statutes of the several States are quite different in this respect. The unfairness that we seek to correct by the amendment can be illustrated by a case which I shall cite. I cite one that is brought to my attention by one of my constituents in a certain township in Ohio not necessary to name.

Some eight or nine hundred head of cattle were condemned as tubercular and ordered slaughtered. In another township a large number of cattle had also been ordered slaughtered. This is particularly true in the northeastern section of the State. The Ohio law known as the Riggs law gives the State agricultural department the right to condemn and slaughter cattle.

It also provides the method of appraisal; that is to say, the value of the condemned animal is to be determined by one appraiser selected by the owner, one by the State board of agriculture, and in case of dispute between them a third appraiser selected at the owner's expense. If the payments were made upon the basis of the appraisal so determined by the board authorized to act according to law, there would be no objection, but the difficulty about the matter is, and I assume it is a difficulty experienced in other States, that the State board of agriculture, operating under an authority which is seriously questioned in the courts, fixes an arbitrary limit to the amount that can be paid for the slaughter of any animal.

To what sort of results does that lead? I have several cases to which I shall call attention very briefly. A person whom I know purchased a herd of dairy cattle and was only able to pay down a small part of the purchase price. He gave a chattel mortgage back for the balance of the purchase price and then worked two years, and at the end of two years had greatly reduced his mortgage indebtedness on the herd. The entire herd was then condemned, ordered slaughtered, and, under the rule which obtains in our State, he did not receive enough to pay the balance due on the chattel mortgage. The result is that he lost what he paid out on the purchase price, lost two years of hard work, his herd is gone, and he still owes a balance on the mortgage indebtedness.

The thing I am complaining about is that this action is taken for the benefit of the public, for the protection of the public health. There is no reason, in my judgment, why the burden should be placed on the shoulders of the man who for the time being happens to own the herd. The cattle are destroyed in order to benefit the public. Then, why should we have a limitation that amounts practically to confiscation of the man's property? In my judgment, before the matter is finally determined it will be found that the courts will hold that it is confiscatory. My correspondent advises me of another case:

A farmer called on me only yesterday, who had his entire herd of 17 head condemned. There was a chattel mortgage on the herd and he did not receive money enough from the State to pay what he owed on the mortgage.

What I am asking through my amendment is simply that the amount to be paid shall be determined by a board of appraisers. We do that way with any other kinds of property. If the Government is to condemn real property, for example, for its use, we have some sort of a jury to pass upon the matter. Under the eloquent leadership of the distinguished and able Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], whom I see in his seat, we passed just a little while ago a great bill providing on its face for an authorization of an appropriation of $325,000,000. Before we get through with the proposition covered by his bill there will be probably an authorization of $200,000,000 more necessary. Under the persuasive eloquence of the Senator from Washington we passed that bill, very properly, in a comparatively short period of time. His bill provides that where property is taken for the public use there shall be, as I recall it, a board of three members to estimate the value of the property.

That is very well, and we are asking for a similar provision here. The Government is taking this man's property, his cattle, and in effect is devoting the property to the public use. The Government is destroying the cattle to protect the public. My amendment provides that the decision of that board of appraisal shall be final and that, as the amendment states—out of the money hereby appropriated no payment as indemnity shall be made for any animal condemned for slaughter if the indemnity value of such animal is fixed by any arbitrary maximum or is not arrived at by some well-recognized and equitable method of appraisal.

There is no reason why cattle which are condemned and slaughtered should not be paid for upon a fair basis of appraisal, just as other property is paid for when it is taken and used by the Government for a public purpose.

Therefore I hope, Mr. President, though I shall not be able to be present when the item is presented, that the amendment may be called up by some other Senator, so there may be a vote upon it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator might well have called attention to the fact that the foot-and-mouth disease affected many cattle in Texas and other States, and the Government, where it condemned those cattle, paid for them in every instance where they were slaughtered.

Mr. WILLIS. I thank the Senator for the suggestion. That is exactly what I am asking for in my amendment, that where a thing is done for the benefit of the public, the public shall pay for it and not the individual who owns the property and who, under the present practice, is compelled to suffer the loss.

EXHIBIT A

MARCH, 1928.

STATE LAWS REGARDING THE PAYMENT OF INDEMNITY IN COOPERATION WITH THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT FOR CATTLE SLAUGHTERED ON ACCOUNT OF TUBERCULOSIS

Alabama: No indemnity.

Arizona: No limit to appraisal. Salvage goes to the owner. State pays one-third of difference up to $25 for grades and $50 for purebreds.

Arkansas: No indemnity.

California: No indemnity.

Colorado: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives salvage. State pays one-third of the difference up to $25 for grades and $50 for purebreds.

Connecticut: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives the salvage. State pays up to $100 for a grade and $125 for a purebred.

Delaware: No limit to appraisal. Salvage goes to owner. State pays one-third of the difference up to $125 for a grade and $150 for a purebred.

Florida: No limit to appraisal of purebred cattle, but State payment limited to $100 and to not more than two-thirds difference between appraisal and salvage. Grade cattle are appraised at 4 cents per pound, live weight, and State payment limited to two-thirds difference between appraisal and salvage. Owner receives salvage.

Georgia: County pays on same basis as Federal Government.

Idaho: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives the salvage. State pays one-third the difference up to $25 for a grade and $50 for a purebred.

Illinois: No limit to appraisal. Salvage goes to owner. State pays one-third of difference up to $25 for a grade and $50 for a purebred.

Indiana: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives salvage. State pays one-third of the difference up to $40 for a grade and $80 for a purebred.

Iowa: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives salvage. State pays one-third of difference between appraised value and salvage not to exceed $50 for grades or $75 for purebreds.

Kansas: No limit to appraisal. Claims are paid under two methods, as follows:

(1) Salvage goes to owner. County pays one-third of difference up to $25 for a grade and $50 for a purebred.

(2) Salvage goes to the county. County pays one-half of the appraised value.

Kentucky: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives the salvage, and the State pays enough to make the State's payment, plus the salvage, equal three-fourths of the appraised value. State can not pay more than $100 for grades or $200 for purebreds.

Louisiana: Appraisal limited to $50. Salvage goes to owner. State pays one-third of the difference between appraised value and salvage.

Maine: No limit to appraisal. Salvage up to $50 goes to State. All salvage over $50 goes to owner. State pays up to $75 for grades and $150 for purebreds.

Maryland: Appraisal limited to $75 for grades and $150 for purebreds. Salvage goes to owner. State pays one-third the difference up to $25 for grades and $50 for purebreds.

Massachusetts: No limit to appraisal. Salvage goes to owner. State pays one-third of the difference up to $25 for grades and $50 for purebreds.

Michigan: No limit to appraisal. Salvage goes to the owner. State pays one-half of appraised value up to $30 for grades and $60 for purebreds.

Minnesota: Appraisal limited to $150 for purebreds and $60 for grades. Salvage goes to owner. State pays one-third difference.

Mississippi: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives the salvage. County pays not to exceed two-thirds of the difference up to $75 for grades and $125 for purebreds.

Missouri: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives the salvage. State and county each pay one-sixth of the difference between the appraised value and the salvage, combined amounts not to exceed $25 for grades and $50 for purebreds.

Montana: Appraised value is value shown by last assessment, not to exceed $500. State and county each receive one-half the salvage. State and county each pay equal amounts of indemnity. Owner shall not receive more than 75 per cent of the assessed valuation, except when no lesions are found on post mortem examination, in which case he receives full assessed value.

Nebraska: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives the salvage. State pays one-third the difference up to $15 for grades and $30 for purebreds.

Nevada: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives the salvage. State pays up to $75 for grades and $200 for purebreds. Owner shall not receive a total of more than 75 per cent of the appraisal, including State, county, municipal, and United States indemnity and insurance.

New Hampshire: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives the salvage. State pays up to $40 for grades and $100 for purebreds.

New Jersey: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives the salvage. State pays one-third the difference up to $50 for grades and $100 for purebreds.

New York: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives the salvage. State pays up to 90 per cent of appraised value, not to exceed $90 for grades or $150 for purebreds.

North Carolina: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives the salvage. State pays one-third the difference up to $25 for grades and $50 for purebreds.

North Dakota: Appraisal limited to $60 for grades 2 years old or over, $30 for grades less than 2 years old, $150 for purebreds 2 years old or over, and $75 for purebreds less than 2 years old. Owner receives the salvage. State pays up to one-third the difference between the appraisal and salvage. When no Federal funds are available, State pays one-half of the difference between appraisal and salvage.

Ohio: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives the salvage. State pays one-third of difference up to $25 for grades and $40 for purebreds.

Oklahoma: No limit to appraisal. State pays one-half difference between appraisal and salvage, not to exceed $25 for any animal, purebred or grade. Owner receives salvage.

Oregon: No limit to appraisal. State and county share indemnity equally; total being limited to $10 for grade cattle and $25 for purebred cattle. The State and county payment shall not be more than one-third of the difference between the appraisal and the salvage. Salvage goes to the owner.

Pennsylvania: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives the salvage. State pays up to $40 for grades and $70 for purebreds, State payment and salvage not to exceed 90 per cent of appraised value.

Rhode Island: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives salvage. State pays up to $75 for grades and $100 for purebreds.

South Carolina: Appraisals limited to $75 for grades and $150 for purebreds. Owner receives the salvage. State pays one-third the difference between appraised value and salvage. Animals must be at least six months old.

South Dakota: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives the salvage. State pays one-third the difference up to $25 for grades and $50 for purebreds.

Tennessee: No limit to appraisal. Salvage goes to the owner. State pays one-third the difference up to $50 for grades and $100 for purebred animals.

Texas: No limit to appraisal. Salvage goes to the owner. State pays one-third the difference between appraisal and salvage up to $25 for grades and $50 for purebreds.

Utah: No limit to appraisal. Salvage goes to owner. State pays amount of the difference between the appraisal and salvage less the United States payment.

Vermont: Appraisal limited to $85 for grades and $125 for purebreds. Owner receives the salvage. State pays one-fourth the difference up to $25 for grades and $50 for purebreds.

Virginia: New law effective June 17, 1928, provides no limit to appraisal and owner receives salvage. State pays one-third difference between appraisal and salvage up to $50 for purebreds and $25 for grades.

Washington: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives the salvage. State pays one-third the difference up to $25 for grades and $50 for purebreds.

West Virginia: Appraisal limited to $100 for grades and $300 for purebreds. Owner receives the salvage. If the carcass is passed for food, the State, county, and Federal Government, each paying the same amount, pay enough to give the owner 80 per cent of the appraised value less the salvage; if the carcass is condemned they pay enough to give the owner 40 per cent of the appraised value. If no lesions are found on post-mortem the owner receives the full appraised value.

Wisconsin: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives the salvage. State pays one-fourth of the difference up to $20 for grades and $45 for purebreds.

Wyoming: No limit to appraisal, but owner shall not receive more than the assessed value as shown by the last assessment, including salvage, Federal and State payments.

Alaska: Appraised value limited as follows: First division, $175; second and third divisions, $200; fourth division, $250. Owner receives salvage. Territory pays two-thirds of the difference between appraisal and salvage, but this includes amount paid by Federal Government.

Hawaii: No limit to appraisal. Owner receives the salvage. Territory pays not to exceed $100 for purebred cattle and $50 for grade cattle. In cases of no visible lesions of tuberculosis, the maximum is $350 for purebreds and $250 for grades.

PHOSPHORIC ACID AND ACID PHOSPHATE

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, on Friday, March 9, of the present session I addressed the Senate on the subject of Muscle Shoals in advocacy of a plan proposed in an amendment of the Norris Joint Resolution 46. Immediately after I had finished and left the Chamber I find that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] took exception to the accuracy of information I had given the Senate on the need of improved methods for manufacturing phosphoric acid in order to lower the cost of what I said was an essential element in the production of concentrated chemical fertilizer.

What I actually said was:

There is another feature to this whole fertilizer problem to be considered in the disposition of Muscle Shoals.

In order to make a successful plant food you have to combine three elements. We talk here in the Senate only about taking nitrogen from the air. Nitrogen is only about 25 or 30 per cent of the total requirements of a plant food that will make the farms produce these tremendous quantities. You have to combine that with a phosphoric acid. That is a different material from the ordinary acid phosphate of the trade to-day. As nearly as I can find out, the scientists believe that the production of phosphoric acid to-day is very much more expensive than it need be if we can experiment and study new methods of production for phosphoric acid. The experts that I have read after tell me—and I do not set up my own opinion at all, because I think we must follow the men who have been educated in those lines—that the excessive cost of phosphatic acid to-day comes from the fact that it has not been needed heretofore in great quantities, and the need of cheap production has not been pressing upon the industry; that the cost of production of phosphoric acid to-day warrants the assumption that by competent study and experiment it can be reduced materially, and it forms a large portion of the cost of concentrated fertilizer.

It will be observed that I called attention to the fact that the acid of which I was speaking was a different material from the ordinary "acid phosphate" of the trade and that I offered the testimony of experts and not my own information in support of the assertion.

The Senator from South Carolina, I am confident, could not have caught the facts I was bringing to the attention of the Senate, for he immediately declared:

The Senator from Kentucky spoke about phosphoric acid and the processes that are now being developed for the concentration of it. I want to state here and now that there is not a practical farmer in America who uses fertilizer who will not testify that there is in this country all the phosphoric acid we want, obtainable at a price that is entirely reasonable, and the supply is unlimited and practically inexhaustible.

There are the phosphate rocks of Tennessee, there are the phosphate rocks of Florida, there are the phosphate mines of South Carolina. The amount of phosphoric acid is practically unlimited, and with hardly any cost, except for transportation, and the mere mechanical method of treating the phosphate rock with sulphuric acid, which produces all the phosphoric acid we need. I can get it to-day, manufactured at Charleston and delivered in the territory 90 to 100 miles away, for $9 and $10 a ton.

And, again, after elaborating upon his theme, he added:

But I want to get back to what the Senator from Kentucky said. I hope he will correct his speech where, if I understood him correctly, he said the greatest desideratum was to get phosphoric acid. Mr. President, the cheapest and most unlimited form of fertilizer known to agriculture is phosphoric acid. One can get all he wants of it in any per cent he wants in unlimited supply. All that is necessary to be done is to grind the rock rich in phosphate, treat it with sulphuric acid, and the resultant product is phosphoric acid. It is not even necessary to get a container, but the rock when it is ground, after it absorbs the sulphuric acid, is converted into phosphoric acid. The manufacturers just grind up the rock, let it stand a while, then dump the dust into big tanks, mix the sulphuric acid with it, and then put it in a sack and ship it. Nature has very nearly done the whole work herself.

I do not want to enter any controversy on this technical subject, as the exact meaning of the words used in any scientific discussion is a difficult analysis in this forum. I do not, however, wish to rest under the imputation of having spoken either inaccurately or carelessly.

It should be evident that I was interested in a highly refined quality of phosphoric acid, while the material of which the Senator spoke was the acid phosphate in commercial use.

To emphasize the fact that much needs yet to be done to cheapen the production of that quality of phosphoric acid that ought to be used in neutralizing and rendering stable the ammonia gas for the nitrogen content of the chemical fertilizer I suggest to the Senator, as fully sustaining the position for which I was arguing, an article published by the United States Department of Commerce entitled "Fertilizers—Some New Factors in Domestic Fertilizer Production and Trade," by Harry A. Curtis, special agent, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. (Bulletin No. 372, November, 1925.)

The author, who was an investigator for the department, is, I am told, also a professor at Yale University and an authority on his subject. In the course of his article, he says:

The impression prevails that because cheap production of ammonia by the new synthetic process appears to be assured, the cheap production of nitrogenous fertilizers necessarily follows. It must be remembered that ammonia is a gas and not a fertilizer. To be available for fertilizer use the ammonia must be neutralized with an acid or converted in some other way to a solid product. Sulphuric acid is commonly used, and is a relatively cheap acid. As already pointed out, however, ammonium sulphate is already being made in this country in such quantity that the fertilizer industry can not absorb all of it. There would be no great gain, from the standpoint of agriculture, in converting cheap synthetic ammonia to ammonium sulphate. On the other hand, if any of the newer methods of making phosphoric acid lower its cost to that of the equivalent amount of acid phosphate, then the manufacture of ammonium phosphate will assume a place of great importance in the fertilizer industry.

And again he says, at page 17, paragraph F:

It has been recognized for some time that the cheap production of phosphoric acid is a matter of very considerable importance, both for the general chemical industry and for fertilizer use. If phosphoric acid could by any method be produced at a cost which would permit its general use in the manufacture of fertilizers, there would be presented at once a number of interesting possibilities * * *. Likewise it would become one of the logical means of converting the ammonia manufactured by air-nitrogen plants into an agricultural fertilizer, a point particularly important in view of the fact that of the various nitrogen-fixing processes the synthetic-ammonia process appears to be the one most likely to be generally successful under American conditions.

In view of the authority above quoted, as well as a result of conversations recently had with Doctor Cottrell, of the Government nitrogen laboratory, since the controversy to which I refer, I am constrained to insist that the suggestion contained in my address is amply sustained and not subject to just criticism of the Senator from South Carolina.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BORAH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. I move the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, March 29, 1928, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO SAFEGUARDING LIVESTOCK INVESTMENTS

In executive session this day the following convention was ratified, and, on motion of Mr. BORAH, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom:

To the Senate:

To the end that I may receive the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a convention concluded between the United States and the United Mexican States on March 16, 1928, for the purpose of safeguarding the livestock interests of the two countries through the prevention of the introduction of infectious and contagious diseases.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
March 19, 1928.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to ratification, if his judgment approve thereof, a convention concluded between the United States and the United Mexican States on March 16, 1928, for the purpose of safeguarding the livestock interests of the two countries through the prevention of the introduction of infectious and contagious diseases.

Respectfully submitted.

FRANK B. KELLOGG.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 16, 1928.

The Government of the United States of America and the Government of the United Mexican States, being desirous to safeguard more effectually the livestock interests of their respective countries through the prevention of the introduction of infectious and contagious diseases, have, for that purpose, agreed to conclude a Convention, and have to that end appointed as their respective plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, Frank B. Kellogg, Secretary of State of the United States of America; and

The President of the United Mexican States, His Excellency Señor Don Manuel C. Téllez, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United Mexican States at Washington;

Who, having exhibited to each other their respective full powers, which were found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles:

ARTICLE I

The High Contracting Parties agree to maintain at designated border and sea ports authorized for the importation of animals an adequate livestock sanitary police service to guard against the introduction of animals affected with or exposed to contagious disease, and to notify each other at least ten days in advance whenever a port is to be closed or a new one is to be opened. In case of livestock imported or in bond the official veterinary inspectors of either country are authorized to make inspections, supervise dippings, and apply the necessary tests upon either side of the border as may be convenient.

ARTICLE II

Quarantine stations shall be maintained by the High Contracting Parties at designated border and sea ports for animals imported from foreign countries. Such animals shall be kept under observation and subjected to tuberculin, mallein, blood, or other tests as may be necessary for the diagnosis of disease.

ARTICLE III

The High Contracting Parties agree to supervise the sanitary handling of animal by-products, forage, and other commodities offered for importation that may be carriers of infectious and contagious diseases and to prohibit the importation of forage or other articles accompanying livestock affected with such diseases or suspected of being so affected.

ARTICLE IV

The appropriate authorities of each of the High Contracting Parties shall incorporate in their regulations the necessary measures governing the disinfection of vessels and all kinds of vehicles used in the transportation of animals and of the quarantine stations or other premises occupied by animals affected with dangerously acute and rapidly spreading contagious diseases such as foot-and-mouth disease, rinderpest, contagious pleuropneumonia, and hog-cholera.

ARTICLE V

The competent officials of each of the High Contracting Parties shall prescribe the form and requirements of the permit and certificates to be presented as evidence that the animals are eligible for importation; of the manifests, bills of lading and other papers to be submitted by importers, captains of vessels, or others in charge of live stock offered for importation; and of the records to be kept by the veterinary officials at the ports of entry.

ARTICLE VI

The form and requirements of certificates which shall accompany shipments of animal by-products, hay, straw, and other imported commodities shall be specified by the duly authorized officials of each of the High Contracting Parties.

ARTICLE VII

It is agreed that an efficient veterinary live stock sanitary police service shall be maintained under the Department of Agriculture in the United States and the Secretaria de Agricultura y Fomento in Mexico to combat infectious, contagious, or parasitic diseases of live stock.

ARTICLE VIII

The live stock sanitary officials shall define the specific territory in their respective countries in which any contagious or infectious disease exists and shall indicate zones which may be considered as exposed, in order to prevent the propagation and dissemination of the infection of such disease.

ARTICLE IX

The High Contracting Parties shall not issue permits for domestic ruminants or swine originating in any foreign countries or zones where highly infectious and rapidly spreading diseases such as foot-and-mouth disease and rinder-pest appear frequently, until at least sixty days have elapsed without any outbreak of the disease in such countries or zones. When a disease of this kind occurs in any part of a foreign country any other part of the same country shall be considered as exposed until the contrary is positively shown, that is, until it is shown that no communication exists between the two parts by which the disease may be readily transmitted. When such a disease occurs near the land border of a foreign country the neighboring part of the adjacent country shall be considered as exposed until the contrary is positively shown.

ARTICLE X

It is agreed that the respective governments shall notify each other promptly, through the usual diplomatic channels, of the appearance and extent of seriously acute, contagious diseases. In the case of outbreaks of diseases of this character not recently existing in either country information may be transmitted immediately in the most expeditious manner.

ARTICLE XI

The High Contracting Parties agree to exchange the official regulations, periodicals, and other publications that may come out in their countries on the subject matter of this Convention and information concerning changes and substitutions which may be developed in the methods of prophylaxis, control, and care of animal diseases; and also to establish an interchange of students and experts and visits of representatives of the respective governments, for the purpose of studying and observing on the ground methods of control and eradication of such diseases as may break out in the territory of either of the nations.

ARTICLE XII

Special regulations shall be issued by each of the High Contracting Parties governing the movement of live stock between the respective countries. These regulations shall specify in each case the veterinary sanitary police measures applicable.

ARTICLE XIII

Certificates of inspection and testing of live stock, issued by duly authorized veterinarians of either country, shall be accepted as proof that such inspection and testing have been made; but, in any case of the offer of live stock for importation into either country, the issuance of such certificate shall not preclude further tests of such animals, or further investigation with respect thereto, to determine their freedom from or exposure to disease, before entry is permitted.

ARTICLE XIV

This Convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications exchanged at the city of Washington as soon as possible.

The Convention shall come into effect at the date of publication in conformity with the laws of the High Contracting Parties, and it shall remain in force until 30 days after either party shall have given notice to the other of a desire to terminate the Convention.

In witness whereof, they have signed the present Convention and have affixed thereto their respective seals.

Done in duplicate, in the English and Spanish languages, at the City of Washington, this sixteenth day of March, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-eight.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, March 28, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Of all this wondrous world, O merciful Lord, Thou art the light and the life. The glow of the day and the starlit night are reflections from Thee. Before Thee there is not just one nation nor one people—all are Thine. Let no one look upon his fellow men with contempt. Bless us with a charity that includes all men regardless of rank. Give us compassionate hearts, dear Father, that move with the sufferings and the misfortunes of others, and may we keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Be at the doors of our souls all the day through, whispering to be pure and true is to succeed in life. We are happy that we are where we are; and do Thou help us to be faithful colaborers with Thee for the sake of our country and for the blessing of humanity. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS BY CERTAIN CUSTOMS OFFICIALS

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 253, reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 253) authorizing certain customs officials to administer oaths

Resolved, etc., That any officer or employee of the customs service designated by the Secretary of the Treasury or by a collector of customs is hereby authorized to administer any oath required or authorized by law or regulation promulgated thereunder in respect of any matter coming before such officer or employee in the performance of his official duties, but no compensation or fee shall be demanded or accepted for administering any such oath.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

OLD-AGE PENSION

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my own remarks on the old age pension bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, on February 27 of this year, I presented to the House a bill (H. R. 11474) providing for the establishment of a system of old-age pensions by which every person 60 years of age or over without means of support would receive from the Federal Government a pension of $12 per week.

That bill was introduced for the purpose of meeting one of the major evils of the present industrial system, where after the labor of a lifetime a wage earner or a farmer finds himself facing old age in want, and of meeting it in a way that will not degrade the beneficiary, as is the case where it is done by public or private charity.

WHY A PENSION IS JUSTIFIED

The principle of paying a pension to those who have rendered service to their country is not new. We pay pensions to the veterans of our wars, and we do so because we realize that soldiers perform a duty on the field of battle which is dangerous to life and limb, and that they perform that service for what is believed to be for the good of the country.

If service to the country, however, or the dangers incident to such service, justify the granting of a pension to a war veteran—they also justify paying a pension to the veteran of industry whose service is far more necessary and infinitely more useful.

MORE DANGEROUS THAN WAR

Under our present industrial system, where it is often cheaper to expose the workers to injury and death than install safeguards which will prevent accidents—service in the factory, in the mine, and on the railroads—is attended with as much danger frequently as it is on the field of battle. More people are killed in our industries than in our wars.

And more people are crippled in our industries than in our wars.

TWICE AS MANY KILLED AND INJURED IN ONE YEAR

The Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor reports that in 21 States out of 48 there were no less than 599,781 killed or injured in a single year, in 1920—more than twice as many in one year than were killed and wounded as a result of our participation in the World War.

And in one State—Pennsylvania—there were 1,136,000 killed or injured in industry during a period of six years, 1916 to 1921.

If, therefore, the right to a pension depends upon the risks that one takes, the veteran of industry is no less entitled to a pension when he becomes too old to work than is the veteran of war.

THEIR LABOR MAKES CIVILIZATION POSSIBLE

Or if the right to a pension is to be determined by the service one renders his country, the veteran of industry again is no less entitled to a pension in old age than the veteran of our wars. A man or woman who has labored for 20 years or more, receiving in return for his or her labors a small share of the wealth created, has contributed more to society than any pension in old age can repay.

It is their labor which makes civilization possible for all, and more especially for the rich.

THE EXAMPLE OF OTHER COUNTRIES

Besides, the question is not whether society will take care of the man who has given all he has had the major portion of his life, but whether it will do so through public and private charity, which is costly to the community, inefficient, degrading to the recipient, and destructive of the home—or whether it will be done by the Government, systematically, economically, and decently.

Other countries in which the Socialist Party is strong enough to compel consideration of the problems of the worker, and where the ruling class finds itself facing an intelligent and well-organized working class, have not only decided that the superannuated worker would be taken care of in his old age but that he would not have to become the object of charity, public or private.

PATERNALISM? WELL, HOW ABOUT THE HIGH TARIFF, ABOUT LAND GRANTS, ETC.?

Newspapers which have commented on my bill since its introduction brought forth the usual argument that this was a form of "paternalism" which should be shunned at all hazards because it is contrary to the "genius" of our institutions; and, besides, it is unnecessary, for if there are any in old age who face the poorhouse it is due to a lack of thrift in their younger years or to a wanton and reckless disregard of the future.

The "paternalistic" issue is raised whenever any measure is offered which proposes to give to the great mass of the people some small part of the special privileges which the ruling class of our country has enjoyed from the beginning, and which it receives to-day in the form of tariff protection—subsidies, land grants, and the like.

HOW ABOUT PATERNALISM TO SUPERWEALTHY?

The use of the government and the powers of government to enrich the monopolists is not, in the eyes of these editors, paternalism.

Returning to the superwealthy hundreds of millions of dollars paid in taxes every time Congress meets is not, in their opinion, paternalism.

The granting of millions of acres of land to railroad companies, and enabling those railroads to charge excessive rates, never seemed to them to be paternalism.

PATERNALISM ONLY BAD WHEN IT HELPS THE POOR?

But when it is proposed to aid the farmers through some sort of relief legislation there is an immediate hue and cry that the farmers seek to make this Government paternalistic.

And when it is proposed that the Government—which has used its powers, derived from all the people, to benefit a handful who now control the Nation's basic industries—help out the hundreds of thousands of people who on the evening of their lives must face the poorhouse, the same cry is made.

SOME FIGURES ABOUT A WORKMAN'S BUDGET

The other argument made against my proposal is that, if the worker were thrifty, steady, and honest, he would not be in want in old age. No better refutation to that need be offered than the one which the Federal Government has provided by its own official figures.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics has prepared a budget which it states enables a "minimum of health and decency." The average cost in several cities of this minimum budget in 1919 was found to be $2,262.47 for a family of five.

This budget is modest. It would provide the following:

1. Nourishing food.
2. Houses in low-rent neighborhoods and within the smallest number of rooms consistent with decency (about four rooms and bath).
3. The upkeep of household equipment, but with no provision for the purchase of additional furniture.
4. Clothing sufficient for warmth, "but with no more regard for style than would permit one to appear in public without slovenliness or loss of self-respect."

THE "LUXURIES" HE IS PERMITTED UNDER THIS BUDGET

Under this budget there is allowed one woolen suit, one woolen dress, and one winter hat every second year, but there is no provision for silk stockings or dresses, and no house slippers.

The family could spend $80 a year for doctor, dentist, and oculist; $20 a year for amusement and recreation, and that, of course, leaves a vacation in the country out of the question; $10 for union dues, $13 for church and religious organizations; and $52 for incidentals.

A small allowance was made for insurance and car fare, but practically none for saving, either for periods of unemployment, or for old age, or for sickness which might go beyond the $80 allowed annually in the budget.

LESS THAN ENOUGH TO LAY BY ANYTHING

In 1926 the bureau prepared another budget, raising the amount required for a family of five in any large city, to $2,432.39 a year.

At the same time reliable statistics show that fully 76,000,000 people had an average income in the same year of $2,300—less than the amount considered by the Bureau of Labor Statistics necessary for a "minimum of health and decency"—less than is absolutely essential for the modest budget prepared by the bureau—less than enough to lay by anything for the time when old age will make him useless as a worker.

How, then, with the very best of intentions, with the utmost thrift, with steadiness in employment, can the workers—these 76,000,000—avoid facing old age in want?

SMALL BUSINESS MAN ALSO IN GREAT DANGER

The situation so far as the average business man is concerned is not much better. Among the hundreds of letters that have come to my office since the introduction of the bill calling attention to the plight in which people 65, 70, 75, and 80 years of age find themselves, there were some from business men who thought a few years ago that they would not face starvation in old age, but who were suddenly thrown from the high horse on which they had been riding, and now find themselves as destitute as the poorest among the working class.

In the case of these business men it may have been an accident, but as big business acquires a greater degree of control, as corporations continue to displace the small dealer, and wealth continues to concentrate in ever fewer hands, the middle class, so called, will require more of this relief than those who are in it now imagine possible.

DEPENDENCY OF OLD FOLKS GROWING WORSE

But in the case of the workers' and farmers' insecurity in old age is no accident. It is practically certain.

There are now approximately 2,000,000 aged people in the United States dependent upon others for part or entire support. This problem will grow more acute with the years.

The cutting off of employment possibilities when one enters his forties or fifties—and the increase in the span of life made possible by science—creates a long stretch of dependency, which will grow longer as time goes on.

PRESERVE THE HOME—ENACT THIS BILL

It is cruel and unjust to expect charity and the poorhouse to provide the necessary relief.

We can preserve the home when it means most to these elderly people, and do so more economically and efficiently than it is done to-day, by enacting an old age pension bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, several Members have called up to inquire when we were going to take up the various rules which I introduced yesterday. We intend to take up on Thursday, to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal and the disposal of routine business on the Speaker's table, the rule providing for the consideration of three bills from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. Later in the afternoon, if there should be time, we might take up the rule relating to the consideration of the bill concerning Howard University. On Saturday we want to take up, the first thing, the rule for the consideration of the import rubber bill. That may take all the afternoon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 367. An act to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes; and

H. R. 8326. An act to authorize the construction of a dormitory at Riverside Indian School at Anadarko, Okla.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 8126) entitled "An act to repeal the sixty-first proviso of section 6 and the last proviso of section 7 of 'An act to establish the Mount McKinley National Park, in the Territory of Alaska,' approved February 26, 1917," with the following amendment to the title:

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to repeal the proviso of section 6 and the last proviso of section 7 of 'An act to establish the Mount McKinley National Park, in the Territory of Alaska,' approved February 26, 1917."

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the following bills, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 459. An act for the relief of the city of New York; and

S. 2823. An act amending the statutes of the United States with respect to reissue of defective patents.

POINT OF NO QUORUM

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. TILSON. Members are coming in very rapidly.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum has been withdrawn.

THE PHILIPPINES

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT] for one hour.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am deeply sensible to the consideration shown in granting me one hour to address you. Realizing that it is an unusually generous consent, I shall show my appreciation by confining myself to a subject which I consider of supreme importance and far-reaching consequence. I wish to discuss our Philippine policy, what it has been in the past, what it is now, and what, in my opinion, it should be.

It would be presumption on my part to ask this length of time to consider a subject so far-reaching had I not given it considerable thought for several years and made two visits to the Philippines to confirm the conclusion I had reached.

The Philippine question, I think, is one of the biggest questions in the world. It affects the entire world, because the attitude of the most resourceful Nation in the world to world affairs is naturally of great consequence to all the other nations of the world.

Of course, it is of supreme importance to the Philippines because its determination controls the destiny of 12,000,000 people. Yet my concern over the question is not controlled by my concern over world affairs, as great as that may be, or by my concern for the Filipinos, as sympathetic as that may be, but out of a supreme consideration for the honor and welfare of my own country.

From the military standpoint of the United States, the Philippines are a distinct national liability. President Roosevelt, who perhaps had given this phase of the question greater study than any of our Presidents, and a man perhaps with better understanding of military matters, came to the same conclusion and pronounced the Philippines "a distinct national weakness." The reason of that is obvious, because should we be so unfortunate, which God forbid, to be drawn into another war, our enemy would naturally attack us at the weakest point and we would be compelled to maintain warfare around the world from us and possibly at the doorstep of our enemy. The future contests of the world will be waged on the Pacific, where sleeping millions are just now arousing.

Another gentleman on the Insular Affairs Committee who debated this subject with me at a previous session of Congress, a gentleman for whose judgment I have the highest regard and who claims for himself a very materialistic mind, in that debate referred to me as visionary and idealistic and referred to himself as a practical man with both feet firmly on the ground. If he means by idealism that I advocate the sticking to a bargain I plead guilty. I come from the race-horse country of Kentucky, where we are taught, in swapping horses and in other transactions, to stick to the trade if it takes the hide off, and when any gentleman prefaces his remarks by emphasizing that he is a practical man I anticipate that he is about to suggest something of which his conscience does not approve. But I will accept the gentleman on his own practical grounds and answer him in his own words. In speaking of this very point the gentleman from Massachusetts, after a long study and visit in the Philippines, said:

> I agree with him that should there be a war, it would be impossible for the United States Government forces to hold the Philippines. I agree that it would be a tragedy for the Government to attempt to hold the Philippines; but if we lose the Philippines we would lose nothing of advantage to us particularly.

When the gentleman concedes that we can not retain them in time of war and that they are of no benefit to us in time of peace, I submit to the House that he has confessed himself out of court. In fact, the Washington conference made it impossible for us to retain the Philippines by agreeing to a naval ratio that precludes it.

Forcible retention of Philippines would require the biggest navy in the world.

For traditional reasons I favor independence. I am so old-fashioned that I still believe in the Declaration of Independence. Truth is everlasting and all pervading. If it was true in the United States in 1776, that all just governments derive their powers from the consent of the governed, it is true in the Philippine Islands in the good year of our Lord, 1928.

The Declaration of Independence is the chart and compass which has guided our ship of state over many a stormy sea and I for one shall protest to sailing the good old ship, ignoring its bearings and soundings, for then soon it shall be necessary that all be scuttled. The Declaration of Independence and the principles that are now so old-fashioned were still wise in the early part of this Government. It was good when Thomas Jefferson said:

> The people of every country are the only safe guardians of their own rights.

They were still wise in the 1840's when Daniel Webster said:

> No matter how easy may be the yoke of a foreign power, no matter how lightly it sits upon the shoulder, if it is not imposed by the voice of his own nation and of his own country he will not, he can not, and he means not to be happy under its burden.

They were still wise in 1860 when Lincoln said:

> Those who deny freedom to others deserve it not for themselves, and under a just God can not long retain it.

Those principles were still wise in 1892 when President Cleveland said:

> The government of a remote and alien people should have no permanent place in the purposes of our national life.

They were still wise in 1916 when Congress by solemn enactment provided that it was never our intention to hold in subjection a foreign people. These principles only became obsolete and ill-timed in 1920 when our country was turned over to the exploiters of its resources and the despoilers of its honor. [Applause.]

I am for Philippine independence from a moral standpoint also. Every President from the acquisition of the Philippines to Coolidge has promised in unequivocal language that we, when they were ready and desired independence, would grant it, and not until recently, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] so ably proved in a speech in a previous Congress, when barons of wealth controlled by temptation for rubber and other sordid considerations came into influence in this Government, was it ever advocated otherwise, and then it was first announced that "American sovereignty must remain in the Philippines." Advocacy that American sovereignty shall remain in the Philippines is an unblushingly advocacy of a betrayal of our solemn pledge.

At the outset of American occupation President McKinley expressed the policy that should be and has been followed by us in the Philippines in his message to Congress in 1899, when he said:

> The Philippines are ours, not to exploit but to develop, to civilize, to educate, to train in the science of self-government.

In his instructions to the first Philippine Commission, headed by Doctor Schurman, on January 20, 1899, he expressed the hope that the commissioners would be received as bearers of "the richest blessings of a liberating rather than a conquering nation."

Doctor Schurman, president of the first Philippine Commission, construed that policy to mean:

> Ever-increasing liberty and self-government * * * and it is the nature of such continuously expanding liberty to issue in independence.

In his instructions to the second Philippine Commission, headed by Taft, in 1900, President McKinley said:

> In all the forms of government and administrative provisions which they are authorized to prescribe the commission should bear in mind that the government which they are establishing is designed not for our satisfaction, or for the expression of our theoretical views, but for the happiness, peace, and prosperity of the people of the Philippine Islands, and the measures adopted should be made to conform to their customs, their habits, and even their prejudices, the fullest extent consistent with the accomplishment of the indispensable requisites of just and effective government.

President Taft, while civil Governor of the Philippine Islands, on December 17, 1903, said:

> From the beginning to the end of the State papers which were circulated in these islands as authoritative expressions of the Executive the motto that "The Philippines are for the Filipinos and that the Government of the United States is here for the purpose of preserving the Philippines for the Filipinos, for their benefit, for their elevation, for their civilization," again and again appear.

President Roosevelt in 1908, in his message to Congress, discussing the opening of the Philippine Assembly, said:

> I trust that within a generation the time will arrive when the Filipinos can decide for themselves whether it is well for them to become independent or to continue under the protection of a strong and disinterested power, able to guarantee to the islands order at home and protection from foreign invasion.

President Taft in a message to Congress on December 6, 1912, said:

> We should * * * endeavor to secure for the Filipinos economic independence and to fit them for complete self-government, with the power to decide eventually, according to their own largest good, whether such self-government shall be accompanied by independence.

On October 6, 1913, President Wilson, in a message to the Filipino people delivered by Governor Harrison, said:

> We regard ourselves as trustees acting not for the advantage of the United States, but for the benefit of the people of the Philippine Islands. Every step we take will be taken with a view to the ultimate independence of the islands and as a preparation for that independence.

President Wilson in December, 1913, in his message to Congress, said:

> By their counsel and experience, rather than by our own, we shall learn how best to serve them and how soon it will be possible and wise to withdraw our supervision.

In 1916 Congress became participant to this policy by adopting the following preamble to the Jones law, which is the organic act of the Philippine Islands:

> Whereas it was never the intention of the people of the United States in the incipiency of the war with Spain to make it a war of conquest or for territorial aggrandizement; and
>
> Whereas it is, as it has always been, the purpose of the people of the United States to withdraw their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and to recognize their independence as soon as a stable government can be established therein; and
> Whereas for the speedy accomplishment of such purpose it is desirable to place in the hands of the people of the Philippines as large a control of their domestic affairs as can be given them without, in the meantime, impairing the exercise of the rights of sovereignty by the people of the United States, in order that by the use and exercise of popular franchise and governmental powers they may be the better prepared to fully assume the responsibilities and enjoy all the privileges of complete independence.

President Harding in his reply to the Second Philippine Independence Mission, said:

No backward step is contemplated, no diminution of your domestic control is to be sought.

A careful reading of all of those promises will show that they are based on two, and only two, premises. The first is a desire for independence, and the next is a capacity for self-government.

To say that the Filipinos do not desire independence is asserting an absurdity on its face, for everybody, even school children, want freedom. The desire for independence is almost unanimous and far more overwhelming than it was in this country prior to our war of the Revolution.

The only question which remains to be decided, under our solemn pledge, is: Are they capable of self-government? That presents this question: When is a nation capable of self-government? What is the measure by which you shall determine that?

Most gentlemen of Congress who visit the Philippines unconsciously apply a measure comparable with the United States. Is it fair to expect any people to join the school of nations prepared to enter the senior class? Is it not fair to expect of them only such capacity as those nations having the least capacity that enjoys self-government rather than those having the greatest capacity? They have as great capacity as most of the nations that now enjoy self-government. I invite comparison with any nation south of the United States.

Those who deny independence to the Philippines base it upon two entirely inconsistent grounds.

The President of the United States in his veto of the Philippine plebiscite bill took the position that it would be disastrous to the Filipinos to withdraw from them the privileges of free trade with America.

This and other reasons beneficial to the Philippines are the grounds stated to the general public.

Those who, however, control the policies of the party in power by financing their campaigns look at it from another standpoint.

Joseph W. Harriman, addressing his associates tersely, frankly, yet brutally, blurts out the real ground—

Why should we buy of them instead of owning them?

So the administration's Philippine policy, like its foreign policy, is very confused, and the plot is still further thickened by another angle presented by it.

The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE], a distinguished member of the Ways and Means Committee, the other day addressed the House insisting upon a tariff on Philippine sugar. It is understood that similar suggestions for other products will follow. So it seems that we who advocate Philippine independence are soon to receive allies to our ranks based upon motives entirely different from those altruistic ones advanced by the President.

Let us give them independence, and they will be satisfied, and all their products will be subject to tariff.

There are many Members of Congress, including myself, who believe that the conditions having been fulfilled we ought now to grant independence. There are many other Members of Congress who believe that this should be postponed, and I am going to offer a suggestion in compromise, as all Members of Congress who have visited the Philippines are unanimously in agreement that we should determine our policy because the confusion existing there is retarding development. My suggestion is that this Congress go on record recommending that we withdraw all sovereignty over the Philippines at the expiration of five years.

Are the Filipinos capable of self-government?

I laid down the measure a moment ago by which we can acquire this information. A Congressman who visits Manila leaves there with a confused and a misleading idea. Most Congressmen who visit the Philippines do so upon a Government transport. They are there four or five days. In that time they are entertained continuously by the American contingent and by the native contingent, each in its own way, trying to influence the Congressman to its own viewpoint, and he leaves with about the same knowledge of the Philippines that one visiting New York and lavishly entertained for five days would have of the conditions existing in the United States.

I traveled over the Philippines and lived and stayed with the Filipinos, spending nights in their homes, in the cities, in the villages, and on the farms, and I disillusioned myself about many preconceived notions as to my own superiority. It is very difficult for an American to realize, when he sees a Japanese looking at him and talking, that that Japanese is saying to himself, "What a funny looking fellow that is, and what strange eyes he has." But East is East and West is West, and even if our civilization could be transported, it would not fit.

Let me give you just a homely illustration that I have used before. In the East the Chinese all wear their shirts on the outside of their trousers, and the first thing that occurred to me when I saw a Chinaman thus dressed, "Look at that fool Chinaman with his shirt tail out."

It is a hot country, and I soon began to realize that it was much cooler with it out; I realized that it was much more sanitary with it out; I realized that it was much more comfortable with it out, and reason upon reason multiplied why he should wear it out, and to this good day I have never found a good reason for wearing it in as we wear ours. [Laughter.]

I want to illustrate that it requires a knowledge of the people, a knowledge of their institutions, their thought, their sentiment, their traditions to understand or appreciate them.

But let us apply actual, indisputable facts and see whether the Filipinos are capable of self-government. They have a higher per cent of literacy than 36 out of the 56 independent nations of the world to-day. Again, the best criterion by which you can measure the quality of a man or a nation is regard for woman. Show me a man or a nation that has no respect for woman and I will show you a man or a nation beneath respect.

In the Philippines the woman occupies an exalted position in the home. She handles the pursestrings, and in the Philippines divorce is practically unknown. Again, 80 per cent of the Filipinos live on and own their own farms.

Oh, but they say, should we grant them independence they will be exploited by their politicos. Whether a man is a politico or a statesman depends upon one's viewpoint. Oh, what politicos Samuel Adams and Patrick Henry were to George III, but, oh, what statesmen they were to our people.

UNDERHILL says:

Why, they are disrespectful to our officers.

I deny this, but, oh, if it were true, compare what any of them at any time has ever said with Patrick Henry when he said:

Cæsar had his Brutus; Charles I his Cromwell; and George III may profit by their example.

Mr. MAAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILBERT. Yes.

Mr. MAAS. Does the gentleman allege that conditions existing in the Philippine Islands to-day are comparable with those existing in the Colonies under King George?

Mr. GILBERT. Oh, well, the gentleman's comparison could be carried so far afield——

Mr. MAAS. The gentleman is making the comparison.

Mr. GILBERT. I say in many respects the comparison is favorable to my argument. I will be glad to answer any definite, specific question, but I do not care to be led off into a theoretical discussion. If the gentleman has any facts he wants to bring out, I will yield to him.

Mr. MAAS. All right; the great cry in the Revolution was taxation without representation; does that exist in the Philippines?

Mr. GILBERT. Well, I could give the gentleman one instance. The Philippines had an export tax. That export tax was paid by the consumers of Philippine products in the United States. We prevented them from levying an export tax. The Governor General vetoes any number of bills relating to taxation or any other question that he sees fit.

Mr. MAAS. They do not pay one dollar of direct taxation to the Federal Government, do they?

Mr. GILBERT. The Federal Government of the United States?

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

Mr. GILBERT. No; and the Federal Government of the United States does not pay one dollar of direct taxes to the Philippines.

Mr. MAAS. And they do not pay any taxes to the States.

Mr. DYER. If the gentleman will yield, the Philippine revenues are used to pay the salary of the Governor General and other officials appointed by the President, including the members of the Supreme Court.

Mr. GILBERT. Not only that, but the Americans in the Philippine Islands built from Manila to Baguio a most wonderful and expensive road out of the Philippine treasury solely for the benefit of American military men to go up there and enjoy their summer vacations.

Mr. MAAS. Great Britain maintained foreign troops on our soil; are we maintaining foreign troops on their soil?

Mr. GILBERT. Yes; we have had as high as 12,000 in Fort McKinley.

Mr. MAAS. Most of them native Filipinos.

Mr. GILBERT. The gentleman's information is wrong.

Mr. MAAS. I was over there this summer.

Mr. GILBERT. How long?

Mr. MAAS. Considerably more than four days.

Mr. GILBERT. And the gentleman spent his whole time in Manila?

Mr. MAAS. No; I flew all over Luzon Island.

Mr. GILBERT. Oh, the gentleman got his information from an airplane? [Laughter and applause.]

Now, let us discuss it from the standpoint of statesmanship. I will admit that in the Philippine Islands there is a great respect for their leaders. Let us see what kind of leaders they have. Senator Osmana was pronounced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] one of the best constitutional lawyers of this day. The gentleman that now represents the Philippines in this House [Mr. GUEVARA] made one of the most brilliant, most convincing arguments before the Insular Affairs Committee the other day that I have heard in either branch of Congress since I have been a Member. [Applause.]

I went into the penal farm at San Ramon, managed by a Filipino, an enormous institution, with thousands of convicts, and it is not only self-supporting but pays a handsome revenue to the government.

I went through a cement plant at Cebu, a government-owned institution, under Filipino management, that has made and continues to make an average of 40,000 pesos a year for the government over and above its expenses. I found all over the islands men and women, capable leaders in all vocations in life, eminent jurists, surgeons, and writers.

The University of Santo Tomas, more than 25 years older than Harvard, is in Manila and older than any university on the continent.

In this country in respect to reverence to authority the opposite prevails. In the Philippines they may revere their leaders too much, but I submit to this Congress that in America we have gone to the other extreme. This body and the Senate, even the President, through the press and otherwise is constantly a subject of ridicule. The membership of this body is usually represented to the American people as ignorant and dishonest.

Now, where is the proper line between these two extremes? I can not say, but as for me I prefer the Filipino trait.

General Wood said that their elections are "fair and orderly and would be a credit to any people." In the Philippines from 80 to 90 per cent of the people entitled to do so vote. Popular government in the United States is rapidly being proven a failure. In a presidential election in this country recently only 49 per cent of those entitled to vote were enough interested to walk a few blocks to exercise their suffrage. Compare what General Wood said about elections of that country to elections in our own country. I could read you what the Kentucky highest court said about an election by the Republican machine pulled off in Louisville a few years ago. That highest court said that fraud was rampant and indecency prevailed.

Mr. THATCHER. What about the election in Louisville last fall when the Democrats had control? How many hundreds of voters were carried to jail and held until after election?

Mr. GILBERT. From a partisan standpoint I do not care to argue with the gentleman, but I submit his remarks are conclusive to the argument I am now making as to the unfairness of elections. [Laughter.]

In the State of Pennsylvania I recently read an article which stated that the machine was so powerful that it not only made the lame walk but produced at the polls and voted men who on the night before had been peacefully sleeping in their graves for 20 years. [Laughter and applause.]

Whether capable or not, their conduct in government matters in many particulars should be imitated by us.

There are before this Congress certain bills affecting Philippine matters that I want to say in all seriousness are an insult to this body. The Insular Affairs Committee has reported out a bill fixing the salaries of the insular auditor at a higher salary than is paid the Comptroller of the United States. The insular auditor audits about $40,000,000 and the Comptroller of the United States about $3,000,000,000.

They have a bill which gives to the vice governor a salary equal to the Vice President of the United States. Under conditions in the Philippines you would have to double these salaries to arrive at their value, because a dollar in the Philippine Islands will go twice as far as in the United States.

One gentleman of the committee wrote to one of the Americans in the Philippine Islands who favored these increases for his advice on these salaries, and he wrote back that the salaries should be increased, and gave his idea of the expenses in the Philippines for a family of two.

This gentleman set out in his expense account that a family of two would require $4,500 per year to live on. When I looked at the expenses and the itemized accounts, I found he provided for this family of two five servants and an automobile and entertainments, and yet try as he would he could not get the expenses up to but $4,500 a year; and we have voted out a bill fixing their salaries at $10,000.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. And who pays for those salaries—the government of the Philippine Islands or this Government?

Mr. GILBERT. The Philippine treasury. Another bill would take from the Philippine Senate the right to confirm the appointees of the Governor General. There is no necessity for any of these bills. They are just presented as an irritation, as an annoyance to the Philippine people. Why do I say that? Because when it was learned that this additional help was wanted in the Philippines, the Philippine Legislature, in order to cooperate and show good feeling, passed a bill themselves giving it, and the Governor General vetoed that bill for the reason that he did not need their assistance.

There is a mistaken idea that the Moros and the Filipinos do not get along well together, and the law provides that the Governor General shall appoint the representatives of the so-called non-Christian tribes with the advice and consent of the Philippine Senate. The Philippine Senate has patriotically endeavored to live up to that high responsibility. I visited three Moro Provinces. In two of them there were American governors and in the third there was a Filipino governor. Under the Filipino governor at Cotabata, Governor Guiterez, I never saw better order or better feeling. A Moro named Dato Sinsuat took me up the river to his residence and I talked with him about the government. I went over his farm. The utmost good feeling prevailed. I went to the Province of Lanao, under a military American governor, Governor Johnson, and there I saw an almost armed camp. They were lined up, Moros on one side and Moros on the other side, one demanding that I be for independence and the other that I be against it. The Philippine Senate did refuse to confirm Governor Johnson, and they should have refused to do it. Then another American was named, Mr. Effington, a man of attainments, and the Philippine Senate confirmed him immediately.

Let me give you another illustration. You can not blame those people for loving their leaders. Governor Luna was the governor of the northern Province. He was the brother of their national hero. This great war hero of the revolution was General Luna. His brother was an eminent Philippine author, and when the time of Governor Luna expired and an American was appointed it was but natural that the Philippine Senate refused to confirm that appointment. But what did they do? They sent a committee, and that committee investigated and found that the acting American governor, Governor Early, had a good record and was a good man, and they confirmed that appointment by unanimous vote.

Then why come before this Congress and ask us to take away that power from them when it has never been abused and when we have promised them by solemn enactment that we would continue to instruct them in self-government, so that the time might arrive when we could turn the entire government over to them?

The utmost friendship exists between the Americans and the Filipinos in all of the Philippine Islands, with the exception of Luzon. The American contingent at Manila is imperialistic, it is totally unsympathetic with the simplicity and the fundamental truths and traditions of our Government.

Ever since American occupation it has been the custom there to read the Declaration of Independence on the Fourth of July. For the first time, the last Fourth of July the commandant of the naval station there, Admiral Kitelle, who had charge of the ceremonies, failed to read the Declaration of Independence, and then made a speech entirely unsympathetic and contradictory to its sentiments.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILBERT. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Did I understand the gentleman to say that an admiral in our Navy failed to read the Declaration of Independence on the Fourth of last July?

Mr. GILBERT. He failed; and it had been the established custom there on the Fourth of July from the time of the American occupation to read the Declaration of Independence, but so far we have drifted from our moorings, that even when custom requires us to meet on the Fourth of July, some are embarrassed to read the very document whose birthday they are celebrating.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Does the gentleman have any information as to whether or not this failure was brought about because of any feeling toward the Philippine Government, or was it just because the admiral did not care to impress upon them those principles contained in the Declaration of Independence?

Mr. GILBERT. In my opinion, he was attempting to commit the United States to a foreign policy which the gentleman denounced on the floor the other day; and the Secretary of the Navy should remind the admiral that we have a State Department to initiate our foreign policies. This Admiral Kitelle, when I arrived there and gave out a statement showing friendliness and sympathy with the Philippine people, came out in an article in the Philippine Times, in which he laid this down as American policy, that we would grant independence to the Filipinos, to use his exact words, "When all can read, write, and speak English." Think of it! When I criticized that on this floor and charged him with causing friction over there, I saw from the Philippine press that he pronounced my statements as absurd. Yet those were his words and acts, which did and must have been uttered and done knowing they would cause resentment. No nation in the world ever attained such proficiency. We have enjoyed a splendid independence for 150 years, and all in America can not read and write English. England has had a splendid civilization for a thousand years, and all in England can not read and write and speak English, and to expect a foreign people to acquire a foreign language condemns itself by its own absurdity.

Mr. McCLINTIC. In that article that appeared under the name of the admiral, in which he gave out the policy of this Government, did he state whether or not he was authorized to do this by any source in Washington?

Mr. GILBERT. No; although he spoke as having knowledge he made that verbal statement carried in headlines in the press and gives wide publicity as the policy of this country made in a most challenging manner.

Mr. McCLINTIC. In other words, he is a good deal like some of the other admirals, who recently have been making statements with reference to the foreign policy of this Government usurping the powers of the Department of State? They are at least not adding to the good will that should prevail between this and other nations.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILBERT. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was in Manila on the 5th of July. My recollection is that Senator Quezon and the other Filipino leaders, with the exception of Aguinaldo, refused to take part in the Fourth of July celebration in Manila on that day. Does the gentleman have any information about that—as to why they refused to take part?

Mr. GUEVARA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Kentucky permit me to answer that?

Mr. GILBERT. Yes.

Mr. GUEVARA. I can emphatically deny that any Filipino has ever refused to attend a celebration of the Fourth of July, because every Filipino in the Philippine Islands—men and women—regard the Fourth of July as the most sainted day in the world, because that day stands for liberty, not only of the American people but as well of all human beings in the world. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Kentucky permit me to ask a question of the Commissioner of the Philippines?

Mr. GILBERT. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Pardon me, but it is my understanding—and I am only asking for information—that General Aguinaldo and about 10,000 of the Philippine independent army that followed him marched in the Fourth of July parade, but that Senator Quezon and others of the independent group did not occupy a place on the platform during the celebration, and did not take part in the parade. Am I right or wrong about that?

Mr. GUEVARA. It would not make a particle of difference to the representative of the Philippine Islands in the United States. I can pledge the gentleman that no Filipino, whether Mr. Quezon or whoever he may be, will ever refuse to attend a celebration of the Fourth of July.

Mr. SIMMONS. Did they occupy the place that was accorded to them?

Mr. GUEVARA. They were not invited to. I am positive of that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then they were not there.

Mr. GUEVARA. And that is the reason why.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman now permit a question of the Commissioner of the Philippines?

Mr. GILBERT. Yes.

Mr. DYER. In addition to participating in the Fourth of July celebration, is it not a fact that every public schoolhouse in the Philippine Islands has over it the flag of the United States?

Mr. GUEVARA. Yes; and not only that, but in every home in the Philippine Islands you will find some preparation for the Fourth of July celebration, because even the people in the remote counties in every part of the Philippine Islands feel that the Fourth of July is one of their own festivals.

Mr. GILBERT. I would say, apropos of the interruption, that a Congressman who will take a transport and be entertained at the Army and Navy Club in Manila can get more misinformation than he can get anywhere in the world.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was not entertained at the Army and Navy Club. I was very graciously entertained by the Philippine leaders, so that my information did not come from the source that the gentleman thinks.

Mr. GILBERT. Evidently it came from a hostile and inaccurate source.

One reason why this power to confirm should not be taken away from the Philippine Senate—and I do not impugn the worth and ability of Governor Wood—is that no one should be given this despotic power. I want to say that Governor Wood made some very unfortunate appointments. For example, he appointed Jose Melencia, son in law of Aguinaldo, to represent Mindanao in the Philippine Legislature, when that man prior to that time had never been on that island. He appointed Escamilo, secretary of Aguinaldo, as representative of the northern Province when he was a resident of Manila and totally unacquainted with the country he was appointed to represent.

Mr. GUEVARA. Is it not understood that the appointments in this country are to be made from the majority party, and not from the minority party?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not think the gentleman from Kentucky understood the gentleman.

Mr. GILBERT. I thought he was making a statement.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. He asked whether it was the custom for the President to make appointments from the majority or from the minority.

Mr. GUEVARA. I asked, if appointments were made by the Executive of this country always of the minority party, how will the people of these States think of those appointments?

Mr. GILBERT. Of course, appointments go to the majority party here, but always to the minority party there. It was my purpose to try to look at all these actions from our own standpoint. In visiting the Philippines I visited some humble homes; and when it comes to wholesome uprightness and patriotism and love of country, the Filipinos are not excelled by any people on the globe. [Applause.]

It is difficult for an American to realize that he is not preferred at all times. Senator BINGHAM—I am giving this because it is public property—said to President Quezon:

> America is a great country, a rich country, a philanthropic country. Why do you object to being wards of the Government of the United States, the noblest and best country in the world?

And to that sentiment of Senator BINGHAM'S I agree, that it is the noblest and best country in the world. But let me give you President Quezon's answer. He said:

> My father is poor but honest. If I could have a rich foster father who could bestow upon me greater advantages and give me greater opportunities and more property, yet I would say, "I want my own father."

[Applause.]

That is the way they feel, and that is a noble sentiment. They admire the United States and they love its flag. They are grateful for the great benefits given them; but after all each one of them reiterates the sentiment of President Quezon: "Regardless of that, we want our own country."

Just one other thought. I hate to return to a materialistic suggestion. It is said that our withdrawal from the Philippines would create confusion and uncertainty, and be detrimental to the Filipinos. Well, of course any country, when it is reorganized, suffers some disturbance, just as when the United States gained its independence confusion existed and materially we had a setback. We must realize that when any nation is ready for independence the longer that independence is postponed the less fitted the people will be to exercise it when finally it comes.

I wish I had time to tell you about many things concerning which your information is erroneous. I want to tell you the details of the Filipino National Bank disaster, which has been held up to this Congress and to this country time and time again as a complete vindication of the assertion that they had no financial ability. I want to give you the facts about that. It was at a time when in this country banks were failing. But here is something else that is true. The Philippine National Bank was never exclusively under Philippine control, and when it finally went broke the main embezzler and the main defaulter was an American, and the main cause was the establishment of a branch bank in Shanghai and the embezzlement of the money by that American by the name of Miller. And he was never brought to justice because they did not want in that country the spectacle of an American being tried before a Philippine tribunal for embezzlement, and to this day he has never been prosecuted. The facts show irregularities and misappropriations of the grossest kind.

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GILBERT. Yes.

Mr. RAGON. There were some prosecutions for that and some men sent to the penitentiary, were there not?

Mr. GILBERT. The gentleman from the Philippines can answer you more accurately than I can. Yes; but all were Filipinos. The Filipinos went to prison; the American chief wrongdoer went free of prosecution. [Laughter.]

Mr. GUEVARA. Yes; all were Filipinos.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILBERT. Yes.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. You say the bank went broke, but as I understand, the losses have been made up and that it is very prosperous.

Mr. GILBERT. They are gradually making them up. A large amount of money was loaned to different institutions, sugar centrals, and other great corporations, and when the bank was taken over they could not then meet their indebtedness, but through a process of postponement, like we are postponing our national collections, the prospects are that the money will ultimately be collected.

And another thing. I hear Members say that we can not grant the Philippines independence by reason of their indebtedness to us, represented by bonds in the United States. They can secure those bonds. We will never lose a dollar on that account; but does it not look a little harsh at this time, after we have surrendered to the leading nations of the world from half to more than half of their indebtedness to us that we should take this child, whom we have raised and educated, and demand of it payment to the utmost farthing? [Applause.] I am not in favor of surrendering any part of the Philippine bonds, nor did I vote for but one of the settlements of our foreign indebtedness, but it does seem to me unfair for those who come here and vote to give Great Britain a reduction in its interest, which amounts to practically half of her indebtedness and then by the same vote demand of the Philippines payment of every dollar they owe us. I would like to give you the facts of the Harrison administration, but I have not time. I thank you for your attention. [Applause.]

Speech delivered at Manila before the Philippine Legislature:

REMARKS OF CONGRESSMAN GILBERT, AUGUST 18, 1927, IN MANILA BEFORE PHILIPPINE LEGISLATURE

Mr. GILBERT: Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, members of the legislature, a Member of the Congress of the United States speaking to the Legislature of the Philippine Islands would naturally speak on the relationship existing between those two Governments. Since becoming a member of the Insular Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives, I have diligently studied the problems that are both yours and ours, but while I have only studied them you have lived them. I visited your islands two years ago and am now completing a month's investigation in the different Provinces, and am prepared to speak, at least, with some understanding.

The Congress of the United States has the sole power to determine the governmental status of the Philippine Islands. It has from time to time determined the extent of its participation in the Government of the Islands and has from time to time surrendered much of its sovereignty and is under promise to surrender what sovereignty it now exercises whenever your welfare requires it. That it could do so is not questioned in the United States even by those who vigorously oppose such a step. Constitutional lawyers in the Philippines agree with this opinion although we find it vigorously combated by certain business and military leaders. However, after the United States Congress has, through a period of 25 years, gradually surrendered most of its sovereignty, we will not take time in discussing whether or not it can continue to do so.

The only questions are, has the time arrived when it should do so; if not, will it ever arrive; and if so, when? In answering these questions we should be guided by the representations we have held out and the conditions that prevail.

In politics, I am a Democrat, but party affiliation should not affect one's position on this great national question. The Republican Party was in power when we acquired the Philippines, and credit must be given to it for inaugurating the policy of "ever-increasing autonomy to result in complete self-government." This policy was vigorously defended by Presidents Roosevelt and Taft and repeated by President Harding. President Wilson, the only Democratic President since the acquisition of the Philippines, merely adhered to this doctrine inaugurated by his Republican predecessors. President Roosevelt was definite and insistent for granting independence to the Philippines.

In 1908 he said that this should be done within a generation. A generation is usually computed at 20 years, and that time has now elapsed. His reasons were both altruistic and practical. Speaking solely from the American point of view, he declared that the Philippines constituted "national weakness." So it must be conceded that failure to grant independence when the proper time arrives would belie a fixed policy of more than a quarter century.

I am concerned in the welfare of the people of the Philippines, but above this I place the honor of my own country. I can never consent that independence be postponed indefinitely and the promises of our Presidents, both living and dead, and the promise contained in a solemn enactment of Congress be betrayed.

No Member of Congress would approve the violation of his own solemn promise nor should want his country to do that which he would not do himself. I firmly believe in the wisdom expressed in the Declaration of Independence. It was the chart and compass of our new ship of state. It has guided us safely over many stormy seas. But we have drifted so far from our moorings that when by custom we assemble on July Fourth some find it too embarrassing to read the document whose birthday they are celebrating. [Applause.]

The conditions contained in the Jones law and in the representations by our several Presidents as well as in the political platforms of both dominant parties may be summarized in three parts: Desire for self-government; capacity for self-government; ability to form a stable government.

Desire for self-government is a natural impulse. It would be most unusual if it did not exist here. I have talked to the American schoolteachers in many of the Provinces, and from much observation I am willing to state that the desire for independence is almost unanimous. It exists in much greater degree than it did in America just prior to the Revolution.

The capacity for self-government and the ability to maintain a stable government must be ascertained by some reasonable measure because these conditions are necessarily relative. When is a nation capable of self-government? Should we apply the standard of America and England? This is obviously very unfair and yet it is the standard usually applied by casual American observers. With apologies to those of other nations, I assert that the English-speaking people are as superior in matters of government in the modern world as the Romans were in the ancient world. To apply their high standard would be requiring the Filipinos to enter the schools of nations qualified for the senior class.

The true requirement would be a capacity equal to those nations enjoying self-government who have the least and not the greatest capacity for self-government. In my opinion, the Filipinos are more capable of self-government than a large proportion of those nations now enjoying it and their characteristics are such that their government, if independent, would be more stable than a majority of the smaller governments now enjoying independence. The statistics on illiteracy and crime confirm the opinion herein expressed.

Some opponents of independence in their enthusiasm suggest the most unreasonable tests. Recently we read in the Manila Times, July 24, quoting a certain man of high military position that independence would not be granted until "all can speak, read, and write English." As such perfection does not exist in America nor in England, the absurdity of such a suggestion is apparent. [Applause.]

The individual Filipino is capable of the highest attainments. In my travels through the Provinces, I find great numbers of men and women even in the smallest villages who are successfully conducting big interests; who are splendid doctors, able lawyers, and scientific engineers. The judges preside with ability and fairness. Your leaders in the legislature compare favorably with statesmen of other countries. Your speaker, though a young man, is rapidly attaining a splendid reputation. One of your senators has been referred to by a Republican in the American Congress as one of the greatest constitutional lawyers. The president of the senate, though severely criticized by opponents of Philippine independence, must be a man of the greatest ability and honesty for, after much inquiry among his enemies, not one specific act showing a lack of ability or integrity has been pointed out. Your Commissioners to the United States Congress, Messrs. GABALDON and GUEVARA, stand very high in that body and with conspicuous ability have prevented any reactionary legislation affecting the Philippines from being passed. They have served their country well during a most hazardous period and it is nothing but fair that I should report this to you.

The mass of Filipino people are very willing to follow their leaders and to obey willingly constituted authority. In this respect they resemble the Japanese. With so many able men and women throughout the entire Archipelago to advise and lead them, political exploitation on the part of the leaders, so vehemently predicted, is very remote.

As stated by Governor General Wood and corroborated by all of the investigating committees, the world has never seen greater progress made by any people than that made by the Filipinos since the American occupation. This is a great compliment to both peoples and is it not also proof of the wisdom of our policy of increased autonomy? The Americans are responsible for having implanted in the Filipinos this great desire and hope for independence. They set out the promises which have been reasonably complied with.

The splendid cooperation which has existed and the gratitude to America for what has been done can not be expected to continue indefinitely if she fails to comply with her part of the agreement. When Filipino leaders insist that the promises be fulfilled, they are denounced as agitators.

It has been 10 years since any forward step was taken. It must be frankly admitted by American statesmen that the time is now ready for another forward step or they must be willing to bear the odium of reaction.

All agree that this uncertainty should be removed. It is retarding development. It is said, we should announce our intentions. No; we have already announced them. We should live up to them [applause], but if we don't intend to, I agree with Republican Congressman UNDERHILL that we should say so and cease dealing in duplicity. The Republican Party has full power and responsibility, but seems incapable to form a definite policy or too cowardly to announce it.

The conditions of our promise having been fairly met, if the matter is presented while I am Member of Congress I shall gladly vote to live up to our agreement of full independence. [Applause.]

All of the Filipino leaders to whom I have talked insist that nothing less than full and complete independence be granted. They are fully justified in insisting on nothing less. However, I am sure that it would be wisdom on the part of the Philippine government to enter into certain treaty relations with the United States which would be to the interests of both peoples.

The position usually taken that when the United States withdraws it should withdraw any treaty relationship, leaving the islands at the mercy of any nation that sees fit to overrun it, is neither wise nor justifiable. The United States should protest against any weak nation being thus exploited against its will, and it should especially be concerned in the child which it adopted and educated. On the other hand, it is to the interest of the Filipinos that American capital be preferred to either English, Japanese, or other capital. The islands are very rich in natural resources.

I was told by the foreign sugar producers that lack of capital and organization was all that gave Cuban and Hawaiian sugar an advantage. With these properly supplied, they said that they would compete regardless of the tariff. Of course, disorganized business conditions would result. The same thing occurred in America when independence was granted. The longer independence is postponed the greater will be this distress when it is granted. When a people are ready for independence, the longer it is postponed, the less capable they will be when it does come.

Those opposing independence present two arguments each contradicting the other. First, they insist that the islands are a treasure and we should retain them. Next, they insist that they are a great expense to us and we should retain them for the good of the Filipinos.

For 25 years they have been an expense to the United States, and the time is very remote when they will ever be a real value to the American taxpayer and consumer. Automobile owners have been tempted with the thought of cheap rubber, but the facts are that there are only three real rubber plantations in the entire islands. All of the resources are equally far from yielding any immediate return to the American consumer. It will be many generations before he will reap the amount he expends in increased taxation.

The Filipinos if independent, of course, will have their serious problems. I find the non-Christian tribes, especially the Mohammedan Moros, a greater problem than I had anticipated. All nations have their racial problems. In the part of the United States from where I come, we have in some respects a similar problem. The Mohammed Turk has been a problem in Europe for many centuries. But this is no reason why independence should be denied.

With approximately 11,000,000 Christian Filipinos and 1,000,000 of non-Christian people, there would be no greater proportion of irreconcilables (if that extreme term may be used) than exists in many nations enjoying splendid cooperation. My talks with many Moros for and against independence failed to disclose one who based opposition on racial hatred.

Pardon me for briefly referring to the fear of internal warfare, dishonorable leadership, and other such arguments as are frequently made. I find that it requires fewer policemen and peace officers to keep order in a Philippine city than it does in an American city of the same size. The people are very quiet and orderly. Honest and faithful leadership is universally desired, and if dishonest leaders are placed in power, as they will be sometimes, they will be found out and retired. The United States has recently experienced the most corrupt administration in its history. Three Cabinet officers in the last Republican administration were forced by public opinion to retire, but this does not show that the American people or their officers are generally corrupt, but on the contrary it shows that when dishonesty exists it will not be tolerated. The same thing would be true here.

Again it is insisted that American-owned bonds of the Philippine government will be endangered if independence be granted. These bonds could be easily secured. Yet after the United States has so recently given the great financial nations of the world such a material reduction in their indebtedness to her; after giving to England one-half of her interest rate, and after giving to other nations still greater reductions; in all, amounting to many times the Philippine indebtedness, does it not seem a little inconsistent that we should be so exacting toward the Philippines?

Many of those who voted to give away billions of American dollars to European governments are the most insistent that we collect the last farthing of Philippine bonds. I did not approve those settlements nor would I approve any help on the part of the United States Government toward meeting the Philippine bonds.

The Japanese fear and many other arguments have been so fully discussed that I can add nothing to that controversy.

In studying this subject, one must realize that he can not fairly measure oriental customs and ways by western measure and that our civilization if it could be transferred, after years of occupation, would even then be unsuitable here.

The greatest friendliness, cooperation, and regard should exist between the two nations and that can be better secured by our noninterference in Philippine affairs.

It is impossible in an address of this kind to be as detailed as might be desired, yet I wish to state my views here in the islands because I shall state the same on the floor of the American Congress. I have no political hopes to advance nor any fear of political punishment.

I have no quarrel with those who differ from me. Some of my best friends in Congress are those who differ with me the most. I admire their honesty and courage.

I am on the committee having charge of insular affairs and believe in being open and frank and above all, want only the satisfaction of doing my duty as I see it.

I thank you. [Applause.]

MINORITY VIEWS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five legislative days in which to file minority views on the so-called emergency officers' retirement bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that he may have five legislative days in which to file minority views on the so-called emergency officers' retirement bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE PROTECTIVE TARIFF

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WURZBACH] for 50 minutes.

Mr. WURZBACH. Mr. Speaker, I have been wanting for some time to discuss the McMaster Senate resolution, which met a timely and deserved death on the floor of this House. I heard a week or so ago a part of the address of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] on this resolution and have read all of it since in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Mr. OLDFIELD and lesser lights in the Democratic Party, all notoriously opposed to a protective-tariff policy, have been making desperate but, I think, vain efforts to politically capitalize the said resolution. It was and is a political resolution pure and simple, and I doubt seriously whether it was ever expected by many of its supporters to effect its avowed purpose of "helping the farmers."

The original resolution read as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Senate favors an immediate lowering of tariff schedules, and tariff legislation embodying lowered schedules, should be considered and enacted during the present session of Congress.

Later the resolution was amended to read, and this was its final form when it passed the Senate:

That many of the rates in existing tariff schedules are excessive, and that the Senate favors an immediate revision downward of such excessive rates, establishing closer parity between agriculture and industry, believing it would result to the general benefit of all.

The original and amended resolutions are substantially the same, except that the latter adds to the former the recital that—many of the rates in existing tariff schedules are excessive—and that the lowering of duties is for the purpose of—establishing closer parity between agriculture and industry.

Reduction of duties is stressed in both resolutions, and that seems to be their main and sole purpose. Not a line, word, or syllable promising to raise duties on agricultural products. Both are so frankly antiprotectionist and possible free trade even that it is easy to understand the support the resolution received in the Senate and House from free-trade Democrats and from luke-warm protectionist Republicans. Many of its supporters hoped the resolution would embarrass the Republican administration and at the same time "fool the farmer." It failed in both its purposes, and demonstrated again that the American farmer has more sense than many politicians have sincerity. This may be "damning with faint praise," but let it go at that.

I repeat that the resolution does not offer higher duties on farm products. Read the resolution. It provides only for reduction of duties. Reduction is the keynote and the heart of the resolution. The "establishment of parity" mentioned in the resolution is not permitted by raising duties but by reducing them.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WURZBACH. I decline to yield now. I shall be glad to yield a little later, and I think I shall probably answer the doubts the gentleman has in his mind as I go along. [Applause.]

It can not even be urged that by the terms of the resolution parity may be established by keeping agricultural duties at their present rates and by reducing industrial rates only. I credit the framers and supporters of the resolution with enough honesty and frankness to believe that if that had been the purpose of the resolution that it would have so provided, clearly and explicitly.

There was only one possible way to have accomplished the double purpose expressed in the resolution of tariff reduction and the alleged "establishment of agricultural and industrial parity." I do not admit that there is any great general disparity between the two mentioned classes of schedules, except in a few isolated cases, any more than there is disparity between articles within each of the two named classes. But assuming, for the sake of argument, that there is a disparity between agricultural and industrial duties, and assuming further that such disparity is in favor of industry and against agriculture, then by the very terms of the resolution, in order to effect its dual purpose of reducing rates and establishing parity, it would be necessary to reduce duties on both schedules, agricultural as well as industrial, but to make reductions greater on industrial than on agricultural schedules. Such a procedure, however, would contribute less than nothing to the solution of the farmers' problems. It certainly would not mean higher duties on farm products, but would cripple or kill both industry and agriculture. Such a procedure would mean a double slaughter, and I can see no advantage or satisfaction to agriculture if the corpse of industry is buried in a grave 12 feet deep while agriculture rots in a grave with only 10 feet of earth and a tombstone above. [Applause.] For all practical purposes both would be dead—dead enough to suit even the rankest free trader.

A majority of the Senators who voted in favor of the McMaster resolution and Members of the House who have expressed their approval of the same are not protectionists either for manufactures or for agricultural products. Their past records leave no doubt of this. They consider the present duties on farm and ranch products too high, and, in fact, did all that in their power lay to prevent the levy of the present duties now protecting those products. Is it not safe to assume that if opportunity presented itself they would strive just as strenuously now to reduce or to take off entirely the tariff now on those very farm products as they strove a few years ago to keep them off? If not, why not?

The House did not have an opportunity to vote on the merits of the McMaster resolution because it was thrown out on a point of order, and when an unsuccessful appeal was taken from the decision of the Chair I voted to sustain the Chair. Had an opportunity been presented to vote on the resolution itself, it would have been my pleasure to vote against it, not only because the resolution did not by its terms offer relief to the farmers, but for the very excellent additional reason that I am not willing to trust Democratic Members of the House, and especially Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee, to give relief to the farmers by way of protective tariff duties. I say this because the record of Democrats, including those who championed the McMaster resolution, holds out not the slightest hope for tariff farm relief.

Democrats naturally would not have construed the resolution as favoring higher duties on farm products, but would have given it exactly the opposite construction, namely, tariff reduction. I can only judge the probable actions of Congressmen by their past performances. In 1921 Democrats voted almost solidly against high tariff duties on agricultural and ranch products, and what reason is there to expect different action from them to-day?

Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles? Wherefore by their fruits we shall know them

Less than a month ago, as appears on page 3791 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD], who is also chairman of the Democratic National Congressional Committee, in a colloquy with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COLE], said:

Why did you not vote to send the McMaster resolution to the Committee on Ways and Means and consider that question of increasing the tariff on agricultural products? You have closed the doors against yourselves.

Mr. OLDFIELD here attempts to leave the impression that, had the McMaster resolution been referred to the Ways and Means Committee, the duties on farm products would have been increased, and wants the inference drawn that he and his Democratic colleagues on that committee would have favored an increase of duty on agricultural products. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] is not only now a member of that committee but was a member during 1921 and 1922. The other Democratic members on that committee now and in 1921 and 1922 are the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], present ranking Democrat on that committee, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], the gentleman from New York [Mr. CAREW], and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MARTIN].

During the first called session of the Sixty-seven Congress there came up for consideration what is known as the second emergency tariff bill, the first emergency tariff bill having passed both Houses during the latter days of the Sixty-sixth Congress and which was vetoed by President Wilson. This second bill, as well as the first, provided for substantial duties on farm and ranch products exclusively and did not include any manufactured products at all and therefore did not permit the alibi usually resorted to by Democrats representing protective-tariff constituents, that they could not support the legislation because, although they favored tariff protection for farm products, and especially those produced in their own district, still the duties were too high on manufactures in the particular bill. The second emergency tariff bill permitted no such alibi, for here was a bill wholly and solely a farmers' relief bill, requested by the farmers and livestock men of the country to avert threatening disaster to their businesses. The bill carried, among other important farm and ranch products, the following:

Wool and mohair, unwashed, 15 cents per pound; washed, 30 cents; scoured, 45 cents;
Cattle, 30 per cent ad valorem;
Sheep, 1 year and over, $2 per head;
Sheep, less than 1 year old, $1 per head;
Peanuts, 3 cents per pound;
Cottonseed oil, 20 cents per gallon;
Onions, 40 cents per bushel of 57 pounds; and Lemons, 2 cents per pound.

Now, how did Democratic Members of the House vote on this bill, and especially how did Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee, who were members of that committee then and who are also members now, vote on that exclusive farm relief tariff bill? Every one of them, with but a single exception, Mr. GARNER, Mr. OLDFIELD, Mr. COLLIER, Mr. CRISP, and Mr. CAREW, voted against the bill, and only Mr. MARTIN of Louisiana voted in the affirmative. Think of it, gentlemen of the House, JOHN GARNER, of Angora goat fame, left entirely shepherdless and forsaken, the goats upon which his former fame rested. Not only his goats, but the sheep of his county, district, and State were left to their sad fates, so far as the gentleman from Texas was concerned or seemed to care. Little Boy Blue, oh, where were you? [Applause.] I wonder what happened to John? I wonder who got JOHN GARNER'S goat? Some say late Congressman Claude Kitchin did. Possibly a statement made on April 14, 1921, as appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on page 269, by Mr. Kitchin, then ranking Democrat on the Ways and Means Committee and minority floor leader, will clear up the Garner mystery. Mr. Kitchin, on the part of the minority, submitted the views of the minority, and among other things said:

The policies and principles advocated by the Democratic Party and inspiring the continued maintenance of its organization for nearly 100 years forbid our approval of the pending bill and impel us to vigorously protest against its passage.

Approval of this bill by the Democrats in Congress would be a complete surrender of such principles and abandonment of such policies, and a confession that for over a half century the Democratic Party has been wrong and the Republican Party right on the tariff. [Applause.] Further, it will be admitted that there is no need for the continued organization of the Democratic Party. Such approval would be an urgent invitation to the farmers of the country, especially of the West and South, to go bodily into the Republican Party—the party of tariff robbery—as the only means of future salvation. * * *

If there is a Democrat in Congress or elsewhere who is fooling himself into the belief that by our party embracing the doctrine of protection, or by his vote for protection, though it be on his home industry, he is going to keep within the folds of the Democratic Party or bring into its ranks the men who favor such protection, then he should at once undeceive himself. A sensible protectionist will go to the party that has taught and practiced protection for 50 years, and not to the party that has always opposed it.

Mr. GARNER was a member of the minority on the Ways and Means Committee, and therefore the views of the minority, as expressed through Mr. Kitchin, were as much Mr. GARNER'S views as they were the views of Mr. Kitchin. Mr. Kitchin was the spokesman authorized to speak for and in behalf of the Democratic minority on said committee.

This is perhaps the frankest and cleanest-cut statement of the true Democratic position on the tariff that could possibly be made. Claude Kitchin was not only an able Democrat but he was a man of exceptional ability and outstanding political courage and integrity. He was not a man to trim his sails to catch every political breeze that blew. He was straightforward and consistent on the tariff issue. He was honestly opposed to the principle of protection. I wish other Democrats would be just as honest and consistent and meet the issue courageously and without dodging and side-stepping.

In the last days of the Sixty-sixth Congress, in the fall of 1920, Mr. GARNER voted for the first emergency tariff bill, which passed both Houses and was later vetoed by President Wilson. The gentleman from Texas not only voted for that bill but supported it on the floor of the House in a speech that attracted considerable attention. It was a famous speech, but its fame rested principally upon the fact that it was the speech that Mr. GARNER so carelessly (?) forgot to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is easy to understand why the gentleman from North Carolina, minority floor leader, did not want that kind of a speech in the RECORD. It was whispered about in cloakrooms and corridor that Mr. Kitchin had dropped a gentle hint that it would not look well for his party to have as a member of the Ways and Means Committee one who was not ready and willing to defend the free-trade breastworks of his party in the then pending legislation and in the case of future tariff legislation.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WURZBACH. Not now. I will a little later, if I have the time.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is going to talk about a man who is dead, I really think he ought to yield.

Mr. WURZBACH. All I have said about the gentleman who is dead—Mr. Kitchin—is that he was a better and more consistent Democrat than the gentlemen who are now occupying the Democratic side of the House. I decline to yield.

I am not reviewing this tariff legislation history of a few years ago with the primary purpose in mind of attacking the tariff record of Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee, nor for the purpose of criticizing the tariff record of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], but I am calling attention to democracy's free trade and antiprotection record mainly to show that the McMaster resolution would not have received such consideration at the hands of Democrats as would have brought any advantage to the farmers by way of higher duties. Had the McMaster resolution reached the Ways and Means Committee the Democratic members would have used it as a means not only to reduce duties on manufactures but on farm products as well. They had failed in their efforts in 1921 to keep farm products on the free list and they would, unquestionably, have made every effort in 1928 to take off all or at least a part of the duties placed on farm products by a Republican Congress only a few years before. [Applause.]

An analysis of the vote on the emergency tariff bill of 1921 is interesting and in every way supports the statements I have just made. The bill passed the House by a vote of 269 for and 110 against. Of the 269 yea votes, 255 were cast by Republican Members and only 14 yea votes by Democrats. More interesting still, of the 110 nay votes an even 100 were cast by Democrats and only 10 by Republicans. In the light of this last expression of Democratic judgment and sentiment on farm-relief legislation, is any farmer in the country willing to trust the Democratic Party to write a tariff bill and have even a glimmer of hope for higher duties on farm products? No intelligent farmer or ranchman is quite so simple or credulous as that. The farmers and ranchmen of this country must look to the Republican Party for relief in the way of protective duties. The record of the Democratic Party establishes this beyond question. Late Congressman Claude Kitchin, JOHN GARNER, and other members of the minority, speaking for their party, admitted it when they said:

Sensible protectionists will go to the party that has taught and practiced protection for 50 years, and not to the party that has always opposed it.

[Applause.]

This is sound, political advice in which I heartily concur. [Applause.]

Referring again to Mr. GARNER'S tariff record. He is now the ranking Democrat on the Ways and Means Committee, having succeeded the late Hon. Claude Kitchin, and is supposed to speak with some authority for the Democratic Party. He was considered a pretty fair protectionist up to the time he became the ranking Democrat on the Ways and Means Committee. Early in 1921 a change was coming over him. On January 27, 1921, page 2131 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, he said:

* * * I am not a protectionist; neither am I a free trader. I will never go above a competitive rate.

On July 21, 1921, page 4174 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, he repeats:

I am not a free trader; I am not a protectionist. Therefore, I must be a revenue-tariff man.

He seems to be arguing with himself, but unconvincingly even to himself. [Applause.] He does conclude, however, that he is not a protectionist. So much is certain. He admits it. He says, and repeats:

I am not a protectionist.

His constituents will be interested to read this confession. He said further:

I am opposed to a free list, but if I am driven between the theory of the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. Fordney—

Mr. Fordney was a protectionist—and the theory of the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. OLDFIELD—

Mr. OLDFIED is anything but a protectionist—

if I am driven to choose between the two, with conditions as they are in Europe and the world, we being a creditor Nation to the extent of $15,000,000,000, I tell you frankly I must go to free trade rather than to your kind of protection.

Now he says he is a free trader! I do not say it; he says it, and with refreshing frankness. He says further:

In the next decade, unless our foreign debt is remitted, * * * and if our exports are to continue, as we hope they will, by leaps and bounds, until we become the greatest trade nation on earth, there is no more question in my mind than that night will follow day that you must turn toward international free trade.

He is now covering more territory; he is an "international free trader"!

On the same day, July 21, 1921, page 4178 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], replying to a speech of Mr. Hardy, of Texas, said:

The gentleman—

Referring to Mr. Hardy—

can not find in any statement I have ever made where I spoke of the benefits to be derived from a tariff, nor can the gentleman show where I said that I would levy it for protection, scaling from 1 to 50 per cent.

I am afraid that his goat and sheep raising, his truck growing constituents will consider these expressions as rank treason to them and to their interests.

Formerly he claimed he was for a competitive tariff. What that means the Lord only knows. Did he mean that he wanted a tariff that will make it possible for the American to compete with the foreign producer? He could not have meant that, because that defines the protective-tariff policy of the Republican Party, and he declares he is not for protection. Or did he mean a tariff that made it easy for the foreigner to compete with the American? That is manifestly the kind of "competitive tariff" he wants—one to make it easy for the foreigner to compete with the American. That is the internationalist free-trade notion, but is not the Republican idea. Whose interests does he want to protect? The foreign producer or the American, that is the question.

He has also been heard to say he is in favor of a "tariff for revenue." Every tariff is for revenue, low, high, or middling. He did not even go so far as to say that he was for a tariff for revenue only. He seemed to be afraid of the word "only," but he need not have been, for the term "tariff for revenue only" is just as meaningless under the present fiscal conditions and arrangements of this country as is the term "tariff for revenue" without the "only." Both are meaningless now.

Twenty years ago when the chief source of revenue was collected through the customhouse and the ordinary expenses of Government ranged somewhere around a billion dollars a year or less—that is to say, when custom duties collected were equal approximately to the expenditures of the Government—the term "tariff for revenue only" had a significance because it furnished a means of fixing tariff rates. Then, the term "for revenue only" determined and limited the sum of money necessary to be collected through the customhouses, because it fixed and limited the purposes for which tariff duties were to be collected, and the apportionment among the various importable commodities of the amount each was to produce determined the rates of duties. To-day when the expenses of Government reach three and four billion dollars a year and the chief source of revenue is derived from income taxes, the term "tariff for revenue" or "tariff for revenue only" means nothing, but does serve as a cloak for timid Democrats to hide under.

But these vague and meaningless earlier expressions of the gentleman from Texas are entirely irrelevant now in the light of his later declarations in which he says:

I am not a protectionist—

And—

I tell you frankly I must go to free trade—

And that he—must turn toward international free trade—

And when he goes so far as to say, as he did in his colloquy with former Congressman Hardy:

The gentleman—

can not find in any statement I have ever made where I spoke of the benefits to be derived from a tariff.

I say it is useless to discuss his former professed advocacy of "a tariff for revenue" with or without the "only," competitive tariffs, and what not, because he has now placed himself squarely against protective tariffs, if not for straight out free trade. He denied even that he ever made a speech claiming that there were "any benefits to be derived from a tariff."

Not only the above-quoted remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] show that he has changed his position on the tariff and has gone over from the protection side to the other side (although one can not say exactly where he stands) but a recital of the record of his votes on the two emergency tariff bills furnishes additional proof, if that were necessary. When the first emergency tariff bill was up for consideration in 1920, he, as well as four other of his Texas colleagues, Mr. HUDSPETH, Mr. BLANTON, Mr. JONES, and Mr. Parrish, all Democrats, voted for the bill. After its passage and veto by President Wilson, his colleagues above named, voted to override the President's veto, but Mr. GARNER had already gotten on the inactive list. The record shows him as "not voting." I do not know where he was. Probably revising his famous tariff speech which he delivered only a short time before in support of this very bill. He revised it, but he revised it to extinction for it never again saw the light of day, and according to Members who heard it, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD was denied the adornment of a protective tariff speech that was the real thing. This happened before my time here, but they tell me it was some speech, some protective-tariff speech. When the vote was had on the President's veto, the other four Texas Democrats, Mr. HUDSPETH, Mr. BLANTON, Mr. JONES, and Mr. Parrish, stood by their guns, even to the extent of overriding their Democratic President's veto, but alack and alas, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], was A. W. O. L. The House failed to override the veto and that was the end of the first emergency tariff bill.

The next emergency tariff bill came before the House during the early part of the Harding administration in 1921. I took my seat here at this time. The two bills in the main were identical bills and the Texas Members before mentioned, Mr. HUDSPETH, Mr. BLANTON, Mr. JONES, and Mr. Parrish, construed them as being at least substantially the same, for they again voted for the legislation. It is hardly necessary to say that I also voted for the bill and supported it on the floor of the House. What did the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] do? He voted against the bill, and this he did in the face of the fact that the people of his district were more vitally interested and in greater need of the protection provided therein than the people of any other district in the whole United States. Every ranch and farm product of his district was protected by this bill—sheep and goats, wool, mohair, cattle, onions, lemons, peanuts, beans, vegetable oils, long-staple cotton, and a variety of other farm products. It is still the mystery of the State and of his district why he voted for the 1920 emergency tariff bill and against the bill of 1921, or why he voted against the 1921 bill at all, and without reference to the inconsistency of his two votes.

Last summer I accepted an invitation to speak in Mr. GARNER's district, in the Rio Grande Valley—the "Magic Valley," as it is very aptly called, because of its marvelous fertility—and every man and woman with whom I came in contact declared that the prosperity, the very existence of the citrus-fruit growers, and the truck growers depended upon a high protective tariff on these products. What I say of the Magic Valley is also true of the "Winter Garden" section, also in Mr. GARNER's district. They are an incomprehensible people that live in that section. They raise grapefruit, oranges, tomatoes, onions, and Democratic majorities down there, complain about low tariff duties, and ask for higher ones, but fail to realize that the only party that prescribes the medicine they say they need "for what ails them" is the Republican Party. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. WURZBACH. Mr. Speaker, may I have 10 minutes more?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I hope the gentleman from Maryland will not insist on his objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I simply want to go ahead. To-day is Calendar Wednesday and the Committee on Foreign Affairs has the call.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman has a purpose in drawing his indictment, so let him finish it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. If the gentleman wants to hear any more of this, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I want him to finish his indictment, so the House may have the benefit of it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it does seem to me that the gentleman, who has 50 minutes of time and is calling Congressmen by name, should consent to yield, especially when he is speaking with the consent of the Members.

Mr. WURZBACH. Well, I would gladly yield, but I realize now I did not ask for enough time to make this speech. I hope I will be permitted to finish it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WURZBACH. The onion growers especially are complaining bitterly about the low duties on onions. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] voted against the bill that carried a duty on onions, but only a month or so ago, appeared before the Tariff Commission here in Washington in behalf of a one-half cent additional duty on onions under the flexible provisions of the present law he so bitterly opposed. [Applause.] He voted against giving the onion growers any duty at all on onions, and now is invoking the provisions of that very law to secure an additional one-half cent per pound. JOHN knows his onions—his political onions—or thinks he does, but I venture the opinion that the onion growers of his district by now also know their JOHN. It is going to be an interesting thing to see how the onion growers perform during the coming election. Will they vote as they pray? I wonder; oh, I wonder!

There can be no more important event in the affairs of this Nation or one that more vitally and directly affects the welfare of all the people than the writing of a tariff measure. Within all reasonable probability the next Congress will revise the tariff schedules. Those who are elected to Congress next November will, of course, write the measure. The present tariff measure will then have been upon the statute books eight years, and in all probability the next tariff measure will remain an equal length of time. The November election of Congressmen is, therefore, of much greater importance to the producers of the Nation than the usual congressional campaigns.

Protection has become recognized as a national policy of government, especially by the producers of the South. That the American citizens who toil upon the farms, in the factories, and in the mines, that those who pay taxes and contribute toward the building of schools, churches, public highways, and those who develop the natural and artificial resources of the Nation have first claim upon the American markets is conceded by all thoughtful citizens. I will not, therefore, take up your time or burden the records of this Congress with an argument in favor of protection. The only question at issue now before the southern producer is how to get protection, and it is in reply to that query that I shall address the rest of my remarks to-day.

The best way to get protection is to send a Representative to Congress who will vote for it. Now is the time for the southern producers to become active. They should not wait until after the election and then send petitions, resolutions, prayers, and letters to Congress asking for protection. Elect a Congressman who favors a protective tariff. The Congressman is the constitutional representative of the district, and when the Congressman votes the district has voted and there is no appeal. While I favor protection to everyone who toils, and to the manufacturer as well as to the agriculturist, I am not in favor, in every instance, of forcing protection upon any district that sends to this House a Congressman that does not want it. Let the producers of the South take warning. If they want protection, send to Congress a Representative who will vote for it. There are, of course, many products that are universal, but in the South we have many products confined to our section and, in some instances, are largely within one or at least a few congressional districts. Among these products are peanuts, vegetable oils, citrous fruit, wool, mohair, onions, honey, and early vegetables.

Let the producers of the South be not deceived by the argument that their Congressman will vote for protection upon the products of their district and then vote against the products of every other district as a means of securing protection. Such a claim is not only inconsistent, ridiculous, arrogant, and insincere, but it is downright dishonest.

The proper queries to make of every candidate for Congress are, Do you favor a national policy of protection? Are you willing to give to the producers of other districts the same protection that you want for those of your own district? [Applause.] Do you refuse to take instructions from any party caucus to vote against a protective tariff measure? If the candidate of either party will answer in the affirmative, he is eligible for the suffrage of a protectionist. [Applause.]

In this connection, I want to say that a Republican protectionist is better than a Democratic protectionist. [Applause.] In fact, it is always better to send a Republican to Congress than to send a Democrat! [Applause.] But where there is no Republican candidate for Congress, I would favor a protectionist Democrat to a nonprotectionist Democrat. Any citizen is justified in voting for bread for his family. Protection should be an American policy and not a sectional one. There are industrial tariffs that are too low, and there are manufactured products now on the free list that ought to be protected. Notable examples of manufactures that are thus discriminated against are cement and shingles. These two are only examples and the next Congress, if it is Republican, will correct this injustice.

The value of products which governs the value of property and of business ought not to be imperiled by the outcome of an election. A low tariff is no better than no tariff. No business can run at a loss. The amount of the loss is secondary.

Hon. CLAUDE HUDSPETH, of the sixteenth congressional district of Texas is as good a protectionist as I am and a much better Democrat than many of his colleagues within the party, for the Democratic Party was originally a protection party. It is the "latter-day saints" of the Democratic Party that have reversed its policies on the tariff. The Republican Party 75 years ago became and still is the proud foster father of democracy's abandoned child.

We find as many kinds of tariff Democrats as there are different brands of breakfast food. We have the free-trade Democrat, the tariff-for-revenue Democrat, the competitive-tariff Democrat, the internationalist free-trade Democrat, the equalization-tariff Democrat, and a few protective-tariff Democrats. Fortunately for the voters of the South the roll call in Congress automatically classifies the various brands of tariff Democrats.

We hear much said about reducing the cost of living by lowering the tariff duty on the things the farmer buys. But does that argument appeal to the onion growers of the Rio Grande Valley whose products are rotting on the ground for want of an adequate tariff? Is the so-called eastern manufacturer robbing them of anything? Low tariff has ruined them, and they have no purchasing power. No danger of anyone robbing them! Their interests were not adequately looked after in the present tariff measure and there is suffering and distress, and the next Congress must materially increase the duties on onions, tomatoes, and many other farm products.

That the layman may more fully understand, and the records kept perfectly clear, I will say that national party platforms are always brief and, of course, have no constitutional or legal authority. Their importance depends upon the construction your Representative in Congress places upon them. It is not the national party convention, but Congress, that writes tariff laws.

We are approaching a campaign, and in my State the tariff is the outstanding issue. For the information of voters of Texas I want to reproduce the record votes of the Texas Congressmen on the tariff, including the Wilson emergency, the Harding emergency, and the Fordney-McCumber measure. An examination of the RECORD reveals that Hon. CLAUDE HUDSPETH consistently voted for protection on every roll call. It further reveals the free traders and nonprotectionists. Read the RECORD. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert this list in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to insert the list referred to in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The list is as follows:

How the Texas Congressmen voted on the 1922 tariff act

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk called the committees. When the Committee on Foreign Affairs was reached—

GORGAS MEMORIAL LABORATORY

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I call up H. R. 8128, a bill to authorize a permanent annual appropriation for the maintenance and operation of the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up House bill 8128 and asks unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8128) to authorize a permanent annual appropriation for the maintenance and operation of the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be permanently appropriated for each year, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, to be paid to the Gorgas Memorial Institute of Tropical and Preventive Medicine (Inc.) (hereinafter referred to as the Gorgas Memorial Institute), for the maintenance and operation by it of a laboratory to be known as the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory, upon condition (1) that the necessary building or quarters for said laboratory shall be constructed within the five years next ensuing after this act shall become a law, either upon the site offered by the Republic of Panama therefor at or adjacent to the city of Panama, or upon a site in the Canal Zone to be provided by the United States; (2) that each of the Latin-American

Governments be invited and permitted to contribute annually, on a pro rata basis, according to population, toward the maintenance and operation of such laboratory, the total of such contributions not to exceed 75 per cent of the total contributed by the United States; and (3) that the United States be represented permanently on the board or council directing the administration of such laboratory, with privilege to the Latin-American Governments contributing as aforesaid to have representation on such board or council; all such representation to be based upon and in proportion to the actual respective contributions made to the aforesaid maintenance and operation.

SEC. 2. That pending the construction of the necessary buildings or quarters for said Gorgas Memorial Laboratory there is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually, in manner aforesaid, for a period not exceeding the five years hereinbefore named, said sum of $50,000, payable to the Gorgas Memorial Institute, to enable and permit to be made the organization of the said Gorgas Memorial Laboratory and its maintenance and operation in temporary quarters or in any existing laboratory in the Republic of Panama or the Canal Zone.

SEC. 3. The Gorgas Memorial Institute shall make to Congress annually, on the first Monday in December, a full report of the operation and work of the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory for the fiscal year next preceding, and shall include therewith a complete statement of the receipts and expenditures of said laboratory for such fiscal year.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 3, line 7, strike out "for the fiscal year" and insert in lieu thereof "up to the first of November"; and in line 10, after the word "year," insert "the books and accounts of the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory shall at all times be open to examination by the Comptroller General of the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

There was no objection.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a brief statement about the purposes of the bill. It provides for an authorization of an annual appropriation of $50,000 to be paid to the Gorgas Memorial Institute of Tropical and Preventive Medicine (Inc.) for the purpose of maintaining the work of a tropical research laboratory on the Isthmus of Panama.

The Gorgas Memorial Institute of Tropical and Preventive Medicine is incorporated under the laws of Delaware. It has no capital stock and is a purely philanthropic institution, the honorary president of which is the President of the United States, Mr. Coolidge. It is carrying on a great work in this country in supplementing the public health, and other health and sanitary activities of the country through funds made up by private subscriptions and contributions. Also it has in view the establishment of a tropical research laboratory in Panama, where research work may be carried on along the lines contemplated by the great sanitarian, Gen. William Crawford Gorgas, during his great work on the Isthmus. The Gorgas Memorial Institute has been organized by the advisors and coworkers of General Gorgas during the World War, when he was Surgeon General of the United States Army.

The Republic of Panama has donated a very valuable site for this laboratory work and for the construction of a laboratory building. Also two Presidents of the Republic of Panama have made a pledge to the extent of their ability to make it that the Republic of Panama will construct the laboratory building for this purpose, at a cost of something like $500,000 to $700,000. I am thoroughly familiar with the site, which is near the city of Panama, adjacent to the great Santo Tomas Hospital, built by the Republic of Panama at a cost of three and a half million dollars; and it is also near the great Ancon Hospital in the Canal Zone. The Republic of Panama has also purchased $20,000 worth of equipment for laboratory purposes, which is now available for this laboratory work.

The bill is twofold in its purposes: First, the inauguration of tropical research work on the Isthmus of Panama; and, second, the memorialization of Gen. William Crawford Gorgas on the Isthmus, whose work there made possible the construction of the canal.

Section 1 authorizes an annual appropriation of $50,000 a year as the contribution of the United States toward the maintenance and operation of a tropical research laboratory on the Isthmus of Panama, conditioned: (a) That the necessary building or quarters therefor, within five years next ensuing after the bill may become a law, shall be constructed, either upon a site which has been offered therefor by the Republic of Panama, or upon a site in the Canal Zone to be provided by the United States; (b) that each Latin-American Government be invited and permitted to contribute annually, on a pro rata basis, according to population, toward such maintenance and operation, the total of such Latin-American contributions not to exceed 75 per cent of the total contributed by the United States; and (c) that the United States and the others contributing be represented on the board or council, directing the administration of such laboratory; all such representation to be based upon and in proportion to the actual respective contributions so made by them.

Section 2 authorizes, pending the construction of the necessary building or quarters for such laboratory, the like annual appropriation of $50,000 under terms of contribution by our own and the Latin-American countries similar to those indicated in section 1, thereby permitting the organization and the maintenance and operation of such laboratory work in temporary quarters, or in any existing laboratory in the Republic of Panama, or the Canal Zone.

These sections provide that the funds appropriated under these authorizations shall be paid to the Gorgas Memorial Institute of Tropical and Preventive Medicine, for the purpose of maintaining and operating such laboratory.

Section 3 provides that the Gorgas Memorial Institute shall make to Congress annually on the first Monday in December full report of the operation and work of the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory up to the 1st of November next preceding, and shall include therein a complete statement of receipts and expenditures of the laboratory for such fiscal year. This section also provides that the books and accounts of the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory shall at all times be open to examination by the Comptroller General of the United States.

Full hearings were had upon this bill before the Foreign Affairs Committee. Some of the most prominent medical and sanitary experts and scientists in the entire country were present, and one very distinguished gentleman from abroad, Mr. Henry S. Wellcome, who founded and helps to maintain the world-famed Wellcome Tropical Research Laboratories at Khartum, in the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, and founder of research laboratories and a medical museum in London, England, was also present at the hearing and gave testimony of a most dramatic and interesting character in behalf of this measure. All these distinguished men testified, as well did also the president of this organization, the Gorgas Memorial Institute, Dr. Franklin Martin, who is also director and president of the American College of Surgeons. Doctor Martin is giving his time and money to this great work. Also there appeared before the committee the three Surgeons General of the Army, the Navy, and the Public Health Service, Generals Ireland, Stitt, and Cumming. Also, the following named were heard in behalf of the measure, and aided in demonstrating in most convincing manner the great need for the enactment of the bill, namely:

Dr. Bowman C. Crowell, Chicago, Ill., member of executive committee and director Gorgas Memorial Institute; associate director American College of Surgeons; recently director Oswaldo Cruz Institute for Tropical Diseases, Rio de Janeiro.

Dr. George W. Crile, Cleveland, Ohio, director Gorgas Memorial Institute; president Cleveland clinic; regent and ex-president American College of Surgeons, and for seven years engaged in health work in the Philippines.

Dr. Arthur T. McCormack, Louisville, Ky., executive head of the Kentucky State Board of Health.

The best judgment of the medical, surgical, and sanitary profession of the entire country is backing this bill. The American Federation of Labor is also backing the bill, and Mr. Edgar Wallace, the personal representative of Mr. Green, the president of the American Federation of Labor, appeared before the committee and urged the great importance of this laboratory work. The reasons for this, the need for this laboratory, I may briefly state, are these: With the Panama Canal as the great focal point of international traffic in all the world, situated as it is in the heart of the Tropics, it is a place where disease may be brought and may be scattered to the four quarters of the earth unless proper steps are taken for prevention. We all know of the great work which was done on the Isthmus under the sanitary leadership of General Gorgas in eradicating yellow fever, malaria, and other diseases from the Isthmus, until the Canal Zone and the cities of Panama and Colon are to-day as healthful as any cities of our own country, and more healthful than most of them.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. THATCHER. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman tell the House something about the make-up of the corporation, the institute, which is to have charge of the laboratory?

Mr. THATCHER. Yes. As I stated a moment ago, it is organized under the laws of the State of Delaware, with no capital stock, no profits are permitted, and no funds allowed to be expended except for the purpose of employing experts like laboratory directors and people of that type and assistants to carry on the work involved.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may continue for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Can the gentleman think of any governing body made up of more distinguished men than the gentlemen who represent the personnel of the institute?

Mr. THATCHER. I will say that the very cream of the philanthropic and scientific life of this country is sponsoring this work, and the President of the United States is the honorary president of the organization. I now give a list of the officers and directors of the Gorgas Memorial Institute of Tropical and Preventive Medicine, and a statement of the great scientific and philanthropic organizations indorsing the work of the institute, as follows:

Officers: Hon. Calvin Coolidge, honorary president, President of the United States; Franklin Martin, M. D., president, director general American College of Surgeons; Gilbert Fitz-Patrick, M. D., vice president, American Society for Control of Cancer; George M. Reynolds, treasurer, chairman of the board, Continental and Commercial National Bank; W. J. Sennott, assistant treasurer, Continental and Commercial National Bank; W. H. G. Logan, D. D. S., M. D., secretary, secretary American Dental Association; Silas Strawn, President American Bar Association.

Executive Committee: Franklin Martin, M. D., chairman, director general American College of Surgeons; Herman Bundesen, M. D., president American Health Association; Bowman C. Crowell, M. D., associate director American College of Surgeons; Hon. Charles G. Dawes, Vice President of the United States; Gilbert Fitz-Patrick, M. D., American Society for Control of Cancer; W. H. G. Logan, D. D. S., M. D., secretary American Dental Association; E. W. Ryerson, M. D., Children's Memorial Hospital; Charles H. Thorne, trustee Northwestern University.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Hon. Calvin Coolidge, honorary president, Washington, President of the United States.

Dr. Franklin Martin, chairman, Chicago, director general, American College of Surgeons.

Hon. R. J. Alfaro, Washington, Panaman minister.

Mr. Bernard M. Baruch, New York City, trustee, College of the City of New York.

Dr. A. W. Blaine, Detroit, dean, Detroit Post Graduate School of Medicine.

Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, Chicago, President American Health Association, and formerly commissioner of public health of Chcago.

Dr. James T. Case, Battle Creek, Northwestern University Medical School.

Dr. Rodolpho Chiari, Panama, President Republic of Panama.

Dr. George W. Crile, F. R. C. S., Cleveland, Western Reserve University School of Medicine.

Dr. Bowman C. Crowell, Chicago, associate director, American College of Surgeons.

Dr. Hugh S. Cumming, Washington, Surgeon General United States Public Health Service.

Hon. Charles G. Dawes, Chicago, Vice President of the United States.

Dr. George E. de Schweinitz, Philadelphia, professor of ophthalmology, University of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Haley Fiske, New York City, president Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.

Dr. Gilbert Fitz-Patrick, Chicago, chairman Illinois branch, American Society for Control of Cancer.

Hon. William Green, Washington, president American Federation of Labor.

Maj. Gen. Merritte W. Ireland, Washington, Surgeon General United States Army.

Dr. Andrew S. Lobingier, Los Angeles, surgeon, Hospital of the Good Samaritan, Clara Barton Hospital.

Dr. W. H. G. Logan, D. D. S., Chicago, secretary American Dental Association.

Dr. Fred Bates Lund, Boston, surgeon in chief, Carney Hospital.

Dr. William J. Mayo, Rochester, Minn., Mayo Clinic.

Dr. Stuart McGuire, Richmond, surgeon in charge, St. Luke's Hospital.

Dr. C. Jeff Miller, New Orleans, Tulane University School of Medicine.

Judge John Bassett Moore, The Hague, Holland, Permanent Court of International Justice.

Brig. Gen. Robert E. Noble, Anniston, Ala., retired.

Mr. Adolph S. Ochs, New York City, managing editor, New York Times.

Mr. Lewis Pierson, New York City, president, United States Chamber of Commerce.

Hon. Belisario Porras, Panama, former president, Republic of Panama.

Mr. George M. Reynolds, Chicago, chairman of the board, Continental and Commercial National Bank.

Dr. Stewart Roberts, Atlanta, professor of clinical medicine; former president, Southern Medical Association.

Hon. Leo. S. Rowe, Washington, director general Pan American Union.

Dr. Edward W. Ryerson, Chicago, consulting surgeon, Children's Memorial Hospital.

Mr. Edward Elwell Spafford, New York, national commander, the American Legion.

Mrs. John Dickinson Sherman, Washington, national president, General Federation of Women's Clubs.

Dr. Ernst A. Sommer, Portland, University of Oregon Medical School.

Dr. Alfred Stengel, Philadelphia, former president, American College of Physicians.

Dr. George David Stewart, New York City, president, American College of Surgeons.

Rear Admiral Edward R. Stitt, M. D., Washington, Surgeon General, United States Navy.

Dr. George W. Swift, Seattle, surgeon, Children's Orthopedic and King County Hospitals.

Mr. Charles H. Thorne, Chicago, trustee, Northwestern University.

Prof. C. E. A. Winslow, Ph. D., New Haven, president, American Public Health Association.

Dr. Hugh Hampton Young, Baltimore, Johns Hopkins University Medical Department.

BOARD OF SCIENTIFIC DIRECTORS

Dr. Richard P. Strong, director, School of Tropical Medicine, Harvard University.

Dr. C. C. Bass, director, Laboratory Clinical Medicine, Tulane University.

Dr. W. G. MacCallum, professor of Pathology, Johns Hopkins University.

Dr. W. G. McCoy, director, Hygienic Laboratory, United States Public Health Service.

Lieut. Col. J. F. Siler, assistant, division of sanitation, United States Army.

Dr. E. E. Tyzzer, professor of comparative pathology, Bussey Institute.

I will also read what President Coolidge said on this subject, as follows:

Human misery and the enormous economic loss caused by preventable illness are matters of serious moment to every individual. The Gorgas Memorial's plan to conserve this needless waste of human resources is commendatory and deserving of the support of all thinking people.

This institute is going on with health education in this country through funds raised by popular subscription, already spending $30,000 a year for educational work; but for intensive research work in the Tropics it will be necessary to have help from the various governments which may be affected.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THATCHER. I will.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to bring to the gentleman's attention, and in that way to the attention of the House, the matter of how the accounts are protected under this bill. In line 10, page 3, the bill provides that the books and accounts of the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory shall at all times be open to examination by the Comptroller General of the United States.

Mr. THATCHER. Yes. The attempt is made to see that this money is expended properly. By this provision protection is made; and it is based on suggestions made by the Assistant Comptroller General, to whom the bill was submitted.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And an annual report is made to Congress.

Mr. THATCHER. Yes; this is also provided in the bill.

Now, Members of the House, I do not think it is necessary to elaborate touching the value of this work. It is well known that the diseases which are considered indigenous to the Tropics may be transmitted to the Temperate Zones, just as was the case with yellow fever formerly when our southern cities were periodically ravaged by this malignant plague; and as was strikingly demonstrated years ago when Philadelphia had one of the greatest outbreaks of yellow fever that this country has ever known. To-day, with our multiplied contacts—for this is the age of a million contacts—with the ships of the world passing through this great canal, and to our own shores, and to foreign shores—there is every reason in the world why, as a matter of prevention, as a matter of protection, and as a matter of foresight, this great work should be organized and carried on there; and all that our Government is asked to do is to make a contribution of $50,000 a year for the actual maintenance of the laboratory—an altogether trivial sum in view of the importance of the work.

And, more than that, it is the purpose of this bill and of the sponsors of this movement to tie into it, not only the Republic of Panama, which has agreed to support it in the most liberal manner, but also all the Latin-American Governments, particularly the tropical countries where these dread diseases exist. We have only scratched the surface in the study and treatment of tropical diseases, the number of which is legion. So, as a matter of protection to ourselves and to our own future, it is of paramount importance that this work begin without delay, and that we have the contributions and hearty cooperation from these Latin-American countries for the operation of this laboratory when it is established.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THATCHER. I will.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It might seem strange to some that we should engage in a work so far away from home, but I think attention should be called to this fact, that certain of these diseases can better be studied there and their prevention better worked out in that part of the country, notably because of malaria, yellow fever, and many other diseases that occur in the tropical countries and spread to the United States. So it is proper that the work should be carried on in the habitat of these diseases.

Mr. THATCHER. Yes; because of the heat conditions the germs there never die except of "old age." They are never killed by the cold. Moreover, our interest in the health situation is paramount because of the Panama Canal.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And Surgeon General Cumming told the committee that there can not be a more suitable and logical place for the study of the tropical diseases than the place where this laboratory is to be located.

Mr. THATCHER. Yes; all the scientific men that appeared before the committee made that statement.

General Gorgas wished to see the entire tropical world redeemed from malignant disease. In Cuba he brought about the absolute elimination of age-old yellow fever after the Walter Reed Board had determined the source of infection. Also, in Cuba, especially in Habana, he greatly reduced malaria. The Stegomyia mosquito, the carrier of yellow-fever infection, and the common black mosquito—the Anopheles—the carrier agency of malarial infection, he exterminated, and a new era dawned for the Queen of the Antilles. He served as chief sanitary officer in Cuba from 1898 to 1902. In 1904 he was appointed chief sanitary officer of the Canal Zone, and in 1907 he was selected as a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission and served in that capacity until the commission was abolished in 1914. In charge of the health and sanitary work in the Canal Zone, by the same practical methods of mosquito extermination, sanitary vigilance, and quarantine he had practiced in Cuba he transformed the Isthmus of Panama, for centuries the greatest plague spot of the world, into a region of health. Without the work of a Gorgas the Panama Canal could never have been constructed, and, in my judgment, the sanitary achievements there and the sanitary lessons taught there will prove of even greater value to the world at large and to posterity than the canal itself. The work of the proposed laboratory will be along original lines. In its operation there will be no duplication of the Canal Zone sanitary activities, which are along established lines of endeavor. Other diseases than yellow fever and malaria remain in the Tropics to be brought under subjection. Other tropical lands are teeming with them. Original research and experimentation must be carried on in order to ferret out the secrets of their malignancy. Thus was yellow fever mastered and malaria brought to bay, and thus must disease after disease fall before the march of science.

In the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan through the work of the Wellcome Tropical Research Laboratories miracles of sanitation have been wrought. Mr. Wellcome followed Kitchener to this region and supplemented the latter's work. During a short period before Kitchener's conquest of that region there had perished by sword and famine and disease a native population estimated at 10,000,000. Now, there has come upon that portion of the earth health and healing. Fever, malaria, plague, sleeping sickness, and other dread diseases formerly rampant there, have vanished under the touch of science and humanitarianism. Mr. Wellcome, in giving his fortune and in consecrating his great talents to this work and to the field of tropical research, stands out to-day as one of the earth's greatest benefactors. He was the intimate friend of Gorgas, and visited the latter in Panama. He was a pallbearer at the funeral of General Gorgas in London, and in the hearings on this bill narrated in the most elequent way the story of those rites.

Let me quote from Mr. Wellcome's testimony before the committee the following touching the value of the Isthmian site for a research laboratory:

In respect to Panama being the ideal location for the Gorgas Memorial Tropical Research Laboratory, I would say that Sir Patrick Manson, the original discoverer, or the first to definitely conceive and work out the idea and realize that the mosquito was the host and carrier of malarial infection, considered Panama to be one of the great tropical disease danger centers of the world. A number of years ago he pointed out that ships passing through the Panama Canal, and to and from the Isthmus and all parts of the world, would bring and carry all manner of diseases—bringing and leaving diseases, while picking up and carrying others to various parts of the world. Sir Patrick regarded this as a very serious matter and he expressed to me repeatedly his very strong views on this subject. I have heard him make similar statements at the London School of Tropical Medicine and elsewhere. Furthermore, I know that General Gorgas also held that same view.

Also, in the same connection, I quote the following statement made at the hearings by Dr. Bowman C. Crowell, whom I have already mentioned:

In a discussion of diseases of the Tropics, the most important place belongs to malaria. While methods for the control of malaria are known, the cost of pursuing these methods on such extensive scales as are necessary in the Tropics mitigate against their efficiency. Present methods also call for human cooperation, which it is not always possible to get when dealing with native tropical races. New methods for the treatment of malaria and its elimination from the globe are a very promising field for investigation. They already occupy the attention of innumerable workers, and any addition to this force that it is possible to secure should certainly be encouraged.

There are a large number of cases of anemia in the Tropics, some of which also exist in temperate climates. Many of these are associated with diseases of the spleen, concerning which very little is known.

Diseases due to animal parasites find their home in the Tropics. These parasites, varying from unicellular organisms up to the larger worms, cause diseases of all of the organs of the body, principal among which are those which infest the intestines, producing untold disability. Among these diseases may be mentioned such as amoebic dysentery and hookworm disease; schistosomiasis; the long list of spirochaetal diseases, among which may be mentioned yaws, or framboesia tropica, a most disfiguring disease, bearing many points of similarity to syphilis, if indeed it be not a form of syphilis, as is believed by many; yellow fever comes within the list of spirochaetal diseases, and has a close analogy in dengue and breakbone fever. The cause of dengue is unknown, and but little is known concerning its method of transmission. Leprosy need only be mentioned on account of the general diffusion of knowledge concerning it. A trypanosoma exists in South and Central America and causes an enormous morbidity and mortality. Transmitted by the triatoma megista, which has a widespread distribution on the South American Continent, it is not at all impossible that the disease itself may spread to the North American Continent. The relation of the parasite which causes it to certain other parasites which are not known to cause disease merits extensive investigation. Nutritional diseases and diseases due to bacteria exist in the Tropics, some of them in much more intensive form than is true outside of the Tropics; and methods for their control and the prevention of their spread are pressing problems.

A knowledge of the intermediate agents which transmit many diseases, notable among which are the mosquito and the ordinary house fly, is woefully deficient; and recognition of individuals who are the carriers of disease without themselves suffering from it is a sine qua non for the protection of those with whom these individuals come into contact.

While reference here has been made to these diseases as tropical diseases the possibility of the transportation of many of them to our own shores is of pressing economic importance, and those who are conversant with methods of recognition of the diseases already known are more and more frequently recognizing cases of these diseases in our own country. This is a most potent reason for further study and for a wider dissemination of the already existent knowledge concerning these diseases.

It is well within the bounds of possibility that a single finding in the laboratory in the Tropics may prove of such economic value to our Government that it will in one year much more than repay the amount spent for such investigations over a very long period of years. This argument, then, is—from the standpoint of the North American—one of self-preservation, in addition to being one of universal humanitarian import.

The diseases referred to above form only a very small fraction of the innumerable morbid conditions which demand present-day investigation, and any possible addition to the number of organizations studying these diseases will take the form of a moral obligation.

I have personally discussed this subject with Dr. George E. Vincent, president of the Rockefeller Foundation, and he has authorized me to make the statement that the Rockefeller Foundation would cordially welcome into the field of tropical medicine an organization which gives promise of making additions to the knowledge of tropical diseases. The Rockefeller Foundation is interested in the elimination of disease from the Tropics and from temperate climates, and appreciates the limits of our present knowledge. The foundation stands ready to put into practical application such concrete measures as may give promise of success, which may be discovered by any workers.

Doctor Vincent also authorized me to state that there is no conflict in any way between the work contemplated under the auspices of the Gorgas Memorial Institute and that of the Rockefeller Foundation, and that he heartily indorses the inauguration of such work under the auspices of the Gorgas Memorial Institute.

It is planned that the Gorgas Memorial Institute of Tropical and Preventive Medicine will form a center for research at which will be welcomed students from all countries, and that it shall form a center for the dissemination of already existing knowledge and that which may result from its researches. The importance of this in the training of medical officers for our Army, Navy, and Public Health Service, to say nothing of lay physicians, can not be estimated in dollars and cents.

Aside from the appropriateness of the selection of Panama as a site for a memorial to General Gorgas there is no place in the world which geographically offers a greater advantage for the study of diseases of all kinds.

There are only three or four of these tropical laboratories—there are some foundations that send people abroad to make investigations, but only a few tropical laboratories are maintained in the Tropics. There will be no duplication of this work, as was fully brought out in the hearings. The only research institutions of the proposed character now maintained in the Tropics appear to be the Oswaldo Cruz Institute in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, the Wellcome Tropical Research Laboratories at Khartoum, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan; and the Columbia School of Tropical Medicine in Porto Rico.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. THATCHER. May I have two minutes more?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THATCHER. I want to say in conclusion that this work was contemplated by General Gorgas, the greatest sanitarian the world has ever known. One of the dreams of his life was that there would be established this research work in the Tropics, because he believed that through proper sanitation the Tropics could be made wholesome and habitable for all races, including the Caucasian; and this he fully demonstrated on the Isthmus.

Pardon a personal note. During the years 1910, 1911, 1912, and 1913 I had the honor to serve as a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission and as head of the department of civil administration of the Canal Zone. General Gorgas was also a member of the commission and in charge of the health and sanitary work there. We both lived in Ancon. We had our offices in the same building, and were in daily contact. Our relations, official and personal, were of the most delightful character; and in certain features of his work I was able, I believe, to be of some assistance.

I came to know and love him. He was a great man. No difficulty could daunt him. To use the phrase, he was the "master of his event." Determined and serene, with unsurpassed skill, energy, and vision, he wrought the miracles of sanitation wherever he went. He and his beloved wife had experienced yellow fever at Brownsville, Tex., in their earlier lives and thus became immune to the fearful malady. Hence, as coworkers they ventured into yellow-fever lands altogether unafraid.

I have not the time to speak at length covering the life and deeds of this great man. His work as Surgeon General of the United States Army was in keeping with all that he had done before. He put into the field four and a half millions of fit troops out of a total examined of 7,000,000. This was physically and mentally the finest army the world has ever known, and the heroic feats of American arms on the ensanguined fields of France gave eloquent evidence of the fact. After the close of that great conflict he dreamed of the day when in his own country, at least, health examinations would become general and life lengthened by more than a third of its accustomed span through timely diagnosis and preventive measures. He also dreamed, as he had so often dreamed before, of the time when intensive study and research would lead to the redemption of the entire tropical world from its terrible plagues to man and beast. The Gorgas Memorial Institute is endeavoring to inaugurate and carry on the work involved in these two ideals. Unaided by governmental funds it is already engaged in the suggested work in the United States. Touching the other effort, it is ready to act and only needs the enactment of the pending bill to carry on in that connection. Surely no more worthy measure may claim congressional attention. No better investment can ever be made than is that here proposed; and the value of this enterprise from the standpoint of strengthening the bonds of friendship and good will between our own country and our sister Republics to the southward will prove incalculable.

I am very grateful that as a Member of this House I have been in position to introduce this measure and press for its enactment.

I know of the great service rendered there by General Gorgas, and the work of supreme importance that he did there. The proposed laboratory and its operation will constitute a fitting and vital memorial of his important work in Panama, in the heart of his activities there, and it is suggested, and the terms are so carried in the bill, that this institution shall be named the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory. [Applause.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, this bill (H. R. 8128) to authorize a permanent annual appropriation of $50,000 for the maintenance and operation of the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory is one of vast importance to the American people, because it honors and memorializes a man who ranks high in the medical profession not only in the science of medicine itself but in the study and equipment for that more recent adaptation of preventive medicine and sanitation.

Gen. William Crawford Gorgas was a product of the southland. He first saw the light of day in Mobile, Ala., on October

3, 1854, the son of Gen. Josiah Gorgas, chief of ordnance of the Southern Confederacy, and his mother, Amelia Gayle, daughter of Governor Gayle of Alabama. The life of General Gorgas seems a romance in the history of medical men of our country and as interesting as that of the celebrated miracle men of past ages.

He was graduated from the University of the South, took his M. D. from Bellevue Hospital Medical College in 1879, and entered the Medical Department of the United States Army in 1880 as first lieutenant. When yellow fever broke out at Fort Brown, near Brownsville, Tex., he was sent to assist in the medical care of the civilian population. It was at this time and place he first met Miss Marie Cook Doughty, who, being seriously ill of yellow fever, was attended by Doctor Gorgas; he himself contracted the disease. The romance not only secured him Miss Doughty as a devoted wife throughout his lifetime, but, having contracted yellow fever, he became immune to that disease and was better able to combat it for others.

As has been well said, to write of Gorgas is to write of the infinite. The subject is fascinating in that the man himself was a genius of such rare ability and achievements that his life is comparable with such others as Lord Lister and Edison. He wrought miracles and made countries hitherto uninhabitable possible of habitation, bringing in its wake happiness, progress, and prosperity. Some one has said that there were three outstanding epochs in the life of General Gorgas: First, he was early to recognize the achievements of the Walter Reed Board and its discovery of the method of transmission of yellow fever. With this belief in mind, he approached General Wood, in command at Habana, Cuba, and stated that if the Walter Reed theory was correct in reference to yellow fever, which he believed it to be, and if he would give him the authority, he, General Gorgas, would eliminate yellow fever from Habana. This authority General Wood gave him in February, 1901, and in that same year General Gorgas cleaned up Habana and with it yellow fever, which had existed for the past 150 years or more.

Second. The next time the magical wand of this great man was called into service was when we began to build the Panama Canal, and the same methods were employed in Panama by which he cleaned up Habana, so that yellow fever was eliminated from a territory which it had menaced for more than 400 years, and in a remarkably short period of time, extending from March, 1905, to November of that year. Thus the cause which had prevented the French under De Lesseps completing the work, and which had killed thousands of men, was removed.

His fame had spread far and wide, and he became known as a great sanitarian, was a pronounced leader in that work, and so acknowledged by the sanitary specialists of the world. It was therefore natural that at the beginning of the World War his outstanding accomplishments, so well known, should bring to him adequate recognition, which brought him to his third epoch through his appointment as Surgeon General of the United States Army. At this time he was 60 years of age. He had a medical corps of some 32,000 men, carefully selected from all over the country. His enlisted personnel of nurses, men, aides, and so forth, numbered nearly 200,000, and was said by Doctor Martin to be one of the greatest corps under one major general the world has ever known.

General Gorgas introduced into the Army the examination of every man by a board of experts, consisting of dentist, oculist, aurist, pathologist, surgeon, and a medical man. This was carried out, and from an examination of 7,000,000 men, 4,500,000 were found to be fit and acceptable. It was from this expert examination that we ascertained for the first time the number of men unfit for military service. From that day until this, the Government has appropriated funds, and experienced men have been studying and endeavoring to restore to health the vast number of those unfit for service and laying down rules and regulations for future generations, thereby benefiting humanity at large.

General Gorgas was known by a great many men, both of the medical and civilian population of our country. He was a man of kindly nature, modest habits, and a willingness to help. It was my pleasure to meet him on a number of occasions, but the one which made the deepest impression upon my mind was on the occasion when our then mayor, Mr. James H. Preston, invited him to Baltimore to consult as to the best method of eliminating mosquitoes. I rode with him from the City Hall to Fort McHenry, where he visited and enthused over the old fort where Francis Scott Key wrote The Star-Spangled Banner. I do not know what his advice was as to the elimination of mosquitoes, but I do know that Baltimore has very few mosquitoes to-day and enjoys the reputation of being one of the most healthful metropolitan centers in the country.

I was glad to hear our good friend and colleague, HENRY ST. GEORGE TUCKER, tell of his association with him in childhood, and of his fascination for him in those early days. We are told by Mr. Wellcome, of England, a man who has given perhaps as much for preventive medicine and sanitation in Africa and other places as any other man now living. He was good enough to appear before our committee, and stated that King George had long been familiar with the wonderful work of General Gorgas and requested through the British Army Medical Service a desire to receive General Gorgas at Buckingham Palace, and upon being informed that General Gorgas was seriously ill in a hospital the King remarked, "If General Gorgas is too ill to see me, I shall go to the hospital to see him," which he did, and there conferred upon him the highest honor possible for the King to bestow upon anyone not a British subject. In speaking of the great tribute of honor and respect, English periodicals said:

> It seems good that death should find him here, for so there came our opportunity to do a great man honor. He passed through the great door through which the sun streams into the nave of St. Paul's, and there he lay with Nelson and Wellington and all that mighty host who came this way and passed into the universe.
> They will take him to his own land, but in truth he belongs to us all, He was one of life's great helpers, for he cleaned up foul places and made them sweet, and now, as they said of Lincoln, "he belongs to the ages."

General Gorgas when taken ill in London was on his way, at the request of the British Government, to Africa to study the yellow-fever problem in British territory. This, however, was the last mission undertaken by General Gorgas, for here in London he succumbed to illness and passed away amidst the profound sorrow of the English people and the world at large. He was given a state funeral of full military honors, and was accorded a temporary resting place in St. Paul's Cathedral, where rest many of England's greatest naval and military heroes. "Representatives of the King and the Royal family," says Mr. Wellcome, "British cabinet members, ministers, leading statesmen, officers of the British Army and Navy, diplomatic corps of the great powers at the Court of St. James paid their respects, while hundreds of thousands thronged the streets to attest their appreciation of the life of this great man."

He has laid down his tasks and passed to the Great Beyond. It is now for us to perpetuate his ideas, his works, and his discoveries. This institution established in Panama, while honoring him, will be of inestimable benefit to the world in the study of bacteriology, preventive medicine, and sanitation in those countries to the south of us. It will enable us to free people from malignant diseases and make lands habitable which are now pestilential. It will promote greater unity between our country and Central and South American countries. It will do a vast work in the perpetuation of peace by the establishment of those things which make life worth living.

The name of Gorgas will ever survive among the nations of the earth. His life's work will be extended and enlarged by generations yet unborn. Humanity will call him blessed and the peoples of the world benefited by his passing this way.

I sincerely trust, Mr. Speaker, we will approve this bill unanimously, that the good work may be continued through this laboratory for which we propose to provide.

Mr. O'CONNELL. And is it not true that it has also the unanimous support of the people of Panama, as well?

Mr. LINTHICUM. It certainly has the unanimous support of the Government of Panama. [Applause.]

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes that the United States cooperate with the Republic of Panama in the maintenance and operation of a thoroughly equipped laboratory to be built by Panama upon a site donated by Panama.

The laboratory will conduct intensive research work and will specialize in the study and control of tropical diseases.

Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe that if Congress appropriates the money asked for it will be fully justified from an economic standpoint, and also as a worthy tribute to a distinguished American physician whose accomplishments in sanitation, preventative medicine, and the treatment of tropical diseases have never been surpassed, if ever equaled, in the history of the world.

We have erected costly and imposing monuments to our military heroes in the past, and will undoubtedly do so in the future, to perpetuate their memory and valor on the battle field. Is it not even more fitting to erect a monument to this great physician who exhibited equal fortitude and courage in his victorious campaign in the Tropics against deadly disease and pestilence, and whose great discoveries saved the lives of millions of his fellow men?

THE KIND OF MONUMENT HE WOULD CHOOSE

General Gorgas was a modest man. In his wonderful work he craved no publicity. "He let not his left hand know what his right hand doeth," but gave his great discoveries to mankind in the same spirit as the Divine Healer of old.

If General Gorgas could select a monument, he would choose one such as this bill contemplates, a laboratory which would be an instrument for carrying on and perpetuating his splendid work for his fellow men, a laboratory which would unlock the secrets and find the God-given cures for the dread diseases which devastate peoples and prevent the settlement of countries.

A GREAT PHYSICIAN AND EXECUTIVE

General Gorgas was not only a great physician, but a great executive. An able organizer as well as a wonderful sanitarian. He accomplished almost the impossible.

In less than eight months he eliminated yellow fever from Habana, where it had existed and taken its dreadful toll of thousands annually for over 150 years.

In less than two years he transformed the Isthmus of Panama from one of the most unhealthy places in the world, where tropical diseases had overcome all efforts to connect the two oceans, to one of the healthiest places on earth. Without the work of General Gorgas the building of the Panama Canal would have been impossible.

From a few small hospitals in the beginning of the World War he developed the great base and cantonment hospitals required for the care of an army of 4,000,000 men on two continents and provided the equipment necessary for them. In two years he organized the greatest medical corps in point of efficiency and size to care for 4,000,000 soldiers, the largest army in our history.

A MEMORIAL WHICH WILL BIND BY THE TIES OF FRIENDSHIP THE PEOPLES OF THE WESTERN HEMISPHERE

A research laboratory such as this bill contemplates, equipped with all the facilities known to science for the study of disease, especially diseases of the Tropics, located on the Isthmus of Panama, will be of inestimable value to the whole world. The most learned scientists of the 21 American Republics will meet in this great research laboratory on common ground and working together for the same noble purpose under the inspiration of the beloved name of Gorgas, will unite the peoples of the Western Hemisphere in a bond of friendship which will grow stronger as the years go by.

Generations may come and go and centuries pass; monuments of marble may crumble, or the achievements of the men they commemorate be forgotten, but the great men of science moved by the same lofty purpose and noble impulse which inspired General Gorgas will be working in the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory for the alleviation of the suffering of mankind. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, it is with much pride and deep gratification that I give my support and my vote to the pending bill which would make possible the erection by the Republic of Panama of a great laboratory in that country, at a cost of half a million dollars, to search out the cause and cure of tropical diseases to be maintained in part by an annual appropriation of $50,000 by the Government of the United States, and to be named the Gorgas memorial laboratory in commemoration of the life and work of that great physician and great American, William Crawford Gorgas. It was in the little town of Toulminville, a suburb of the historic old city of Mobile in Alabama, the State which I have the honor to represent, that on the 3d day of October, 1854, William Crawford Gorgas was born, the son of Gen. Josiah Gorgas and Amelia Gayle Gorgas. Gen. Josiah Gorgas served as Chief of Ordnance of the Confederate Army during the War Between the States, was for 10 years president of the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn., and later president of the University of Alabama at Tuscaloosa, Ala. Mrs. Amelia Gayle Gorgas was the daughter of Hon. John Gayle, who was Governor of Alabama and afterwards a Member of Congress and a United States district judge. When I entered the University of Alabama as a student in the fall of 1911, I soon came to know Mrs. Amelia Gayle Gorgas. For many years she had been the librarian of the University Library. Her lovely old home in the very heart of the campus was the rendezvous for the students who came and went with the passing years. She was their kindest critic, their wisest counselor, their best friend, known by all and loved and revered by all, the mother of the university campus. The magnificent new University Library is the Amelia Gayle Gorgas Library, named as a tribute of love and of appreciation of the life, the service, and the faith of this noble woman. During my university days Miss Mamie Gorgas, General Gorgas's sister, was the assistant librarian at the University Library. Her kindly manner, her gentle spirit endeared her to all. Many were the proud and happy moments we spent together in talking of her great brother and his great work. Upon our entrance into the World War, when I was examined and rejected for admission to the Army on account of underweight, my underweight was waived through the good offices of General Gorgas, then the Surgeon General of the Army, and my heart's desire found realization by my admission to the Army.

Profane history tells us of Alexanders and Cæsars and Napoleons who came with the blare of trumpets, the clash of arms, and the thunder of armies, establishing dynasties and empires which endured for a time and then swayed, tottered, crumbled, and fell forever. Sacred history tells us of the silent Nazarene, who came without the pomp and pageantry and circumstance of temporal monarchs and through the silent influences emanating from His own perfect life and character established a kingdom as wide as the universe and as lasting as eternity. The future historian will tell of William Crawford Gorgas, patient and devoted man, who walked in the footsteps of the Great Physician and whose life of humility, service, and sacrifice brought more blessings to mankind than all the kings and conquerors and empire builders.

In the hidden wastes of the Tropics there lurked an enemy, silent but inexorable, that made them the white man's sepulcher. From its home in the Tropics this same yellow fever often journeyed forth into the cooler climate of the Temperate Zone, leaving in its wake a trail of woe, of terror, and of death. In 1793 the dread disease ventured even as far north as Philadelphia and with terrible suddenness fell upon that city. There was scarcely a home that was not afflicted; the rich quarters as well as the poor abounded in the disease; the clean as well as the filthy, and all ages and colors rendered their tribute. In a few brief weeks one-tenth of the population was dead. In that most interesting and enlightening volume, "William Crawford Gorgas, His Life and Work," the colabor of his widow, Mrs. Marie D. Gorgas, and Hon. Burton J. Hendrick, we find this interesting account of conditions in Philadelphia during the epidemic:

> In a few days the city was in a state of the wildest disorder. As usual, all fled who could get away; for weeks there was a continuous procession of carts, coaches, wagons, and "chairs" transporting families and furniture in all directions; in the towns to which the refugees went they were most unwelcome visitors, and in many cases they were turned back at the gate. All phases of business and community life came suddenly to an end; banks closed; factories shut their doors, leaving thousands without employment; newspapers stopped publication, and churches ceased their functions for want of congregations. Sick persons sometimes fell dead in the streets, their corpses lying for weeks without burial * * *.
> The most distinguished citizens were buried unceremoniously with no human attendant except the negro who drove the death cart. The appearance of anything that resembled such a funeral was a signal for the population to flee in all directions. In many cases husbands abandoned their sick wives and wives their sick husbands; instances were not unknown in which parents fled from their children and children left their parents to die in neglect. The afflicted were sometimes left to perish miserably without medicine or a drink of water, and even women in childbirth frequently received no care. One writer records as an evidence of the state of the popular frenzy that had ruled all summer the delight with which the populace looked upon a conventional funeral proceeding in leisure and dignity through the streets. It had for so many months been the custom to hustle off unattended corpses at midnight or to leave them unburied in vacant lots that even this somber manifestation of normal existence was a cause for general rejoicing.

The famous Dr. Benjamin Rush and Matthew Carey have left accounts of the epidemic which have a strong resemblance to Defoe's description of the great London plague of 1664–65. There was not a year in the nineteenth century during which this unknown and impalpable enemy did not claim its victims in many American cities. Particularly did the cities on the Gulf coast, such as New Orleans, Mobile, and Pensacola many times satiate the voracious appetite of this unholy plague.

In 1880 yellow fever in its most violent form was exacting heavy toll of the people of Brownsville, Tex. Gorgas, then a young lieutenant in the Medical Corps of the Army, volunteered to go to the stricken area and was sent to Fort Brown, at Brownsville, to assist in the medical care of the civilian population. Here fate seemed to ordain him as her own and to prepare and equip him for the high destiny which was his. Here he met for the first time Miss Marie Cook Doughty, whom he attended while seriously ill with yellow fever and whom he later married. As his wife, his silent partner through the years, her unfaltering faith and appreciation encouraged him to do and to become, her devoted care and loving hands helped the master work out his noble plan. Here he himself fell a victim to the dread disease and thereby became immune to it for the rest of his life.

In 1898 Gorgas was appointed chief sanitary officer at Havana. In 1900 there came to Havana the immortal four, Walter Reed, James Carroll, Jesse W. Lazear, and Aristides Agramonte, the commission charged by the Government of the United States with solving if possible the baffling and perplexing problem of the cause of yellow fever. This commission headed by Major Reed, himself a Southerner like Gorgas, using the elaborate statistical study of the spread of yellow fever in houses made by that other great Southerner, Dr. Henry R. Carter, of the United States Public Health Service, and the mosquito theory of infection, as advanced by Dr. Carlos J. Finlay, of Havana, while armed with the knowledge brilliantly demonstrated by Sir Ronald Ross that the Anopheles mosquito was the infecting agent in malaria fever, after months of devoted work crowned with wonderful self-sacrifice and marvelous self-abnegation in which the young, the brilliant, the gallant Lazear gave his life, definitely demonstrated that the Stegomyia mosquito was the infecting agent in yellow fever.

If it is the mosquito—

Said Gorgas, when the Reed experiments were under way—

I am going to get rid of the mosquito.

Even Reed himself smiled at the idea.

It can not be done—

He said, and his opinion was the one that generally prevailed in Havana at that time. Most scientists regarded Reed's indictment of the Stegomyia mosquito as merely a brilliant academic performance. They could not see how it greatly lessened the general yellow fever peril. In fact, Reed seemed to have reduced the situation to one of utter despair. He had proved that the Stegomyia conveyed the disease; but how could the Stegomyia be controlled except by destroying him—a seemingly impossible task. Mosquitoes existed not by the thousands or millions but by the uncountable billions. Every environ in Havana was full of them. They swarmed in the streets, the alleyways, the byways, the houses, in every conceivable place in the city. Often they settled over the city like a hideous cloud. As has been well said:

The Reed discovery came almost like a sentence of death. Havana always had had yellow fever and now it seemed certain that Havana would always have it. To run around the city attempting to banish the disease by killing these gnats—what occupation could seem more useless and more ludicrous? One might as well attempt to banish the air in which the mosquitoes passed their brief destructive existence. What Reed had apparently accomplished was to add a new horror to daily existence.

In spite of the doubts, the fears of those about him, in the face of the laughter and the jibes of scientists, notwithstanding the oppression of the seemingly hopelessness of the task, the quiet, devoted sanitary officer of the city set himself with indomitable resolution and religious fervor to the destruction of the Stegomyia. He cleaned up the pest holes, the hidden waste, the unclean places, the foul dens of the city, and by the use of kerosene and petroleum rendered uninhabitable to the Stegomyia its breeding places. With his sanitary methods he swept through the city, cleaning and purifying it like the River Alpheus through the Augean stables. He drove the Stegomyia before him like the withered leaves before the autumn gale. In the brief time of seven and one-half months Gorgas delivered the city from the Stegomyia and lifted the pall that had hung over it for 140 years. For all these years there had not been a day when yellow fever had not prevailed in Havana. To-day Havana is healthier than the average American city. It stands the proud capital of a treasure-laden isle, a great city freed from dread disease, one of the most beautiful of all the world, whose charm is the delight of all privileged to enjoy the hospitality of its people, with argosies of commerce bound for its harbor, and an admiring America rejoicing in its happiness and its glory—a living and eternal monument to the wonder and the genius and the faith of William Crawford Gorgas. What had been done in Cuba could be done in other disease-ridden countries; what had been accomplished with yellow fever could be accomplished with other similar plagues. The Tropics with their hidden treasures, believed through the centuries incapable of habitation by the white man, were now shown to be habitable to him. The redemption of these mighty territories lay in the offing, and it was Gorgas who had proven that that redemption was possible. He now dedicated himself to the great task of the redemption.

In 1904 the United States Government undertook the stupendous task of the construction of the Panama Canal. A few years before the French Panama Canal Co. had attempted the task only to find its money, its efforts, its hopes, lost in utter failure. The French company had the skill, it had the ambition, it had the money, it had everything but one thing, and that was the genius of a Gorgas. In 1885 in writing about Panama, the historian, James Anthony Froude, said:

There is not perhaps now concentrated in any single spot so much swindling and villainy, so much foul disease, such a hideous dungheap of physical and moral abomination. The Isthmus is a damp, tropical jungle, intensely hot, swarming with mosquitoes, snakes, alligators, scorpions, and centipedes; the home even as nature made it of yellow fever, typhus, and dysentery.

At one time the French company brought to Panama 500 young engineers, put them to work in the swamps, and not one of them lived to draw his first month's pay. The pestilence of the swamp and the disease of the jungle had written the final chapter of the French company in terms of dismay, disaster, and death. It was within the shadow of these failures, haunted by their ruins, beset by the same implacable enemies that had brought them about that Gorgas found himself in 1904 as the chief sanitary officer of the Canal Zone charged with the gigantic task of conquering these enemies and making possible the construction of the canal. Within less than two years after he obtained the necessary help and supplies he exterminated the mosquitoes, eradicated yellow fever and malaria, cleaned up the Canal Zone, and made possible the building of the canal. Some Vergil will weave the incomparable story of Gorgas's triumph into a new epic—an epic of the jungle, of the fury and fatal power of its denizens—an epic that will tell of the tact, the patience, the perseverance, the courage of its hero handicapped by his own Government, opposed and thwarted at times by the officials of that Government whose very lives lay in his hands and whose help should have been his staunchest and best support, and in this epic the reader will find—the modern realization of the legend of Heracles, the cleanser of foul places and the enemy of evil beasts.

Of Gorgas's wonderful achievement in Panama, Sir William Osler, at the time Regius Professor of Medicine at Oxford, said in his famous Edinburgh sermon on "Man's redemption of man":

There is nothing to match it in the history of human achievement. Before our eyes to-day the most striking experiment ever made in sanitation is in progress. The digging of the Panama Canal was acknowledged to be a question of the health of the workers. For four centuries the Isthmus had been the white man's grave. * * * Here is a chapter in human achievement for which it would be hard to find a parallel.

In 1907, in recognition of the great work he was doing, Gorgas was made a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, and in 1915 Gorgas and his associates on the commission were given a vote of thanks by Congress for the distinguished service rendered in the construction of the Panama Canal. This is one of the few instances in history since Hippocrates was awarded a civic crown by the citizens of Athens for averting a pestilence from that city that sanitary achievement has been recognized by the State.

When the United States entered the World War Gorgas was the Surgeon General of the United States Army. With that vision and prescience that had signalized his every endeavor he had been preparing for months for the inevitable conflict. In every previous war in which our country had engaged it was the ravages of disease rather than the bullets of the enemy that had stricken down brave men and swelled the casualty lists. Under the guiding hand and the devoted leadership of General Gorgas as Surgeon General we mobilized, trained, transported 3,000 miles to Europe, and put into action the greatest army we ever had with a smaller death rate than had hitherto been known in the annals of military medicine. When the American Army commenced its great advance in July, 1918, at Chateau-Thierry it was able to continue the terrific drive without cessation until it crowned the American standards with victory on the heights of Sedan the following November because Gorgas had filled that army with the strongest and the best of America's manhood and had then safeguarded and protected them from the ravages of disease. As William Crawford Gorgas had made possible the building of the Panama Canal, he likewise made possible the brilliant triumph of American arms on the Western Front. With Wilson and Pershing, Gorgas must take his place as one of the great leaders of that great conflict.

During the war when the influenza epidemic raged at Camp Wheeler near Macon, Ga., he and a dozen of the leading physicians of the country went there where many of the flower of Alabama's manhood were stationed with the Federalized Alabama National Guard Brigade under the command of Gen. R. E. Steiner. When conditions had improved the officers of the brigade gave General Gorgas a dinner. In a happy speech in response to the compliments paid him, his love for his native State of Alabama, his love for his country, and his love for the great profession he had entered many years before as a young lieutenant, found expression when he said:

I have had every honor my profession could give me. My Government has given me every honor that it could bestow upon any physician in its medical service. Yet, I am not satisfied. I still have one ambition to realize before I can count my life happy and rounded out. I wish it were possible for the President to reduce my rank as major general to that of brigadier general and put me in command in active service in France of this brigade of splendid Alabamians whom I have seen here.

From the time of his great success in Havana and particularly after his world-famous achievement in Panama, General Gorgas was appealed to by nearly every disease-ridden country of the world to come and liberate it as he had liberated Havana and the Isthmus of Panama. From time to time when he could get away from his duties for a short period he obtained temporary leave of absence and went to Ecuador, Peru, Colombia, Brazil, Venezuela, South Africa, and other countries, ever fighting disease, ever waging war on pestilence, ever laboring, ever serving suffering humanity. After his retirement from the Army at the age of 64, he was selected as chief of the Rockefeller Yellow Fever Foundation and in that position at the time of his death, he was working out the plans and laying the strategems to rid the entire world of the dread disease. In General Gorgas's life were mirrored the virtues of his great profession, the medical profession that asks not whence its patient comes nor whither he goes; that knows not race nor class nor creed; that makes no demands and needs no assurances; that lets no call go unanswered from its door; that ministers to the sick, the diseased, and the suffering; that blesses them, eases their pain, soothes their sorrows, dries up their tears and breathes hope into their despairing hearts.

General Gorgas was the whole world's physician. The debt the world owes him can never be computed. Diseases which he exterminated and which at the time were indigenous to a particular country or to the Tropics to-day with modern transportation, with modern lines of communication, with all the world neighbors, might well travel the globe and pile the corpses of their victims even to the ends of the earth. "The Saviour of the Tropics" was to a degree beyond human ken the protector of the world.

On May 8, 1920, in company with his devoted wife and his official staff, General Gorgas set sail for London whence, at the invitation of the British Government, he was going to investigate yellow-fever conditions on the west coast of Africa. He fell ill in London on May 30. Previously King George had made an appointment to see him at a subsequent date, and when the King learned of his illness he said, "If General Gorgas is too ill to come to the palace to see me, I shall go to the hospital to see him." The Sovereign of the British Empire visited the hospital and presented to the general the insignia of knight commander of the Most Distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George. This was but one of the many honors and decorations that came to General Gorgas from the rulers and Governments of many of the great nations of the earth in recognition of his services to the cause of humanity.

On the 4th day of July, 1920, in London, William Crawford Gorgas, tired and worn, peacefully and quietly slipped out of the company of living men and went home to the Great Physician. At the command of the King and by order of the British Government, a state funeral with full military honors was accorded him in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, the resting place of England's greatest naval and military heroes. It was one of the greatest and most impressive funerals in England in modern times. Representatives of the King and the royal family, the British cabinet ministers, leading statesmen, high officials and officers of the British Army and Navy, the diplomatic corps representing the great nations at the Court of St. James and representatives of the leading medical and other scientific institutions attended and paid homage to the great man. Hundreds of thousands of people thronged the streets and with bared heads reverently attested their appreciation of him who had contributed so much to suffering humanity.

The great papers and periodicals of the British Empire voiced their tribute of appreciation and beautifully and eloquently told of General Gorgas and his work. As one said in describing his funeral:

And the other day he rode up Ludgate Hill, sleeping his last sleep on earth, wrapped in the Stars and Stripes. There were thousands of men and women and children standing still, there were hundreds of men in khaki passing by, there were ambassadors and other great people and the lonely woman who was on her way with her hero to conquer disease when death took him from her. And there was the riderless horse. All these came up Ludgate Hill, and as the sun poured down on this ancient way, our hearts and ears throbbing with the solemn music of the Dead March, we knew that we were looking on the passing of a man whose name would shine for ages in the history of our race. It seemed good that death should find him here, for so there came our opportunity to do a great man honor. He passed through the great door through which the sun streams into the nave of St. Paul's, and there he lay with Nelson and Wellington and all that mighty host who came this way and passed into the universe. They will take him to his own land, but in truth he belongs to us all. He was one of life's great helpers, for he cleaned up foul places and made them sweet, and now he belongs to the ages.

General Gorgas's body was brought back to his own country, where he was given its greatest honors and where they laid him to rest in Arlington, the Valhalla of America's heroic dead. There he sleeps on the slopes of the historic Potomac, beneath the folds of Old Glory, within the shadow of the Capitol of the Nation he loved and served so well. France has her Louis Pasteur, England has her Joseph Lister, and America has her William Crawford Gorgas. Patient and devoted man, servant of all peoples and of the most-high God, let his people, the American people, through their Government build a fitting memorial to him, a memorial that will carry on his great and beneficent work. "He served the human lot to raise and won a name that endless ages praise."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, may I indicate my support of this bill from a standpoint other than that which has already been so ably presented by those who are members of the committee and who have reported the measure. A little over one month ago the Pan American Congress held a session in Habana. At that congress were representatives of the United States. The chief object of the congress is to promote cooperation and good will. It is the policy of the United States to try in every way to encourage the friendliest relations among the nations of the Americas.

About 10 days ago in the hearings before the naval appropriation subcommittee, in connection with inquiries touching the activities of the marines in Nicaragua, it appeared that the death rate among the children of Nicaragua is such that during the first year about three of the babies perish out of every five that are born. This means poor health conditions in unusual degree. I can think of nothing more calculated to draw together the peoples of the Americas, and particularly the peoples of the tropical countries, than a joint program in which the United States may have a part looking to the relief of humanity from deadly ills, looking to the removal of distress, looking to the alleviation of suffering that occurs by reason of disease. This bill proposes such a program. It would not be at all surprising to me if the small investment, relatively speaking, that we are asked to make in this work would, after all, come to be the finest sort of contribution which this Nation could make in the working out of a program for peace and accord among the people of North and South America. I am for the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the entire medical profession in the great State of North Carolina are very much interested in the passage of this bill. In fact, I have been petitioned and I am sure other members of our State delegation have been petitioned to support it. I think it is a very fitting memorial, and I think it is appropriate that it should have been introduced by that distinguished Representative who was at one time the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone, the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THATCHER].

I take great pleasure in supporting the bill. I think it is very magnanimous on the part of the South and Central American countries, and particularly the Republic of Panama, to offer to cooperate. I understand the Republic of Panama is to contribute the greatest part of this money. I think the Republic of Panama is to contribute $500,000 or more for the construction of the proposed laboratory building. I think the passage of this bill is the best thing we can do from the national standpoint, from sanitary and health needs, and from the standpoint of admiration for and as a memorial to one of the world's greatest physicians. [Applause.]

Mr. CRISP rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the greatest thing in life is to render unselfish service, and no man has rendered greater service to humanity than General Gorgas. Therefore I think it is highly commendable for the North and South and Central American Republics to do him honor, and in doing so to continue his great service in helping humanity. The medical profession in my State are unanimous in favor of the passage of this bill. I can add nothing to what has already been said. I simply asked to be recognized to announce my approval of the measure and to say it will afford me great pleasure to support it. [Applause.]

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I rise for just a moment to express the very great pleasure it gives me to be able to vote for this bill.

I did not know "General" Gorgas; I knew "Willie" Gorgas. We were classmates for four years during the Civil War in the city of Richmond, down at Fifth and Carey Streets, being taught by one of the noblest women that ever lived, Mrs. Anne Munford. We were disturbed frequently in our work by the sound of cannon around us. I was at his house frequently as he was at my house. I remember his mother and father. His father was the head of the Confederate Ordnance Department.

I merely rise to say that there never was a boy of my acquaintance that showed in boyhood what was in him as did William C. Gorgas. I remember my dear old teacher telling me—she passed away only a few years ago—that she was very fond of me as a pupil, but she said, "You know, HARRY, that Willie Gorgas was always the favorite of everybody in the school, myself included."

I congratulate the committee on having selected such an appropriate memorial to this great man, which will be indorsed by an admiring and loving people. [Applause.]

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this bill. It was not my purpose to speak upon it until some one raised the question as to the location of the laboratory. I believe that such a laboratory should be placed in the Torrid Zone, because in the Torrid Zone is where diseases take root, grow, and spread.

Last summer I visited what is called in common language "The Snake Farm," at Sao Paulo, a laboratory maintained by the Government of Brazil. They have done such good work that they have reduced the deaths from snake poisoning by nearly 75 per cent. They are creating serums which will prevent many of the diseases and many of the fevers, but they have not yet created a serum to prevent pneumonia. There are kept in the stables of the laboratory for serum purposes about 100 horses. When the poison is extracted from the snakes the poison is inserted into the blood of the horses and the blood is then extracted after 10 days and made into a serum.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PORTER: On page 2, in line 12, after the words "and (3) That," insert the words "in such manner as the President may determine."

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the amendment is to fix more definitely the powers of the President in the appointment of the American representatives on this commission.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PORTER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FRENCH STEAMSHIP "MADELEINE"

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I call up H. R. 9043, a bill to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the Government of France on account of losses sustained by the owners of the French steamship Madeleine as a result of a collision between it and the U. S. S. Kerwood, and I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that H. R. 9043 be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the Government of France a sum equivalent to £3,550 2s. 5d., in settlement of a claim presented by the Government of France on account of damages sustained by the French steamship Madeleine in a collision with the U. S. S. Kerwood, in the harbor of Brest, France, on May 11, 1918, as set forth in the message of the President of December 17, 1927, printed as Senate Document No. 24, Seventieth Congress, first session; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum to carry out the purpose of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. PORTER was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the attached message of the President, and letter of the Secretary of State, which is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State in relation to a claim presented by the Government of France against the Government of the United States on account of the losses sustained by the owner of the French steamship Madeleine as the result of a collision between it and the U. S. S. Kerwood, which at the time of the collision was being operated by the War Department, and I recommend that an appropriation be authorized to effect a settlement of this claim in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of State.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, December 17, 1927.

The PRESIDENT:

I have the honor to bring to your attention the claim presented by the French Embassy at this capital on account of the losses sustained by the owner of the French steamship Madeleine as a result of a collision between it and the U. S. S. Kerwood in the harbor of Brest, France, on May 11, 1918.

The War Department, to which the matter was referred, has submitted the following information in regard to the collision:

"The facts in this case appear to be that on May 11, 1918, about 4 p. m., with weather fine and fresh breeze from the northeast, the U. S. S. Kerwood, then under requisition charter to the United States Shipping Board, manned and operated by the Army Transport Service, while proceeding to anchor came into collision with the French steamer Madeleine, owned by Georges Leridon, of La Rochelle, France, then lying at anchor in a proper place, damaging the Madeleine's stem and hawse pipes. The vessels had arrived at Brest in convoy, the Kerwood following the Madeleine, and upon the breaking up of the convoy the Madeleine had come to anchor and had been anchored about five minutes when the Kerwood collided with her. The Kerwood in proceeding to anchor, passed too close ahead of the Madeleine, and the force of the wind and tide brought her into collision with the other vessel. The Madeleine, when it appeared that the Kerwood would strike that vessel, paid out cable in an attempt to avoid collision. Those in control of the Kerwood were solely at fault for the collision in passing too close to the Madeleine and in misjudging the force of the wind and tide. The record discloses no evidence showing fault on the part of the Madeleine for the collision."

The claim as presented amounted to £4,616 9s. 6d. The War Department recommended the allowance of the sum of £3,550 2s. 5d., and the French Embassy has informed the department that the owner of the Madeleine, in his own name and the name of all the interested parties, has agreed to accept this sum as indemnity for all claims on account of the losses sustained by the vessel.

It seems to be generally recognized in international practice that, notwithstanding the immunities of vessels in the public service from the judicial remedies usually obtaining with respect to other vessels, a Government should make reparation for the damages done the nationals of other countries by vessels in its public service. It may be stated in this relation that this Government, in a number of cases, has collected indemnity from other Governments for damages inflicted by their public vessels and has in turn paid indemnities in similar cases. As it appears that the American vessel, the Kerwood, was solely at fault in the collision between it and the Madeleine and as the amount recommended by the Secretary of War in settlement of the claim appears to be a conservative estimate of the provable damages which this Government should bear, I have the honor to recommend that the Congress be requested to authorize the appropriation of a sum equivalent to £3,550

2s. 5d., in settlement of this claim, as an act of grace and without reference to the question of the legal liability of the United States.

A summary of the essential facts regarding the claim being embodied in this communication, it is deemed unnecessary to accompany it with copies of the correspondence in the case. All, or any part, of that correspondence will, of course, be furnished should you or the Congress so desire.

It should be added that this claim was brought to the attention of the Sixty-ninth Congress in a message from the President, dated April 20, 1926, and printed in House Report No. 992, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, and that by House bill No. 11516, Sixty-ninth Congress, an appropriation of a sum equivalent to £3,550 2s. 5d. in payment of this claim was passed by the House of Representatives on December 20, 1926, and that action thereon was pending in the Senate when it adjourned March 4, 1927.

It will be noted from the inclosed communication from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, to whom the matter was referred, that the proposed action is not inconsistent with the financial program of this Government.

Respectfully submitted.

AMERICAN INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR THE PROTECTION OF CHILDHOOD

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Joint Resolution 230, to provide for the membership of the United States in the American International Institute for the Protection of Childhood, and ask unanimous consent that this resolution may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up House Joint Resolution 230 and asks unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That to enable the United States to become a member of the American International Institute for the Protection of Childhood at Montevideo, Uruguay, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $2,000 per annum for the contribution by the United States toward the support of the institution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. PORTER was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a message of the President, and letter of the Secretary of State, which is as follows:

[S. Doc. No. 184, 69th Cong., 2d sess.]

To the Congress of the United States:

I recommend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the inclosed report from the Secretary of State, with an accompanying paper, to the end that legislation may be enacted authorizing an appropriation of $2,000 to enable acceptance by the United States of membership in a Pan American Institute of Child Welfare at Montevideo, in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of Labor, joined in by the Secretary of State.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 5, 1927.

The PRESIDENT:

The Pan American Child Welfare Congress held in Santiago, Chile, in October, 1924, adopted a proposal to establish at Montevideo an American Institute of Child Welfare in which all the Pan American countries should participate. The resolution was voted for by the American delegates to the congress, but with the reservation that they were not authorized to commit the Government of the United States in any way, and that their approval of the resolution was merely an expression of their personal opinion that the organization of such an institute was very desirable in the promotion of mutual understanding and helpfulness among the American Republics in the important matter of child welfare and the protection of childhood. A translation of this resolution furnished by the American delegates to the congress is herewith inclosed.

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has been informed by the minister of Uruguay that in accordance with this resolution the legislative body of Uruguay has authorized the creation at Montevideo of the American International Office of Protection for Childhood, whose management, the minister states, according to the by-laws approved at the Santiago congress, is intrusted to an international board to consist of a delegate from each adhering country appointed by his government, and that the Government of Uruguay has delegated an honorary commission charged with the duty of installing the said institute pending the appointment by the governments of their respective delegates. Request was made by the minister that the Government of the United States designate its representative and that the undersigned take such measures as might be deemed appropriate for the payment on the part of the United States of the annual quota of $2,000 which each adhering government will be required to pay for the support of the institution.

The matter was referred to the Secretary of Labor for his consideration and an expression of his views. He has replied that the institute should prove of much practical benefit in promoting the raising of the standards of child care and child protection, and that, in his opinion, the matter is sufficiently important to warrant an annual appropriation by Congress of $2,000 as a membership contribution of the United States to the support of the institute, and he recommends that a request be made of Congress for legislation authorizing the appropriation.

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, who is advised by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget that the request is not in conflict with the financial program of the President, joins in the recommendation.

Respectfully submitted.

SECOND PAN AMERICAN CONFERENCE ON HIGHWAYS

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate Joint Resolution 30, to provide for the expenses of participation by the United States in the Second Pan American Conference on Highways at Rio de Janeiro, and ask unanimous consent that this resolution may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up Senate Joint Resolution 30 and asks unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,000 for the expenses of participation by the United States in the Second Pan American Conference on Highways at Rio de Janeiro, including the compensation of employees, transportation, subsistence, or per diem in lieu of subsistence (notwithstanding the provisions of any other act), including expenses of delegates in visiting Colombia and Venezuela in connection with the conference, and such miscellaneous and other expenses as the President shall deem proper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to enable our Government to participate in the approaching conference to be held in Brazil for the purpose of considering the general subject of highway construction as it particularly affects the countries to the south of us.

There is a very small appropriation contemplated and the measure has the indorsement of the President and all of the officials of our Government who have examined it, and it may be expected that this conference, just as the former conference, will accomplish worth-while results.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNELL. I want to direct the attention of the gentleman from Virginia to the fact that according to the report of the committee it also has the approval of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Agriculture, and last but not least, the Director of the Budget.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes; I said that all the officials of the Government who have considered it have given it their approval.

As some gentleman said a moment ago when we were debating the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory bill, there is hardly anything more important than stimulating, as far as we can, friendly relations with the countries to the south of us, and incidental to that, certainly no one can question the importance of doing whatever we can to foster the effort of their people, not by spending our money but by giving them encouragement otherwise toward improving their highway systems.

The idea is that delegates representing us at the conference will not only attend the conference, but will visit some of the South American countries so that they may be acquainted with the conditions that actually exist, and give such advice as we may be capable of with a view to the construction of better highways. And what better highways will mean it is not necessary to undertake to elaborate. The opportunity will be afforded, to an extent which does not exist now, for the free intercourse of our people with the people of the southern nations.

It does not seem to me, in view of the official support of the resolution and the obvious reasons for its passage, there should be any doubt of it receiving favorable consideration by the House.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is a facsimile of a resolution which I introduced in this House, known as House Joint Resolution 108, and which is now on the calendar. It has been recommended by the President and the Secretary of State, and it is in conformity with the financial policy of the administration.

Under this resolution delegates will be sent to the second Pan American Conference on Highways at Rio de Janiero, and the sum of $15,000 is appropriated for the expenses thereof.

I am heartily in favor of the resolution, because it will bring together delegates from all the countries of America to discuss the question of roads. There is no question but that the intermingling of the people of the American countries always brings about a better understanding. The question of good roads is one of universal importance. Good roads and good automobiles constitute one of the greatest modes of transportation; it certainly brings about the intermingling of people and the better knowledge of localities which are visited by means of this mode of travel.

The United States has made wonderful progress in the building of good roads, and it is highly essential that we transmit this knowledge to our fellow Americans in other lands. We can learn much from these Pan American countries, and we have many things to tell them about our method of building roads. I hope one of the things to be discussed will be the construction of a broad highway, extending from Canada through the United States, Central and South America, as a means of transportation by automobile through these countries. Such a highway will be used by people of every land through which it passes. The people will become better acquainted with each other, which not only brings about better feelings and better business conditions but a very great deal of pleasure to the people themselves.

The Roman Empire was consolidated by its splendid road system. The Appian Way has gone down into history as the great highway of the world. Let us cooperate with our Central and South American friends in the building of roads, which will inure to the benefit of each and every country. It will help social conditions, eccentuate trade, and better consolidate us as one people of this hemisphere. I am a great believer in these conferences. I have always been for good roads. I sincerely trust this resolution will pass. [Applause.]

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House resolution was laid on the table.

FOREIGN SERVICE BUILDINGS

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 10166) to amend the Foreign Service buildings act, 1926, and ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up the bill H. R. 10166 and asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the Foreign Service buildings act, 1926, is amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of State is empowered, subject to the direction of the commission hereinafter established, to acquire by purchase or condemnation in the manner hereinafter provided, within the limits of appropriations made pursuant to this act, or by exchange, under such terms and conditions as in the judgment of the commission may best protect the interests of the United States, of any building or grounds of the United States in foreign countries and under the jurisdiction and control of the Secretary of State, sites and buildings in foreign capitals and in other foreign cities, and to alter, repair, and furnish such buildings for the use of the diplomatic and consular establishments of the United States, or for the purpose of consolidating, to the extent deemed advisable by the commission, within one or more buildings, the embassies, legations, consulates, and other agencies of the United States Government there maintained, which buildings shall be appropriately designated by the commission, and the space in which shall be allotted by the Secretary of State under the direction of the commission among the several agencies of the United States Government."

SEC. 2. Section 2 of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subdivision to read as follows:

"(d) The commission may appoint, without regard to the civil service laws or regulations, and fix compensation of, without regard to the classification act of 1923, as amended, such clerical and other assistants at the seat of government as the commission deems necessary. The total amount authorized to be expended under this subdivision shall not exceed $5,000 for any one year."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the erroneous spelling of the word "condemnation" and insert in lieu thereof the word "construction"; page 1, line 9, after the word "exchange," insert the words "in whole or in part."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. It is evident there is not a quorum present.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to the question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, on February 21 I spoke here and criticized the methods employed by the District Court for the District of Maryland in the case of the State of Maryland against Randolph Brewer, a prohibition agent, and I referred to the alleged methods employed by the prohibition administration and also referred to the superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League for the District of Maryland. The superintendent in reply called me a liar. The exact words were as follows:

I do not know Judge Coleman; I have never met him; I hate to use a sharp word, but if Mr. PALMISANO said that, he was guilty of a common, ordinary cheap lie. Of course, Mr. PALMISANO was given the nomination with the idea that John Philip Hill was to beat him. The more he talks the better off our cause will be.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think the gentleman presents a question of privilege. [Laughter.]

Mr. PALMISANO. Then, I find on March 21, one month from the day I criticized the methods employed, a 19-page pamphlet edited by the Maryland Anti-Saloon League attempting to defend Judge Coleman's charge to the jury in the trial of

Brewer and this pamphlet was distributed to the Members of Congress. Mr. Speaker, while the pamphlet is attempting to defend Judge Coleman's action, I think the purpose of it is for the Anti-Saloon League to defend itself because there is nothing in my speech in which I criticize Judge Coleman in his charge to the jury and there is nothing in the pamphlet attempting to defend Judge Coleman on my particular criticism, which was as follows:

I am sorry to see that they have been able to use Judge Coleman in this matter, a man who has commanded the respect of the members of the bar and the public, which respect I fear he has lost when he permitted the Anti-Saloon League to have him put the gag on the newspapers.

Now, if the Members of Congress who have received this pamphlet will read it they will see that there is nothing in it referring to this criticism, so the only purpose of the pamphlet is to defend itself so that it will continue its influence with Col. Amos W. W. Woodcock, the district attorney, in that part of the criticism in which I stated that Judge Coleman, I fear, has lost the respect of the members of the bar and the public when he permitted the Anti-Saloon League to have him put the gag on the newspapers. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I do not mean to say that the Anti-Saloon League directly approached the judge on this question, but it did in an indirect way through the district attorney. Now, let me ask you gentlemen who are members of the bar, a number of whom have been judges on the bench, where have you seen a judge two weeks prior to the trial summons the newspaper men privately and instruct them how and in what manner a case should be reported; and how could the judge be familiar with the testimony that was to be produced in the case unless he was so informed by the district attorney, Col. Amos W. W. Woodcock, for the district of Maryland? A man who holds his appointment by virtue of the recommendation of Mr. Marion Humphrey, of Wicomico County, who is one of the Republican dry leaders of the Eastern Shore, and reenforced by Mr. William P. Jackson, the national Republican committeeman of the Eastern Shore, who is the real dry leader in the Republican Party in Maryland, both of whom indorsed Col. Amos W. W. Woodcock for the position which his honor Judge Coleman now holds, and their indorsement was reenforced by the superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League.

Mr. Speaker, I can not understand, if what I have said on the floor of this House in criticizing the methods employed in this particular case was anything but proper, why the members of the Baltimore bar—Republicans as well as Democrats—have not seen fit to criticize my attack and why a man whom the people of Ohio have seen fit to eliminate by so-called advancement in exporting him into another State—unfortunately the State of Maryland—and who knows nothing except the enforcement of the Volstead Act and condemning everyone who has an honest opinion different from his own should criticize me. And, of course, Mr. Speaker, you will understand his opinion is not an honest one, because he is being paid to take the stand that he is taking, and in that way he earns his living, and if he should ever lose his position he may be in the same position as that of another gentleman, whom I remember, before prohibition days, was a representative of the Anti-Saloon League before the liquor license board of Baltimore city, and when he lost his position this man, before the same body, represented the worse type of saloon keepers of those days. So you can readily see, Mr. Speaker, that a man of the type of the superintendent, same as his predecessor, who also was imported from Ohio into Maryland and then advanced to the great State of New York, and the great State of New York advanced him to Sing Sing, from which place he was able to observe the world. So I feel that the gentleman who is now heading the Anti-Saloon League will eventually be advanced, because we in Maryland have discovered him, know him well, and to-day in Maryland we have two wet Democrats in the upper House of Congress and four Democrats in this House who are opposed to his methods. You will see that it will be time to advance him to another State, and from there he may succeed to the honor of his predecessor.

Mr. Speaker, the only thing I find in the way of criticism is from the Baltimore Evening Sun in its editorial on February 22, headed "Unwarranted violence." In referring to my speech it says that—one phase of the attack had to do with the suggestions made by the judge to the press as to its attitude in the Gundlach case and similar criminal proceedings in his court.

The Evening Sun was represented at this conference. The suggestions made by Judge Coleman were in some respects more stringent than those usually brought forward, especially with respect to the photographing of prisoners and witnesses.

Why was my criticism unwarranted? The paper itself admitted that the suggestions were more stringent than those usually brought forward in cases of this kind, and why had the suggestions been made two weeks before the trial? Why not in open court and before the public?

It is amusing, Mr. Speaker, that in the 19-page pamphlet in which the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland attempted to defend Judge Coleman, they did not attempt to defend the United States district attorney. Here is a man defended by the taxpayers of the country, a man who killed an old farmer 73 years of age, because the only thing that the agent could do was to kill this farmer or he would have killed the agent or Agent Fisher. In other words, the district attorney defended this man in self-defense, and being a representative of the people he had no right to defend this man unless it was really a self-defense plea, and if a self-defense plea was proper, why did he have the judge to instruct the newspaper men how to report this case, because certainly the judge could not have been familiar with the evidence until it was presented to him in open court, unless it was brought to the judge's attention by the district attorney. And after he succeeded in acquitting this man, why should he after the acquittal write a letter to the prohibition administrator advising him to summon his agents together and caution them regarding the use of their firearms. These are the words that were used by the district attorney:

Their job is an unpopular one and they can not be too careful. There are few cases where shooting is necessary and in view of the hostility of their work they should be watched.

You will see, Mr. Speaker, that my criticism, while it affected Judge Coleman was not so much directed against the judge, but more so directed against the district attorney, who has succeeded in having the judge to further a proposition more or less recommended by the Anti-Saloon League because it was he who said to the world this man was right and after an acquittal he then said indirectly that there was something shady with the Gundlach murder, and therefore Mr. Herbert should so instruct his agents.

Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I ask you to read carefully the words used by the superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League in attempting to defend Judge Coleman, as I said, who needs no defense from this importer from Ohio, and the defense is more or less a defense of itself. In an unwarranted attack upon the poor, unfortunate farmer, if anything helps to breed bolshevism, in my mind, this does. If this poor man had a son capable of defending the father, I say he had nothing else to do but give him the same fate that his father received.

On page 15 of the pamphlet these are the headlines:

Prohibition agent fully exonerated; Gundlach shown to be an outlaw; widow's story discredited; trickery of prosecution.

In attempting to justify the charge he was not satisfied that the poor widow had lost her mate by the shots of this agent, evidence tending to show that he had been interested in stills before the appointment as agent and has received bribes since the appointment and was still interested in stills, but it goes a little farther and tells you that he was a criminal, notwithstanding the fact that there was no evidence showing that this old farmer had been convicted of any crimes except that there had been a warrant for him for some violation of the liquor law. Let us take for granted that the man was a criminal or he had been convicted of some minor offense, why should this great man from Ohio, who goes from church to church pleading for a good cause—of course, only a blind in order that he may raise sufficient money for his salary—humiliate this poor widow by circulating this pamphlet in the hands of the men who represent this great country and who come from all parts of the country. Ah, Mr. Speaker, of course I feel that this poor old widow is perhaps unable to do the thing that happened in Columbiana, Ala., the other day, where a similar trial had taken place against an officer charged with the killing of a young lady. The officer was acquitted, and the mother and aunt felt that the verdict was a miscarriage of justice and attacked the officer in court—of course, I do not approve of the procedure that took place in Alabama—but I say that if this poor woman had the strength and the courage to do what the mother and aunt of this girl did in Alabama, I feel that the people of this country would glory in her spunk in having disposed of a man who was not satisfied with her loss, but who continued to humiliate her by having a pamphlet of this kind spread in all corners of this country by placing them in the hands of the Representatives of Congress.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Was this pamphlet spread by the Anti-Saloon League?

Mr. PALMISANO. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Perhaps the spreading of the pamphlet was the result of the receipt of the $500,000 donation. Perhaps a part of this money was used for the pamphlet.

Mr. PALMISANO. In reply I want to state to the gentleman that this man goes from church to church collecting sufficient money to pay salaries. For that reason there is no use of asking him any questions where the money comes from. They do not care where the money comes from, if they only get it.

Mr. SCHAFER. Has the gentleman endeavored to find out whether the Anti-Saloon League has offered to return the $500,000 contributed by Mr. Kresge?

Mr. PALMISANO. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. No. I refuse to yield for the very reason that the gentleman did not yield to me the other day.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry.

Mr. PALMISANO. So am I sorry, too. I like to extend courtesy to all Members of the House, but when a Member does not see fit to recognize me when I ask him to yield I shall refuse to yield to him likewise. It may be that I will recognize him later. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, the retort of the superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, in which he called me a liar, was in reply to remarks that I made to him on February 21, which are recorded in the RECORD on page 3397 and are as follows:

> The superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, I have been informed, in cases of this kind assists the district attorney in selecting the jurors in private.

You will note that I said that I was informed that he assisted the district attorney and not the judge.

Why does the superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League state that "he does not know Judge Coleman; has never met him."

Where in my speech of February 21 is there any statement from which he may infer that he influenced Judge Coleman in selecting the jury? As to the charge that I was guilty of a common, ordinary, cheap lie, I do not feel that it is necessary for me to answer except to say that I have lived in Baltimore for 41 years within an area of five city blocks and started to work when 11 years of age at a salary of 33 cents per day, and the people of my district have seen fit to honor me every time that I had occasion to go before them, five times within the Democratic primaries and four times in the general election, making a total of nine times. I think that in itself is a sufficient answer.

Now, there is only one thing that could perhaps settle this question. Let the Anti-Saloon League, which has great influence in this body, recommend to the Committee on Rules to report my resolution No. 99, which has for its purpose—> to investigate the methods employed by the prohibition administrator for the Maryland-District of Columbia area in employing agents, undercover men, and others in the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act, the retaining of men in the department charged with crimes, and the protecting of them by having the United States attorney for the District of Maryland to defend them.

In that way the Members of the House will be able to go into this question thoroughly and settle the question whether my informer of the alleged practice had grounds to infer that these methods were employed in Maryland; and, I trust, regardless of the position of the Anti-Saloon League, that the members of the Rules Committee as a matter of justice and decency should inquire into the methods in order to satisfy the people of Maryland that the methods so employed in administering the law and the protecting of agents is fair, which they doubt at this time; and the unanimous opinion of the people of Maryland is that they do not get a fair and impartial trial in the United States court when the district attorney defends the prohibition agents for any alleged crimes committed by them, because they feel that the district attorney works hand in hand with the superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, who is in favor of anyone who has to do with the enforcement of the Volstead Act, regardless of what law they may violate in so doing.

Mr. SCHAFER. The district attorney was defending this man as a friend of the court.

Mr. PALMISANO. All agents in Maryland are defended as a friend of the court. He was not so fortunate as my friend from Texas in defending officers who violate the law. Now I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Now that I have been recognized, I want to make this comment: I never defend a guilty man. I defend the innocent. The Anti-Saloon League, castigated by the gentleman, has a membership of several million good people in the 48 States of the Union. Does the gentleman think it is fair to condemn them all because there may have been some improper men in the Anti-Saloon League?

Mr. PALMISANO. No; but referring to what the gentleman has stated about defending the innocent, I do not think there is a lawyer in the House who ever defended a man charged with crime that he considered a criminal, and that is true of the gentleman from Texas. [Laughter.] So far as the membership of the Anti-Saloon League is concerned, I respect any man who honestly differs with me on the Volstead law.

Mr. BLANTON. In other words, take the great Baptist Church, which may have in it some members who are improper people, men not of good character. Would the gentleman condemn the entire Baptist Church because it has a few members in it who are improper?

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, in reply I do not condemn any class of people as a whole, but I say this: If the Anti-Saloon League of this country is fair it will dispense with this man, and I think it will, because the people of Maryland have exposed him. The Anti-Saloon League will have to dispense with his services or perhaps take him into some other territory where he is not known.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman recognize me further?

Mr. PALMISANO. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Take, for instance, the great Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Andrew Mellon. He belongs to the same church that I belong to, the Presbyterian Church. It has been charged that he has had knowledge all along of the $160,000 of oil money that was donated to the Republican campaign. Would the gentleman condemn the entire Presbyterian Church because it has Mr. Andrew Mellon as a member?

Mr. PALMISANO. I never referred to the gentleman simply because he belongs to the same church as the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, nor did I have him in mind because of certain remarks made at the other end of the Capitol, that "birds of a feather flock together." I say this, however: I have received information that in the Treasury Department they have a man who was convicted in Virginia of having stills in the State of Virginia, the record of which has been destroyed.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman would not, therefore, condemn the entire Treasury Department?

Mr. PALMISANO. No.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. It has been charged that the Secretary of the Treasury had knowledge of the $160,000, but it has not been proved. Perhaps the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] may appear as the friend of the court when the Secretary of the Treasury is placed on trial. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I would not appear as a friend of the court if the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] happened to be the court.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CARLEY, for an indefinite period, on account of illness.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

INDEBTEDNESS OF HELLENIC REPUBLIC

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] the status of what is called the debt settlement with Greece.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say that it is now before the Finance Committee. The other day it was reported to the Senate and was on the calendar, but on yesterday, at the request of one of the members of that committee, I had it rereferred to the commiftee.

FLOOD RELIEF, VERMONT AND NEW HAMPSHIRE (S. DOC. NO. 78)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of Agriculture amounting to $3,307,300 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to assist the States of Vermont and New Hampshire in reconstructing roads and bridges damaged by the flood of 1927, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY,
Statehouse, Trenton, N. J.

Concurrent resolution introduced and adopted by the senate and house of assembly on March 5, 1928, memorializing and requesting the Congress of the United States to authorize the Postmaster General to issue a special series of postage stamps commemorative of the Battle of Monmouth in the Revolutionary War

Whereas there will be celebrated in June, 1928, the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Monmouth in the Revolutionary War; and

Whereas said conflict was one of the great turning points in the memorable struggle for independence; and

Whereas it is fitting and proper that due recognition be given to said anniversary by the issuing of stamps commemorative thereof: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of assembly (the senate concurring)—

1. That the Congress of the United States is memorialized and requested to authorize and direct the Postmaster General of the United States to issue a special series of postage stamps to commemorate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Monmouth in the Revolutionary War: Be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the Presiding Officers of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled and to each Senator and Representative of this State in the Congress of the United States.

2. This concurrent resolution shall take effect immediately.

We hereby certify that the above resolution is a true and official copy of the concurrent resolution adopted by the senate and house of assembly on March 5, 1928.

THOMAS L. HANSON,
Speaker of the House of Assembly.

Attest:

FRED'K A. BRODESSER,
Clerk of the House of Assembly.

Mr. EDGE. I present resolutions unanimously adopted by the Bergen County (N. J.) Women's Republican Club, relative to pending legislation, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution unanimously passed, March, 1928, Bergen County Women's Republican Club

Whereas the members of the Bergen County Women's Republican Club, assembled at their regular meeting, March, 1928, discussed the naval appropriations bill, approved by the President of the United States and by the Secretary of the Navy; and

Whereas an organized movement to prevent the passage of this measure has petitioned our Representatives against this program of peacetime security which would bring our common defense up to the 5–5–3 ratio agreed upon at the Washington conference; and

Whereas we believe it to be the sworn duty of our Representatives to uphold our constitutional defense and protection "against invasion from without and from insurrection from within, from piracy upon the high seas, to protect our coasts and ports, to protect our nationals at home and abroad, and to insure the right of asylum to our nationals in other countries"; and

Whereas it is the belief of the members of the Bergen County Women's Republican Club that the program of pacifists to make us defenseless under the guise of some idealistic leadership is the direct mandate of enemies to constitutional government, and that a conspiracy to make us a defenseless Nation against stronger nations, thereby weakening our independent position gained after 150 years of successful government and under the plan laid down by Washington, Jefferson, Madison, and Jay; and

Whereas the members of the Bergen County Women's Republican Club wish to indorse and support the obviously essential program approved by the administration for our peace needs as well as for war insurance: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this organization send to the President of the United States and to the Secretary of the Navy, as well as to Senators WALTER E. EDGE, EDWARD I. EDWARDS, and Congressman RANDOLPH PERKINS, our earnest supplication that they assure our security by supporting the naval appropriation bill; and be it further

Resolved, That at this time we voice our earnest approval and appreciation of positions assumed by our Representatives in the past for our welfare and general protection in other measures; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be spread in full upon the minutes of this organization and copies sent to the press.

Mr. WARREN presented telegrams in the nature of memorials from the secretary of the Buffalo Commercial Club; the mayor of Sheridan; A. K. Craig, of Sheridan; and the Sheridan Commercial Club, all in the State of Wyoming, and the secretary of the Livingston (Mont.) Chamber of Commerce, remonstrating against the passage of legislation authorizing expenditure of Government funds in the construction of a proposed road from Red Lodge to Cooke City, Mont., which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. KENDRICK. I present various telegrams in the nature of memorials from commercial organizations and individuals in the State of Wyoming, remonstrating against the passage of legislation authorizing the expenditure of Government funds in the construction of a proposed road from Red Lodge to Cooke City, Mont., which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegrams will be referred to that committee.

Mr. KENDRICK. I also present a telegram from the secretary of the Federal Labor Union of Thermopolis, Wyo., indorsing the Box immigration bill, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THERMOPOLIS, WYO., March 28, 1928.

HON. JOHN B. KENDRICK,
Senator, Washington, D. C.

SIR: The Federal Labor Union of Thermopolis respectfully calls your attention to the danger confronting organized labor of the West through the influx of Mexican laborers, and appeals to you to use your best efforts in promoting votes for the Box-Harris Mexican immigration quota bill so the same will be reported favorably.

Very respectfully yours,

FRANK LITTON, Secretary.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Augusta, Kans., praying for the maintenance of the national-origins quota system for the regulation of immigration, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. BLAINE presented a resolution adopted by Commune No. 8 of the Polish National Alliance, at Milwaukee, Wis., calling upon Congress to use every means within its power to put an immediate end to the alleged deplorable condition existing in the strike area of the Pennsylvania coal fields, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. COPELAND presented petitions of sundry citizens of Brooklyn and Rochester, in the State of New York, praying for the passage of legislation granting increased pensions to Civil War veterans and their widows, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a resolution of the Sioux Democratic Club, of the Borough of Queens, N. Y., favoring the passage of legislation for the extension of the channel in Jamaica Bay from Barren Island to its headwaters on a line to the city of Jamaica, N. Y., which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BRUCE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., praying for the passage of legislation to curb alleged unfair and destructive trade practices of chain stores, stating that by selling highly advertised items below cost they create an impression of cheapness and prices which undersell their neighbors, etc., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 1387) for the relief of J. W. Anderson, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 639) thereon.

H. J. Res. 230. Joint resolution to provide for the membership of the United States in the American International Institute for the Protection of Childhood.

NAVAL OIL RESERVES

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, in the course of the running debate Monday, March 19, upon the subjects of oil leases, campaign contributions, and political corruption, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] made the observation:

That it will be the most remarkable thing if, when the present investigation shall be concluded, it shall not be disclosed that the hand of the Democratic Party was dealt with quite as freely as was the hand of the Republican Party through these oil funds.

And that—

In so far as those who were involved and who put up the money to influence the campaign and to buy the privileges and the favors which were accorded to the oil interests following the election of 1920, are concerned, they would in all probability have been just as successful had the Democratic Party won that election as they were with the Republican Party.

That assumption is an altogether fair one. In fact, in view of the record which has already been made up it can hardly be classified as an assumption. For the record shows that the wholesale influencing of Federal officials, including Cabinet officers and their important assistants, by private oil interests was in full bloom under the Wilson administration and that the exhaustion of the Nation's and the Navy's supply of oil was already well under way, due to Democratic acts of both legislation and administration. The record shows, contrary to the views of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that the "conspiracy" to get control of the oil reserves of the country was not formed in Chicago during the Republican convention of 1920, but was formed in the city of Washington during the Democratic administration of President Wilson and it was participated in by high officials of that administration and aided and abetted by still other Democrats of high standing.

I propose now to review some of the salient facts as taken from the official records to substantiate these and still further assertions which I may make in the course of my remarks. Inasmuch as some of the Democratic Members have declaimed about insinuations unsupported by facts, and still others have apparently drawn heavily on their imagination, I must ask that I be not interrupted while I relate a somewhat connected and consecutive story.

To begin: The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] said in an effort to refute the statements of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] that—for eight years they—the private oil interests—tried to get these oil lands from the Wilson administration, but they were refused and kicked out of the Capitol. * * * For eight years efforts were made to misappropriate and use the Government's oil lands while the Democratic administration was in power. Secretary Daniels had those oil lands placed into a naval reserve in order to protect them.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] sought to lend authority to his allegation by stating that he was in a position to know because, as chairman of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, he had investigated the subject. In view of that, I am inclined to think the Senator's memory was faulty or he was overestimating the credulity of the American people. He surely knows that Secretary Daniels made practically the same assertion when the oil scandals first broke—when he (Secretary Daniels) and others of the former Wilson Cabinet were running for cover and issuing futile denials of their complicity in leasing the oil reserves of the United States. At that time Secretary Daniels issued a statement, as follows:

From March, 1913, to March, 1921, in the courts and in Congress, I fought every proposition to permit the oil in the naval reserves to be taken out by anybody. The legislation I asked for was asked exclusively to conserve oil in the ground.

It is indeed fortunate, in the interest of truth and the accurate information of the American people at this time when Democratic Party leaders are once more trying to escape their record in connection with oil leases, that the records are still available showing exactly what Mr. Daniels did do while he was Secretary of the Navy.

The leasing act governing all public oil reserves became a law February 25, 1920. I will have more to say regarding its origin a little later. The ink on the President's approval of it had scarcely dried before Secretary Daniels decided he did not like its provisions, and he accordingly wrote a letter on March 5 to the chairman of the Senate and House Committees on Naval Affairs in which he suggested that the leasing act be amended so as to give him absolute power, to be used in his discretion over all naval oil reserves existing then or which should be created later. Did he want this power in order to protect the oil, as the Senator from Virginia stated the other day was the case? Did he want this power in order to conserve the oil in the ground, as Secretary Daniels himself alleged? He did not. He needed no legislative enactment to empower him to leave the oil in the ground, where it had been for centuries. What Secretary Daniels wanted was power to enable him, in his discretion, to take the oil out of the ground. Nor was that all. Let me read the amendment which he proposed, a verbatim quotation from his letter:

> That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to take possession of all properties within the naval petroleum reserves as are or may become vested in the United States; to conserve, develop, use, and operate the same in his discretion, directly or by contract, lease, or otherwise, and to use, store, exchange, refine, sell, or otherwise dispose of the oil and gas products thereof, and those from all royalty oil for the benefit of the United States.

In other words, he expressly asked for an amendment to the leasing act which would enable him in his discretion and at his pleasure to take the naval reserve oil out of the ground and do with it what he pleased. He asked for power not only to take it out of the ground, but power to sell it, to store it, to exchange it. Why, he even asked for power in this amendment to go into the refining business, and, as if this were not sufficient, he then asked for a blanket authorization to "otherwise dispose of the oil and gas products" in the naval reserves in whatever way it suited him. It was a proposal to place in the hands of one man, the Secretary of the Navy, all of the naval oil reserves of the United States, to be used by him in his discretion without let or hindrance, without any check by any governmental authority. No one can claim that this proposition was in the interest of conserving the oil that was in the ground.

The Senator from Virginia supported this amendment. The Senator from Montana supported it. The amendment became a law through the process of being attached as a rider to the naval appropriation bill, June 4, 1920. The only thing Secretary Daniels asked that he was not given was permission to go into the oil-refining business. The power to handle the oil reserves in his discretion, either by contract or lease or otherwise, was conferred upon him. As for his claim that he "fought every proposition to permit oil in the naval reserves to be taken out by anybody," the best that can be said for it is that it is not in accordance with the facts, as shown by the records of the Navy Department. No sooner was the amendment which he wrote, and which the Democratic Senators in this body supported, operative, than he began to permit the Navy's oil to be taken out of the reserves by private oil corporations. He did this without advertising for or permitting competitive bids. He did it merely by holding private conferences with representatives of private corporations, just as the thoroughly discredited Secretary Fall did later, and giving them leases in the oil reserves. The records of the Navy Department indisputably back up this assertion in case after case.

The amendment under which he did this became effective June 4, 1920, just nine months before the Democratic administration went out of power. The records of the Navy Department show that on July 1, 1920, less than a month after he had this power, after private conferences with representatives of the Boston-Pacific Oil Co., they were given leases to drill five new wells in naval oil reserve No. 2. Other leases to private companies in this reserve followed quickly so that by the end of nine months instead of using this power for the purpose of keeping oil in the ground, and instead of "having fought every proposition to permit oil in the naval reserves to be taken out by anybody," the records in the Navy Department show Secretary Daniels had authorized the drilling of 55 wells under leases to private oil interests, and, as a last act just before the expiration of the Wilson administration, Secretary Daniels, on February 16, 1921, leased 250 acres of oil land on naval reserve No. 2 to the Consolidated Mutual Oil Co., without any restriction as to the number of wells it could drill. I shall append a detailed list of these leases, showing the date of their execution, private oil companies to whom they were given, the location of the leases, the number of wells permitted, and the royalty paid to the Navy Department.

The action of Secretary Daniels has been defended upon the ground that it was necessary in order to protect the interests of the Government and the Navy; that the oil in the naval reserve territory was being drained by wells of private corporations located just outside the reserves, and, therefore, it was essential that wells be drilled at once within the naval reserves and the oil thus recovered be stored or exchanged, or otherwise disposed of for the best interests of the Government and the protection of the Navy. If that were true, then the action of Secretary Daniels in leasing 55 wells on naval reserve No. 2 during the last nine months of his administration to private oil interests would be defensible. If it were defensible, why did he not admit it and issue his defense instead of assuming the rôle of injured honor and righteous indignation and proclaiming that he "had fought every proposition to permit the oil in the naval reserves to be taken out by anybody" and that he stood for the policy "exclusively to conserve oil in the ground"? And why do Democratic Senators at this late date still rise and solemnly declare that Secretary Daniels did not permit private oil interests to operate in the naval reserves?

So far as the official record shows, Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior in the Democratic administration, was the originator of the proposal to lease naval reserve oil lands to private oil interests, to be exploited by them. The record shows that on August 1, 1917, Secretary Lane communicated with other members of the Cabinet, namely, Secretary of the Navy Daniels, Secretary of War Baker, Secretary of Labor Wilson, Secretary of Commerce Redfield, and Secretary of Agriculture Houston, to the effect that naval reserve No. 2 was being drained by private oil wells located just outside its borders, and that as an offset territory within the reserve ought to be leased at once to private corporations. This communication was in the form of a formal letter which exists in the files of all these departments.

The Senator from Montana, however, is authority for the statement that the campaign to permit private oil interests to invade and exploit public oil reserves began earlier. He is authority for the statement that it began as soon as the Democratic Party came into power in 1913, and that the campaign was headed by Secretary of the Interior Lane and Democratic leaders in both branches of Congress, including the Senator himself.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEIWER in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, ordinarily I should be glad to yield, and I will yield to the Senator at the conclusion of my remarks. In almost two years and a half I have never refused to yield to any Senator, and have very seldom, if ever, spoken from manuscript. However, because I do not desire to disturb the continuity of my remarks, I would rather not yield at this time, but will gladly yield for any questions as soon as I conclude.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I did not desire to ask the Senator a question at all. I rose to challenge the particularly erroneous statement just now made by the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I will, in just a moment, demonstrate the accuracy of the statement, I think, to the Senator's satisfaction. Then I hope I may not be interrupted further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana declines to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, this admission the Senator made on the floor of the Senate September 3, 1919, when the leasing act, now a law, was being debated.

The late Senator La Follette made the charge that the leasing act, of which the Senator from Montana was the leading advocate, was a measure in the interest of the Standard Oil and other private oil corporations. On September 3, 1919 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 58, pt. 5, p. 4733), the late Senator La Follette said:

> Mr. President, we are about to turn over by this leasing bill large areas of oil land to be taken up and operated. I do not know just how largely Standard Oil Co. will be benefited by the passage of this bill, but I do know from such examination as we have been able to make that the Standard Oil Co. will get large areas of these very oil lands which are to be disposed of under this leasing bill.

A little further on in his remarks (see p. 4735) the late Senator La Follette said:
